Now we are going to have some other items in this bill on the same footing. It is not a question of expediency, but a question of giving to the Committee on Appropriations jurisdiction to report out appropriations when it is convinced that the appropriation of money is absolutely necessary. The gentleman from Kansas admits, under his view of the case, that on the last day of July the Committee on Appropriations could bring in this very item, but could not bring it in on the 30th day of June. Is it possible that we are in that condition; is it possible that our rules have no more vitality or elasticity than that? When the item is in order, if it can not be sustained as necessary, strike it out. I want to say to you that every man on the other side of the House will vote to sustain the decision of the Chair, because by sustaining the decision of the Chair and that old archaic rule they will prevent the Secretary of Com-merce from doing what he thinks he ought to do and what all over the country they are demanding he shall do.
Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes,

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Can not the Committee on Appropriations bring in an appropriation for a deficiency on the

Mr. GOOD. We have brought in a deficiency now in order that the Secretary of Commerce can function on July 1, and we want him to function not as many of his predecessors have functioned by creating deficiencies in violation of law, but by doing the necessary things at once.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. GOOD. Let us go at it in a businesslike way. Let us give to the departments the money that they need in order that they may function in a healthy way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Would it be in order to move to lay the appeal on the table in Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that that motion is not in order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I venture to take issue with the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Why is it not in order in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAFRMAN. It has been construed that the motion to adjourn or the motion to lay on the table is not in order in Committee of the Whole. In Hinds' Precedents, section 4719, the Chairman ruled that the motion to lay on the table is not in order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That was on a bill, was it not? The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it was an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. On a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. A Member from Massachusetts moved to lay the appeal on the table. The appeal was taken from the decision of the Chair. Mr. Fowler, of Massachusetts, moved to lay the appeal on the table, and the Chairman held that the motion was not in order in Committee of the Whole. That ruling was followed by the Chairman of the committee as late thereafter as 1902, and has been followed, the Chair thinks, several times since that time. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair sustaining the point of order stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the committee voted to sustain the decision of the Chair.

So the decision of the Chair stood as the judgment of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to pay to the Dallas Morning News, Dallas, Tex., $44.28; the Fort Worth Star-Telegram, Fort Worth, Tex., $34; and the Gazette Publishing Co., Little Rock, Ark., $18.40; in all, $96.88, from the appropriation "Cooperative construction, etc., of roads and trails, national forest fund," representing costs of advertisements inserted in the respective publications calling for bids on road machinery to be used in the construction of the Ozark Forest Road in Pope and Newton Counties, Ark., the provisions of section 3828 of the Revised Statutes notwithstanding.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Chalmers: Page 40, after line 9, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to pay to Ray Moon, of Toledo, Ohio, $64.40 from any funds on hand under the provision of section 9 of the Post Office appropriation act, approved February 9, 1919, for services in road building, said amount to be deducted from the next allotment to North Carolina."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the committee would accept the amendment, and that there would be no point of order made against it. If I am compelled in defense of the amendment to open up this subject it will disclose governmental inefficiency and procrastination, the involvment red tape such as I never dreamed existed in a Government like ours. Chronologically, this case is interesting. Some time in early May, 1919, Ray Moon, of Toledo, Ohio, was employed by a representative of the United States Government to work on the road between Camp Bragg and Fayetteville in North Caro-Between May 14 and June 24 Ray Moon put in 35 honest hard days' work toiling in the hot sun at the rate of $1.84 a day. This, of course, was in addition to his regular pay as a soldier.

Between June 24 and early September he tried his best to get his money for the services rendered. He then called the matter to the attention of his Congressman, the Hon. Isaac R. The records show that Congressman Sherwood wrote to Maj. A. J. Maxwell, zone finance officer, under date of September 20, 1919. It is presumed that Gen. Sherwood stayed honestly by this proposition until he went out of office March 4, 1921.

The records show that the Electric Power & Maintenance Co., of 1101 Monroe Street, Toledo, Ohio, by E. H. Wallhausen, president, got into the case December 17, 1919, in a letter to Thomas H. McDonald, chief of the Bureau of Public Roads, Department of Agriculture; the Electric Power & Maintenance Co. has stayed in the case up to the present date.

I was requested to enter the field of combat in an attempt to get this money for Ray Moon by a letter from the Electric Power & Maintenance Co., dated April 22, 1921. reached me just one month ago to-day. Since that time I have personally visited some 10 or 12 departments, bureaus, chief clerks, auditors, treasurers, including most of the activities of Government. About the only bit of information that I got at these departments and bureaus was the fact that Ray Moon had a file number there. I find that his file number in the Bureau of Public Roads is M-4, his file number in the War Department, Office of Colonel of Infantry and Assistant Director of Finance, is 611-FS-4 Cl. Yes; he has a file number in all of these bureaus, and in one case I found that they had re-turned to him a 2-cent stamp that he inclosed in a letter for reply. That is as close as he has come, up to date, in getting any return for his labor for good roads in North Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Was he working entirely for the Government, or was it on the 50-50 plan between the Government and the State of North Carolina?

Mr. CHALMERS. I think he was working for the Government. Mr. BLANTON. What kind of a Government agent gave him that employment? Mr. CHALMERS. Perhaps an Army officer or some man working under the authority of the Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Public Roads. Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman can cite us to any provision of law which authorizes a Government agent to go down in that State and employ men at $1.84 a day to work on roads,

I would like to know what it is.

Mr. CHALMERS. It is section 9 of the Post Office appropriation act, approved February 9, 1919. This young man did his work, and did it honestly. He did it under a contract with an agent of this Government two years ago. He tried to get his money, but could not.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. If this were $64,000, I would make the point of order, but as it is only $64 I am not going to make it. am going to pass it up to the chairman of this committee. Mr. CHALMERS. I would be very glad to go into the correspondence and recite the history of this case.

In short, the case of Ray Moon in his attempt to collect $64.40 for services rendered would put to shame the chancery case of Jarndyce and Jarndyce, in Charles Dickens's Bleak House, although I find the two stories have the same ending. We finally found out that the funds had been exhausted. It was therefore necessary to take care of Mr. Moon's case in this deficiency bill. I hope that the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order. Let us give this boy his money. He has waited long enough.

Congress ought to set an example by brushing aside this bureau red tape and see that these boys who have offered their lives as a sacrifice on the altar of their country should be justly dealt with.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Ohio has made a sufficient explanation. If the gentleman from Iowa is going to make the point of order I think it ought to be made now.

Mr. GOOD. I do not know what the facts are. What about the allotment to that State?

Mr. CHALMERS. This money is to be taken out of the next allotment.

Mr. GOOD. I understand that all of the money has been allotted to that State, all of the appropriation.

Mr. CHALMERS. I was told by the clerk this morning that there was plenty of money.

Mr. GOOD. I understood from the gentleman the other day that all of the money that could be allotted to this State had already been allotted.

Mr. CHALMERS. No; the head of the Bureau of Public Roads in the Department of Agriculture under the post office act informed me this morning that he had money enough. I have been up against this proposition now for a month.

Mr. GOOD. I will ask that this item be passed over temporarily until I find out whether there is any money, because it should not be paid out of the allotments of other States.

Mr. CHALMERS. There is money.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the amendment be deferred for the present. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

General expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry: To enable the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, to perform the duties imposed upon it by the Agricultural appropriation act approved May 31, 1920, for the payment of indemnities on account of cattle to be slaughtered during the remainder of the current fiscal year, in connection with the eradication of tuberculosis from animals, $405,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman in reference to this appropriation. I see that you are appropriating $405,000 to be paid for animals slaughtered on account of tuberculosis.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. This is page 40, I will say to the chairman, if I may have his attention. Would the gentleman object to inserting, after the word "tuberculosis," the words "and charbon." A great many c.ttl of Texas, Arkansas, and Louisiana were affected on account of this disease so fatal to cattle, known as charbon, and I would like to ask the gentleman if he would object-

Mr. GOOD. I shall have to make a point of order. I know nothing about it. This matter-

Mr. HUDSPETH. I am trying to tell the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. The department says within four or five years they will stamp out tuberculosis in the Southern States. Mr. HUDSPETH. I will state to the gentleman that there is nothing more fatal to cattle than charbon. Tuberculosis is a lingering disease.

Mr. GOOD. The Department of Agriculture has not asked for this.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will.

Mr. LAYTON. How do you spell the word?

Mr. HUDSPETH. C-h-a-r-b-o-n.

Mr. LAYTON. It is a disease of what organ of the steer or

Mr. HUDSPETH. It gets to the throat and chokes them to death.

Mr. LAYTON. What is the nature of it?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I am not a veterinarian. The nature of it is that it appears to be fatal to animals, and they have to kill them in order to eradicate the disease in some instances. starts in the neck, the glands swell up, I will state to my friend.

Mr. LAYTON. Is it localized tuberculosis of the glands of the throat'

Mr. HUDSPETH. I do not know anything about that, but I know it swells the throat and chokes the animal to death.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. And is it not also communicable to human beings?

Mr. HUDSPETH. It is; it is sometimes fatal when communicated to human beings, and it occurs to me if you are appropriating $405,000, and the gentleman has the great cattle industry in mind, that he certainly ought not to object to an amendment providing that in addition this can be applied to the eradication of charbon, which is ten times more fatal to cattle than tuberculosis

Mr. HAUGEN. I desire to ask the gentleman if he has a detailed statement of the money expended for the payment of indemnities?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. The chief of the division came before us. They had, as the gentleman knows, $1,480.000 for all purposes, for operating expenses, including personnel. They had $800,000 for personnel service and an indemnity fund of $680,440. Now, they claim that the farmers of the States have taken up this question a great deal more actively than they estimated they would take it up. As the gentleman knows, the National Gov-ernment pays one-third. Now, the National Government has not been able to pay this one-third, and they had to stop all slaughtering on April 1. They have a great accumulation of herds which they expect to slaughter, and the farmers want the slaughtering done. The States have the appropriations to pay their third, and they assert that they will need this full amount for indemnity fund for the rest of the year.

Mr. HAUGEN. According to the table printed in the hearing, $505,000 have been expended and the amount appropriated was $680,440.

Mr. GOOD. The rest was all obligated and had not been paid.

Mr. HAUGEN. The money has been expended for the purpose for which appropriated?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; absolutely. Mr. HAUGEN. I confess I am at a loss why this deficit. The chief of the bureau stated, December 10, 1919, that only $52,000 had been used for the payment of indemnity for the first four months of the preceding year. According to that state-ment, it would require less than $200,000 for payment of in-demnities for the current year. The committee allowed $680,-440, or about $400,000 in excess of the amount which might reasonably be anticipated. It allowed $1,480,440 the total amount estimated by the bureau and the Secretary for operation and the payment of indemnity.

Mr. GOOD. The matter came up on a ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury. The comptroller ruled that if contracts were made for slaughtering one year and the money was not all expended the appropriation continued to pay for that slaughtering. Now, they will not use all of this this year, but they will use it all in the discharge of the contracts for slaughtering, because as soon as Secretary Wallace discovered that there was going to be a deficit he stopped the slaughtering. That was very seriously objected to in various parts of the country. They thought it was a backward step in getting control of tuberculosis in cattle and that we ought to go ahead. They have this appropriation for the personnel and they are going ahead and making their contracts, and they want to commence slaughtering. The Secretary was right in stopping the killing when the appropriation was exhausted.

Mr. HAUGEN. Well, nobody wants to cripple the department in carrying out that splendid work. But I was interested in knowing something about what amount had been expended for that purpose and the amount required to successfully and effectually carry on the work.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph. It is legislation. It is not a deficiency.

It is unauthorized by law on this deficiency bill.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the point of order comes too late.

Mr. BLANTON. I reserved it when it was read.

Mr. GOOD. The whole item is authorized by law. The CHAIRMAN. The appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921 carried this authority:

That in carrying out the purposes of this appropriation if, in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture, it shall be necessary to destroy fuberculous animals and to compensate owners for loss thereof, he may, in his discretion, and in accordance with such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, expend, in the city of Washington or elsewhere, out of the moneys of this appropriation such sums as he shall determine to be necessary, within the limitations above provided, for the reimbursement of owners of animals so destroyed, in cooperation with such States, Territories, counties, or municipalities as shall by law or by suitable action in keeping with its authority in the matter, and by rules and regulations adopted and enforced in pursuance thereof, provide inspection of tuberculous animals and for compensation to owners of animals so destroyed.

This law is enthesity for such highlities as are to be com-

This law is authority for such liabilities as are to be compensated for in this appropriation. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. In line 17, after the word "tuberculosis," add the words "and

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Hudspeth: Page 40, line 17, after the ord "tuberculosis" add the words "and charbon."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Olympic National Forest: The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $100,000 for emergency expenditures incident to the disposal of wind-thrown and intermingled or adjoining timber on the Olympic National Forest, and for emergency measures necessary to protect from fire the timber on the Olympic National Forest, made in the deficiency appropriation act approved March 1, 1921, is reappropriated and made available for the same purposes during the fiscal year 1922.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman reserve that for a moment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; if the gentleman desires to make a statement. Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I shall not argue the point of order, neither am I inclined to make a special appeal. I would like, however, to remind the members of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union that the Olympic National Forest is the property of the people of the United States. It is in the State of Washington, but does not belong to the State. It lies partly in my district and partly in the district of my colleague, Representative Hadley. It is the most valuable of all the forest reserves which the Government has determined to run for the people. It was not long ago the victim of a great tornado, a great storm with wind at 175 miles an hour or more, which knocked down so much of the big timber in a tract 90 miles long and 20 or 30 miles wide that the damage done in the great San Francisco fire pales into incignificance. Our Appropriations Committee Our Appropriations Committee appropriated insignificance. $100,000 to enable the forest reserve supervisors and agents to open trails and reset telephone lines, and make fire protection in this Government tract, the greatest forest reserve we have, and half of that sum has been spent. Now, if the point of order is made, the Government may not be able to go ahead with the work, while the State is doing its part. Ah, this is a sample of the Government doing business. Go ahead and make the point of order. Let the fire come, let the tract burn; it is the Government's. Heed not the emergency, but stick for the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is pending. Does the gentleman from Alabama make the point of order now?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of order. I concede that the item is subject to it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is not that the orderly way at this time? Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I suppose the State can carry on the whole work for seven or eight weeks. But it is the Government's business. Work is on the way now. Travel in that part of the Olympic Peninsula has had to be suspended. The danger from fire is ever present, and once your fire comes the amount of timber that will be lost to this Government will be tremendous.

Mr. GOOD. There is 6,000.000 or 7,000,000 feet of merchantable timber lying on the ground.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How much money is left available?

Mr. GOOD. About one-half of the appropriation has been expended-about $50,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In view of the statements made by the chairman of the committee and by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Johnson] I withdraw the reservation.

The Clerk proceeded to read.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HAUGEN offers the following amendment: Page 41, after line

The CHAIRMAN (interrupting the reading). The Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa that we have not yet reached the point in the bill to which he offers his amendment. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Blanton moves to amend by striking out the paragraph on page 40, line 23, down to and including line 6, on page 41.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the Clerk had commenced to read the next paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. I was on my feet. Of course, I could not

Mr. Chairman, I do this merely to call the attention of the House to something of interest I have just noticed, that one of the biggest among the many big Republicans of our Nation is now seated in the gallery, and, although I am a loyal partisan Democrat, I believe in showing due consideration and respect to the great Republicans of our country. I refer to Mr. Charles M. Fickert, of San Francisco, Calif., whom I see seated in the gallery, and whom I consider one of the big men in this country. He has stood the crucial test under fire, and has demonstrated that he is honest, true, and loyal to duty; that he is brave to the extent of being fearless; and that no influence can corrupt him.

He is the able district attorney who in San Francisco, Calif., conducted the prosecution and trial of Thomas Mooney, and convicted him of throwing deadly bombs into a preparedness-day parade, causing the deaths of innocent men, women, and little children. He therefore brought about the lawful conviction of one of the greatest anarchists in the country. Our visitor in the gallery conducted that prosecution. He is the man who, through all of the attempts to thwart justice and to thwart the law, was able to put the bomb thrower into the penitentiary and to keep him there, when there was united and combined effort all over the land by certain classes to thwart the law and get him out. And when we have such men in the gallery of the House of Representatives, I believe that it is worth while to stop a moment and call attention to it. I take my hat off to the gentleman. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask to withdraw the pro forma amendment. The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to pay all necessary expenses, including labor and material, involved in consolidating the addressing, duplicating, and mailing work of the Department of Agriculture in the District of Columbia, $5,000, to remain available during the fiscal year 1922.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky reserves a point of order, or does he make it?

Mr. BARKLEY. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] desires to discuss it, I will reserve it.

Mr. GOOD. That has been passed. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] has been recognized.

Mr. BARKLEY. No. There has been no discussion on this paragraph, embracing the language from line 11 to line 15, inclusive. That is what I make the point of order against.

Mr. GOOD. That has been passed. Mr. BARKLEY. We have not read anything else.

Mr. GOOD. What is the gentleman's point?

Mr. BARKLEY. The point of order is that this money is made available for the year 1922, and therefore it is not a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. Well, I see the relay is working, and the gentleman's time has come, and he will perform his service. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I think this appropriation will work an economy in the Department of Agriculture. It is the plan to consolidate the addressing, duplicating, and multiplying work of the department. They are now scattered in several different buildings, on several differ-The idea of the department is to bring this work upon one floor and to consolidate it, thus saving labor and saving space and other expenses. Of course, in order to do that it will be necessary to have some money to remove their machinery and also probably to prepare the space for this machinery and the work. That was the only object that the committee had in recommending this item.

Mr. BARKLEY. In reply to that suggestion, I will say that if that part of it which carries it over to the next fiscal year is cut out, I shall not object.

Mr. GOOD. It is a continuous work, and probably in line with what the Secretary desires to do, so that we will be enabled to discharge a lot of employees. But if it is the desire of the gentleman from Kentucky to keep them here

Mr. BARKLEY. It seems the Committee on Appropriations ought to have foreseen the necessity of this work for 1922 and not bring it in as a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. It is carried just as the Secretary asked it. have a statement here which shows that they have 98 duplicating machines, and 25 per cent of them were idle 50 per cent of the time. By consolidating them he can reduce the expense. Perhaps they could not be removed in one month, but the gentleman well knows that if the work is done hurriedly it will invite waste and extravagance.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the gentleman say this can all be done with a $5,000 appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. That is all they asked for.

Mr. BARKLEY. Can the gentleman give me any information as to how much will go over into the next fiscal year?

Mr. GOOD. No; I could not answer that. Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky withdraws the point of order. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

"The Secretary of Agriculture, in cooperation with the State agricultural colleges and experiment stations and the United States. Council of the World's Poultry Congress and other organizations, is hereby authorized on behalf of the United States to make suitable exhibits at the World's Poultry Congress of the International Association of Poultry Instructors and Investigators, to be held at The Hague, Holland, September 6 to 13, 1921, and there is hereby appropriated for this purpose, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000, to be expended by the Secretary of Agriculture, under such regulations as he shall prescribe, for the preparation, assembling, transportation, maintenance, and demonstration of the exhibits, which exhibits upon their return to the United States shall be the property of the United States and remain under the control of the Department of Agriculture. And the Secretary of Agriculture is also authorized to select and, out of the appropriation authorized hereunder, defray the expenses of three delegates who are officials or employees of the Department of Agriculture to attend the said congress, and of investigating and reporting, in connection with said congress, on poultry conditions and methods of poultry production and marketing."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, this authorizes an expenditure of $15,000. It authorizes the Department of Agriculture to make exhibits at the World's Poultry Congress, to be held at The Hague, Holland.

Mr. WINGO. Is that a world chicken congress? I could not hear the reading of it all. Do you propose to send along with it an exhibit of American poultry?

Mr. HAUGEN. Exhibits will go along with it. Exhibits are being prepared by the department. About 19 other countries have accepted the invitation.

Mr. WINGO. As I understand it, this proposal provides for at least three men to go along to act as chambermaids to these hens and roosters, and the United States Government is to own these hens and roosters. [Laughter.] When you come back, what is proposed to be done with them?

Mr. HAUGEN. They are to be the property of the United States

Mr. WINGO. That is what I understood. I wanted the gentleman to explain it.

Mr. HAUGEN. It simply appropriates $15,000 for the department to make an exhibit.

Mr. WINGO. Does not the gentleman think it ridiculous for the Government of the United States to send a poultry exhibit abroad in the belief that you are going to get some benefit therefrom for the American poultry producers? I am an expert on poultry. I am an ex-president of the Arkansas State Poultry Association, and I know that we have the best poultry on earth. Then why should we go over there to teach those people how to raise roosters and hens? Of course, it will be a nice trip for the three men to go as chambermaids to the little brown hen and the big red rooster, but how do you justify it? [Laughter.]

Mr. HAUGEN. It will be of great benefit to the poultry raisers of this country.

Mr. WINGO. How will it benefit the poultry raisers of this country, or the poultry raisers of Iowa, for instance, to send this bunch of hens and roosters in charge of these three men to this poultry congress?

Mr. HAUGEN. It will be educational.

Mr. WINGO. Will it educate the three men or will it educate the hens and roosters? [Laughter.]

Mr. HAUGEN. The men.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman can show any benefit accruing to the American farmer I will not make the point of order. But instead of helping the American farmer by sending his hens and roosters abroad, you had better devise some plan by which we can help the American farmer market his surplus products.

Mr. HAUGEN. We are very much interested in the poultry industry. It is worth a billion and a quarter dollars a year. It is as much entitled to encouragement as the growing of wheat or corn or any other industry in the United States. Nineteen other countries have accepted the invitation, and it seems to me it is not out of place for us to authorize the small appropriation of $15,000 to defray the expenses of the three men who shall accompany the exhibit abroad. Mr. WINGO. When hundreds of the farmers of five States were rendered destitute when everything they had was destroyed by a cyclone, the Appropriations Committee, on the ground of economy, refused to appropriate $7,500 for the purpose of making it possible to furnish these destitute farmers with much-needed field seed. And yet you come along and say you are going to take twice that much money to pay the expenses of a rooster and hen joy ride abroad, and that proposition comes from the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. HAUGEN. It comes from the Committee on Agriculture with a unanimous report.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Chairman, I am not an expert on the poultry business, but I am willing to stand behind the chairman of the Agricultural Committee on this proposition.

Mr. WINGO. It needs somebody to stand behind it. Mr. LEA of California. The poultry industry is a subject that is easy to joke about, but it is a matter of great importance. A great many of the civilized nations of the world are going to take part in this poultry show. Poultry and eggs are the most universally used product in all the world.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman ought not to take all my time.

I know something about poultry. That was a hobby of mine.

I was president of a State poultry association, and the gentleman knows, if he knows anything about the subject, that American breeds of poultry are the finest on earth. Instead of our learning something from Europe about poultry, let them come over here and study our methods. It will benefit them. The idea of sending our poultry over there under the guise of helping the American poultry raisers is ridiculous.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WINGO. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.
Mr. LAYTON. We recently passed a cold-storage regulation bill to keep Chinese eggs out of our market.

Mr. WINGO. This is nothing more than a scheme to get up a foreign entanglement between American roosters and European hens; that is all it is. [Laughter.] It is proposed to do that at the expense of an already depleted Treasury. fore, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAUGEN. No; I suppose the item is subject to the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. I make the point of order.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman reserve it for a moment?

Mr. WINGO. I reserve it if the gentleman wishes to be heard.

Mr. REED of New York. Of course, gentlemen, it is always easy to be facetious about almost any subject that may come up. I do not hesitate to say that I introduced this bill, and that before it was introduced it was presented to the former Secretary of Agriculture. He went over the situation carefully and heartily approved of the proposition. The bill was introduced in the latter part of the Sixty-sixth Congress at the request of the National Poultry Organization, various State poultry associations, and several agricultural colleges. The poultry business in this country, under the leadership of State colleges and poultry organizations, has grown until it is a business amounting to $1,250,000,000 a year. That was true during the fiscal year 1919, as shown by the census reports.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York, Yes,
Mr. LAYTON. What is the purpose of expending this $15,000? Is it for the purpose of learning something over yonder to benefit our farmers or is it that they are going to learn something from us?

Mr. REED of New York. Let me tell you something. first place, while we are raising poultry very successfully we are not studying world market conditions. We are not studying cooperation and shipping facilities and standardization of containers and those things, with the result that to-day our eggs are being shipped into Canada not only by the carload but by the trainload; and because the Canadians have passed laws to aid their poultrymen and have studied the situation, they are classifying, repacking, and shipping our eggs back into this country at a big profit. We originated the intensive study of the poultry business, and through our educators we have searched the globe to find the best breeds of poultry, and, have searched the globe to find the best breeds of poultry, and, as the gentleman from Arkansas said, we have created here the finest breeds of poultry in the world. That is the reason we have developed this business to its present magnitude. This poultry exhibition will bring together poultry educators and poultry breeders from 19 countries. They are meeting at The Hague. They are going to study this subject. They are going to study the question of standardization of containers, distribution, and the best methods of marketing, all of which is of vital interest to our poultrymen. This international organiof vital interest to our poultrymen. This international organization has expressed a desire to meet in the United States in 1924. We originated the idea of an international poultry organization, and now when it is about to hold this great congress at The Hague it seems to me it would be most unfortunate if the United States of America should decline to participate.

We have put more money into the study of poultry through our agricultural colleges than any other nation in the world, with the result that we have developed poultry husbandry until it yields a revenue to the farmers of the country amounting to $1,250,000,000. Think of it! Iowa alone has a business in poultry amounting to more than $70,000,000 a year. for many of the other States were given here on the floor and appear in the RECORD of May 21. In view of the active interest we have taken in this great industry, the success that has been achieved along this line, it would seem as though it would be a matter of good business foresight to participate in this great international educational poultry show. As I say, I have introduced this bill at the request of many agricultural colleges and poultry associations. They are asking for this appropriation and are preparing an unusual exhibit, expecting, of course, to carry off the prizes at The Hague in September. When the exhibit has served its purpose over there it is to be the property of the United States Government and is to be brought back here, where it will be available for use in this country at State colleges, experiment stations, and State fairs for educational pur-I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. WINGO. Does not the gentleman know that there are half a dozen large poultry raisers in this country who would be glad to pay the $15,000, because they will get more than that in prizes and the advertising of their prize winners over there?

Mr. REED of New York. They are contributing. It is going to be a large affair.

Mr. WINGO. There is one big poultry prize winner out West who will be glad to pay all the expenses and will take his string of chickens over there in order to win.

Mr. REED of New York. He is making his contribution. Mr. WINGO. I insist on the point of order that this is not a deficiency and not in order on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks just made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to return to page 40 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHALMEES: Page 40, after line 9, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to pay to Ray Moon, of Toledo, Ohio, $64.40, from any funds on hand, under the provisions of section 9 of the Post Office act approved February 9, 1919, for services in road building, said amount to be deducted from the allotment to North Carolina for the fiscal year 1921."

Mr. GOOD. Has the gentleman changed the amendment so as to conform with the act that was passed?

Mr. CHALMERS. I have.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. ARENTZ, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 38 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada asks unanimous consent to return to page 38 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection? Mr. GOOD. I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

STEAMBOAT-INSPECTION SERVICE.

Contingent expenses: For fees to witnesses; traveling and other expenses when on official business of the Supervising Inspector General, Deputy Supervising Inspector General, supervising inspectors, traveling inspectors, local and assistant inspectors, and clerks; instruments, furniture, stationery, janitor service, and every other thing necessary to carry into effect the provisions of title 52, Revised Statutes, $5,000, to continue available during the fiscal year 1922.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. This provides $5,000 to continue available for the next fiscal year. What is the object of making it available for next year when the regular appropriation has been made for the next fiscal year?

Mr. GOOD. It is very difficult for the Steamboat-Inspection Service to state how much will be needed, because they have been put out of many Government buildings where they have had their offices. Most of this money is for rent, and they can not tell how much they will need this year. They are confronted with the condition where they are being forced out of the Government buildings and where they have to pay rent for buildings. That condition did not obtain when we made the regular appropriation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it thought that a part of the $5,000 may be payable in the next fiscal year for rent that was incurred this year?

Mr. GOOD. No; this appropriation is in view of the fact that so many of the officers have been crowded out by Federal agents and will now have to pay rent that they did not have to pay before.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

On and after July 1, 1921, the Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed, in cooperation with the Secretary of the Treasury, to establish and collect fair and reasonable fees for services rendered by the Steamboat-Inspection Service and the Bureau of Navigation (including the enforcement of wireless communication laws) to vessels of the United States and to foreign vessels so far as subject to laws requiring such services and not already required to pay fees for such services: Provided, That such fees shall be so determined that the aggregate estimated sum to be collected therefrom in any fiscal year will not exceed the aggregate estimated expenditures in that fiscal year for rendering such services: Provided further, That the Secretary of Commerce shall report to Congress on the first day of the next regular session the schedules of fees established under the authority granted herein.

Mr. GAHN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on this paragraph, and I will give my reasons for it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order. Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for 10 minutes on this point of order and related subjects.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to address the committee for 10 minutes. Is there

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph is clearly subject to a point of order. It would create a radical change in existing law. The Steamboat-Inspection Service has been established. lished for many years and has many important functions to perform. They include the inspection of hulls and boilers, the examination of blue prints of ships that are building, the testing of the steel used in construction, and in addition to that the examination of lifeboats and life preservers, the examination to return to page 40 for the purpose of offering my amendment. and licensing of masters, pilots, and marine engineers, and the certification of seamen. The total expense aggregates about $805,000 per vear.

Now, on the merits of this question I ask what has the shipping industry done that it should be discriminated against in this way? The inspection of locomotive boilers and safety appliances on railways is made by salaried officers of the Government. Something that touches the people quite as nearly is the meat inspection, which is paid for by the Government. The cost is not imposed on meat packers.

Should not all proper and rational means be utilized to aid American shipping? This paragraph suggests for the attention of the House a very important question. I regard it as one of the most perplexing and difficult problems before this House. We have some three billion dollars invested in shipping property, enough to supply routes over a large part of the globe. Shall this be scrapped? Also, if I can judge aright, it is the very general and almost the unanimous desire of the American people to restore the merchant marine and the American flag on the ocean.

But we must not fail to realize the serious disadvantages which confront us. One of the most fundamental is due to the very sufficiency of our country in the abundant supply of the essentials of life. This is a great food-producing country. We produce cotton in enormous quantities for the manufacture We produce quantities of wool; we lead the world of clothing. in iron and steel and have great supplies of lumber and min-erals, such as coal and oil, and we are the greatest producer of copper. There is an abundance of copper. These facts are in themselves a detriment to the development of shipping, partly because ships can not be maintained profitably and efficiently where the greater share of the trade consists of exports.

There is another fact which must be taken into consideration—the greater relative weight of that we send abroad as compared with the weight of that which we bring into this country. The next disadvantage is the greater comparative opportunity for development on land, more attractive for capital and affording greater promise for labor. On the seas we must compete with all the nations, but in domestic trade and industry, by tariff restrictions, national resources, and economic policies our country has unequaled advantages.

I may mention some incidental facts which have had much to do with the decadence of American shipping. The earlier construction of steel and iron ships by Great Britain in the early fifties and the widespread destruction of ships by the Confederate cruisers during the Civil War had an important effect in transferring the oversea traffic to other countries.

I may add another important point, and that is the disposition of our people. In Norway, in England, and in other countries which are competitors there are generations of seamen, family after family seeking the life of the sea. With that constant pressing forward to better and better conditions which is characteristic of American life we do not have any class of this The son of a mate on a ship goes to the high school, or maybe to college, and studies medicine or law, and very often shines in his profession. I could name numerous other points.

What are we to do about it? There are two ways which are generally suggested. One is by the imposition of discriminating duties. That policy has been discussed for many, many years, and was in vogue in the earlier years of the Republic. I am not so sure that this will solve the problem. In the first place, it must involve us in very serious complications with foreign countries, and in the next place in many instances the countries with which we wish to increase our trade are sending products of considerable weight on which duties have not been collected.

It would presumably help our trade and promote the use of our shipping with countries against whose products we have protective duties, but not in the case of others. The other method is by some kind of a subsidy or subvention. I have stood many times on the floor of this House and several times on the floor of the Senate opposing anything in the form of a subsidy. I have really nothing to regret in taking that stand, because conditions were different at that time. I have favored at all times liberal provision for mail lines and the development of passenger lines, but it seemed to me that a was repugnant to our American ideas. I am not intending to express at this time any definite opinion upon the problem of whether we shall be compelled to pay at least the difference between the cost of the operation of foreign ships and our own, but that is a question which must be considered. Some time I may wish to say something about the La Follette seamen's law. I do not think it is quite so bad as some would have it, but it has unquestionably had serious results in increasing the cost of operation of American ships, and of producing what according to many of the masters is even worse, a diminishing of the morale and a destruction of discipline. I especially wish to impress upon the House the serious condition which we must meet. Whatever man or whatever committee, be it the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee or any other, can suggest something that will continue the position which we seemed to gain in part during the war and which will usher in a return of the era when our ships were so prominent on every sea, will be a benefactor of this people. Let us approach the question with no partisanship, with no preconceived ideas as to tariff or economic policies, but with the hope that as we are leading in many other branches of endeavor so we may also lead upon the broad oceans. I express the hope that the initiative of Congress will not fail and that the skill, the honorable position of the American sailor on the seas may neither be lost nor forgotten. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton] has just delivered a very interesting address upon the subject of American shipping. We have heard in the last few days several addresses upon that subject. During the Sixty-sixth Congress I served as a member of the select committee which was appointed to investigate the operations of the United States Shipping Board. That committee spent. much time during 18 months investigating the building of the vast Shipping Board fleet and necessarily we had to investigate a great many questions that affect the maintenance and operation of the American merchant marine. The performance of our duties led to a review of the whole shipping problem as it affects the commerce of the world.

For many, many years we have heard all of the political parties announce to the American people that they favor the establishment and maintenance of a great merchant marine. They wanted those days to return in which the American flag floated above a merchant marine that was able to compete with the other merchant services of the world. The exigencies of war made it not only desirable but absolutely necessary that the United States build a great merchant fleet. It was required to transport supplies, food, and munitions to our gallant armies in France. We now have that fleet on our hands. Many of those ships are tied up at the docks and many of them will remain idle because they have no cargo to carry in international commerce. That is a condition, however, that is not solely applicable to America. Other maritime nations to a more or less degree are similarly affected. The United States has $3,000,000,000 invested in merchant ships. Unless they carry commerce they will be dead capital. We are at that point in the bill under consideration which has to do with the Department of Commerce and its agents in foreign countries who represent us in a commercial character, the stimulation and the building up of foreign commerce and foreign trade, and I submit to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton] at this juncture that in order to have a merchant marine that will prosper it must have cargoes to transport.

It must not only have cargoes of American goods to carry to foreign countries, but it must have cargoes to bring back on the return voyage. The Republican Party will never solve the problem of maintaining a merchant marine if it pursues the policy it pursued yesterday when it passed a tariff bill which puts it within the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury and the appraisers through the antidumping clauses in that bill absolutely to prohibit in a large measure the importation into the United States of foreign merchandise.

On April 15, 1921, the Republican emergency tariff bill passed this body and went to the Senate. Yesterday the report on the conference of the two Houses was finally adopted by the House. That bill purported to afford temporary relief to the agricultural interests by providing an emergency tariff on certain agricultural products for a period of six months. It was widely heralded by the Republicans as a panacea for the dis-aster that has befallen the cotton market, the wool market, and the vegetable-oil market. In truth, it was merely a shrewd Republican maneuver to vastly increase the protective tariff duties on manufactured articles at the expense of the farmers and ranchmen and other consumers, while masquerading as their friend. In truth, its purpose was to utilize the opportunity to tax the farmer and consumer for the benefit of the manu-

In its final form, after amendment in the Senate, it contained one chapter on temporary tariff duties and three chapters on permanent provisions raising the tariff for the benefit of the manufacturer, and one chapter practically prohibiting the importation of all dyes and chemicals, thereby giving to one concern an absolute monopoly on dyes for three months. By that time the Republicans hope to enact a permanent tariff bill in which the dye interests will be given identical privileges.

A favorite practice of Republican tariff advocates is the employment of language that will obscure the real purpose of far-iff bills. To prohibit importation of manufactured articles in plain language would bring forth a storm of public protest. The bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may prevent the importation of any article of foreign manufacture until such time as he makes an investigation in such foreign country of the "foreign home value" or the "cost of production" of such articles so that he may ascertain the amount of It is obvious that it will be almost, if not quite, impossible for the Secretary of the Treasury to successfully make such an investigation. In the meantime the imports are barred. If the investigation is ever made, the delay and annoyance to the importer will discourage and decrease imports. By this device the original purpose is indirectly accomplished.

Another contrivance by which the tariff exacts tribute is the "compensatory duty." Under the Republican doctrine, whenever a duty is placed on a raw material, a similar duty, known as a compensatory duty, is added to the normal duty which is already on the manufactured article. A duty of 45 cents per pound is levied on scoured wool. Bear in mind, however, that there are stored in warehouses in Boston 500,000,000 pounds, and that there is now in the United States a two years' supply. There is no market for wool. It can hardly be sold at any price. With no market there will be little, if any, imported. Yet a compensatory duty of 45 cents per pound is added to the already high duty on imported woolen goods.

Of course, the argument is that in theory the American manufacturer will be forced to pay 45 cents a pound more for wool and must be compensated. Do not forget that the American manufacturer will get 45 cents per pound more for his woolen goods, though they may not contain a thread of imported wool. He will add that much to his sale price though the goods are made of American wool. Though no wool whatever should be imported, yet, because theoretically a duty is levied on imported wool, each man and woman who buys an article of woolen clothing must pay to the woolen manufacturer a compensatory duty in addition to the high normal duty. The American Woolen Co. wants that additional subsidy. It can buy domestic wool for less than 45 cents, but the consumer will pay for it on the theory that it costs 45 cents in addition to the amount paid to the Woolen clothes are still high though wool is low. The manufacturer adds a profit to the cost of production, then adds the normal tariff, and then adds the compensatory tariff, and the consumer when he buys clothing pays two tariff duties when the manufacturer paid none. The American Woolen Co. dominates the woolen trade and wants a high tariff: it neither wants American raw wool to go to Europe nor European manufactured wool to come to America. It wants to buy at its own price and sell in a tariff-restricted market at its own price. The Republican Party, its willing servitor, allows it to do both.

The present tariff on manufactured cotton goods is to be raised, but the farmer who produces cotton will pay for the Europe will pay him less for his raw cotton and he will pay the American manufacturer more for his cotton clothing. Will Europe pay as much for our cotton if we prohibit her from shipping it back as manufactured goods as she would if allowed to compete in the sale of manufactured cotton goods in the United States? Can we expect England, Germany, and France to pay us the highest prices when we deny them our markets? They can not buy our products now because they have no gold. If we prevent them from shipping their goods in exchange for our products, how can we sell? How is Europe ever to pay the United States the $10,000,000,000 which she owes if the tariff is to be built so high as to shut out her goods from American markets? England, Italy, and France can only pay in gold or goods. They have not now the gold. They must be allowed to convert their goods into money with which to pay. The ailment from which the country is suffering now is the inability to sell in foreign markets—in England, Germany, France, Italy, and Austria. Our cotton and wheat and food products will go there and be paid for if we open up the channels of trade.

Mr. Chairman, I know something of the hardships that now beset the cotton farmer. I live in a cotton country. In a small way I am a cotton farmer myself. I now have on hand cotton which can not be sold for anything near the cost of production because the European markets are not open. Our hope for relief is to open them.

Mr. Chairman, if the "emergency tariff" is a good thing, why is its life limited to six months? If it will help the farming interests, why not make it permanent law? Is it so limited because before its passage the farmer has already sold his products and the six months will expire before another crop will be gathered and sold? The measure which, it is claimed, will benefit the agricultural interests will die in six months, but the tariff on manufactured goods will live forever. It will be permanent. It will be higher. The lobbyists for a tariff have flocked to Washington since March 4, 1921. The Republican Ways and Means Committee has announced that a permanent tariff bill is about ready, carrying higher schedules and giving a monopoly to the dye industry.

Mr. Chairman, I am a Democrat. I believe in the Democratic doctrine of a tariff for revenue and not for protection. I believe that articles imported into the United States, whether manufactured or raw materials, whether the product of the factory or the farm or the ranch, should generally bear a duty to raise revenue to support the Government. Such a duty affords incidental protection to the producer of raw materials as well as to the finished product. I do not believe in a large free list. There is a vast difference, however, between a tariff for revenue which permits imports and brings money into the Treasury of the people and a protective tariff, whose rates are so high that imports are kept out, and which permits the favored manufacturers to collect from the people unearned tariff taxes and place them in their own pockets instead of in the Treasury. Under the false pretense of helping the farmers I shall not consent that the tariff interests shall rob them.

The Republican cry is constantly for higher and yet higher tariff duties on manufactured articles; for the farmers, merchants, ranchmen, and other consumers to pay more and more premium on the necessaries of life to enrich the favored classes; to build higher and yet higher the trade wall to cut off commerce with other countries.

Mr. Chairman, such a policy will not support a merchant marine. Ships must have freight to carry if they remain on the

It was developed in the hearings before our committee, as well as in other hearings, that a merchant marine, in order to succeed, must have a cargo going both ways. As to that shipping men all agree and it is obvious even to a layman.

In the item in this bill next following is embodied the proposal of Mr. Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, to establish two new bureaus for the purpose of investigating foreign commerce and the opportunities for American trade. I am glad to know that Mr. Hoover is not in accord with some of his party on the question of the tariff. I am glad to know that there is one member of the Cabinet who does not believe in "the closed door" for America, and is unwilling to say that we will not trade with foreign countries when it comes to imports; who realizes that it may prove futile to appropriate millions of dollars to private secretaries and stenographers to try to talk the rest of the world into buying our goods if at the same time we shut out their goods.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes.
Mr. DEMPSEY. Does not the gentleman believe that the foreign merchant marine will continue in normal times to do its business with the United States regardless of a tariff, and does not the gentleman believe that the whole question is whether we can so run our merchant marine as to compete?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I would like to have five minutes additional.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, well— Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] had more time.

Mr. GOOD. But the gentleman from Ohio did not talk politics. I shall not object to five minutes more.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I stated I was glad to know there was one member of the present Cabinet that did not agree to this hard-boiled system of protection which the Congress is to establish permanently within a very short time. Mr. Hoover delivered an address in New York on May 18, according to the press dispatches. The Associated Press reports him as follows:

He made a strong plea for maintenance by all nations of the open door in world commerce, asserting that there are many growths and tendencies to-day that make for the direct or indirect closing of the open door.

It is quite a long article. I shall not read it all. Mr. Hoover believes that if America is to trade with the rest of the world she must accept foreign goods in return for the products of the American farm and factory, and so believing he has come to the Congress and the committee has placed in this bill two new bureaus in his department, though the Republicans have gone before the country saying they want to reduce Government activities and were anxious to contract the bureaus of the Government; but gentlemen on that side of the House had not the courage to oppose Mr. Hoover in his program, because they fear him. The emergency tariff bill, which the gentleman from Ohio and others on this floor supported, pretends to protect American farm products. But we are told this temporary tariff within a short time is to be made permanent. Is it to be made permanent in all of its pledges and promises to the farmer and stock raiser? Oh, no. Is vegetable oil, which was held out in such tempting fashion to the farmer to induce his support of this bill, to go into the permanent law? Oh, no. When you come to enact a permanent tariff law, you withdraw from the temptation of the farmer and stock raiser the articles which you promised to protect.

Mr. MADDEN. How does the gentleman know that? Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I know it because I know it is part of the Republican system to make a pretense of protecting the American laborer and the American farmer through a tariff devised only for the benefit of the American manufacturer. Therefore, I know that that is part of the Republican scheme, and the gentleman will not successfully deny it.

Mr. MADDEN. I know the gentleman is mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the Record.

Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Chair is informed that a decision was not made on the point of order which was made to the paragraph under consideration. The Chair sustains the point of order made to the paragraph, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION.

Wireless communication laws: To enable the Secretary of Commerce to enforce the acts of Congress "to require apparatus and operators for radio communication on certain ocean steamers" and "to regulate radio communication," etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1922, $20,000; and the amount which may be expended during such fiscal year for salaries of employees in the District of Columbia is increased from $8,400 to $10,900.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order until I can make a statement?

Mr. WINGO. I reserve the point of order. Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of Commerce came before the committee and stated that because of inadequate appropriations he was not able to comply with the international agreements relative to inspection of wireless. About 2,000 out of the 3,000 stations are not inspected at all. It has created a very embarrassing situation with foreign countries because we have not been able to comply with the law. Now, it would be foolish to make provision for one month, and unless provision is made to carry these inspectors over until next year it will be idle to make provision for their employment for a single month. The committee did not like to report out the appropriation, but it is a matter that dealt so closely with international relations and agreements and as all other countries are inspecting our steamers and wireless apparatus under the agreement and we were not able to do that it creates a rather humiliating situation, and I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. How long has that condition obtained? Mr. GOOD. I could not state, but this matter was brought very forcibly before us by Mr. Hoover, who stated that it was extremely embarrassing that we were not doing our share.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized for five minutes. Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the suggestion the gentleman has made, and I also appreciate the embarrassment that might arise as suggested by him.

It occurs to me that this is an illustration of the folly of any party in charge of appropriations for a great Government like this, thinking about how they can make a little record of economy, when they know, if they are diligent in studying the public needs, they will have to come along in a deficiency bill later on and make the expenditures. I think it is the part of wisdom for Congress to make up its mind how much it is going to appropriate for a fiscal year, and be very loath to pass any deficiency unless it is absolutely an emergency that has to be met. But this bill is shot through with items like this. The condition the gentleman speaks of could with diligence have been ascertained when the regular bill was written. Why was it not attended to? Just because of the petty desire to whittle down and whittle down, while knowing you would have to meet the necessities by a deficiency bill. But although those responsible pursued that policy, I will refrain from pressing the point of order on this item, because I appreciate the embarrassments that may come to our Nation in dealing with other nations. And I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas withdraws the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Medals of merit to the merchant marine: To enable the Secretary of Commerce, under the direction of the President, to carry out the provisions of the act approved December 22, 1920, to provide for the award of a medal of merit to the personnel of the merchant marine of the United States of America, including the purchase of medals, bars, and ribbons, traveling and subsistence expenses of officers and employees, printing and binding, and all necessary incidental expenses not included in the foregoing, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, fiscal year 1922, $13,000.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas reserves a point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I prefer that the point of order be made now if it is to be made at all.

Mr. WINGO. All there is in this is that it is simply providing the sum of $13,000 for the year 1922, and for the current fiscal year.

Mr. GOOD. And it is only for those who served from April 6, 1917, to November 11, 1918, as provided by law.

Mr. WINGO. Was that covered in the appropriation for the current fiscal year?

Mr. GOOD. The act was not passed until December, 1920.

Mr. WINGO. I believe in providing proper medals for men who are entitled to them, but I do not want to cheapen medals by having everybody in the whole country possess them. seems to me that when we walk down the streets of Washington half the people are wearing all the badges that they have gotten in State conventions or elsewhere all of their lives. I make a point of order it is not a deficiency and that it ought not to be in this bill.

Mr. GOOD. It is a deficiency. The act was approved December 22, 1920, and provides:

A medal of merit of appropriate design with a bar and ribbon, together with a rosette or other device to be worn in lieu thereof, to any person who in the merchant marine of the United States between the 6th day of April, 1917, and the 11th of November, 1918, distinguished himself by extraordinary heroism or distinguished service at sea in the line of duty.

Congress passed that act and, I am told, passed it unanimously.

Mr. WINGO. You could not authorize this to be done in the next fiscal year, 1922. It is not covering a deficiency in an appropriation. It may be a deficiency in the discharge of duty in that heretofore these men were not given medals, but it is not a deficiency in appropriation. It is no deficiency. It is a dereliction of duty.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. WINGO. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that if this appropriation were made we could make it immediately available and it would continue available until expended?

Mr. WINGO. No. I do not think it could be, although the gentleman has some decisions he can rely on for that. Here is the philosophy: If you permit anyone to come in for 1922, it means you will never have an end of making appropriations for that fiscal year. A deficiency bill ought to be held down to actual deficiencies, and you ought to meet these substantive propositions in your regular bill.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield with pleasure.
Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman know of any rule of the House under which a deficiency bill has any peculiar characteristics that do not attach to the ordinary appropriation bill?

Mr. WINGO. All the rules of the House.

I do not know of a single rule of the House Mr. WALSH. that makes it distinctive. It is one of the general appropriation bills of the House.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, the gentleman contends a deficiency bill is not a deficiency bill. I say that this is not only contrary to the rules of the House but contrary to the rules of common sense and sound reasoning.

The CHAIRMAN. The section in question proposes to make an appropriation to fulfill the obligations of an act of Congress approved on December 22, 1920. It is not intended that the amount appropriated shall be expended within the current fiscal year or prior fiscal years for which deficiencies are being provided in this bill. The language of that portion of the section is that it shall be expended in the District of Columbia and elsewhere during the fiscal year 1922. Therefore it comes within the rulings of the Chair heretofore made, and the Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF FISHERIES.

Commissioner's office: For the salary of an industrial assistant, fiscal year 1922, $3,500.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph. It is not a deficiency, but legislation on an appropriation bill, unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it contended that this is a deficiency

Mr. GOOD. Yes. It provides for this assistant for next year, and he is not provided for.

Mr. BLANTON. It shows on its face that it is for the year 1999

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Expenses of advisory committee: For the expenses of an advisory committee of not to exceed six members from the Atlantic coast, six members from the Pacific coast, and eight members from the inland waters, Great Lakes, and Alaskan sections of the United States, to be designated from time to time by the Secretary of Commerce, to consist of men prominently identified with the various branches of the fishery industry, qualified in aquatic research, and experienced in fish culture, who shall visit the Bureau of Fisheries at such times as the Secretary of Commerce may deem necessary and report to the Secretary of Commerce on the condition and needs of the service, the members to serve without compensation, but to be paid the actual expenses incurred in attending the meetings, fiscal year 1922, $5,000.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the item. It is not a deficiency. It is not authorized by law. It creates a new and useless and unnecessary job at a time when we ought to be economizing and abolishing jobs.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman will notice that there is no job

There is no job provided for by a single salary.

Mr. WINGO. No; but there are lots of men for whom you will provide the means of making junket trips by giving them a place on a public commission, and they will fight for it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Hoover contends that there is such a great decline in the supply of food fishes in America that there ought to be more cooperation between the public generally and the canners, and he thought that by this method of cooperation he could bring about some beneficial change in the situation. But of course if the gentleman wants to make the point of order he can do so.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WINGO. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsyl-

Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to say to the gentleman that nobody appeared before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries to ask for anything of this kind.

Nobody as I understand has made the com-WINGO. plaint, but I think we ought to be protected against these schemes of furnishing accommodations to people who want to I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk will read.

Steamer Gannet: Master, $1,400; engineer, $1,200; fireman, $840; two seamen at $780 each; in all, fiscal year 1922, $5,000.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that. That is not a deficiency. It may be authorized by law. It may be one of those cases where they have failed to provide for the salaries of public officials during the year, but it provides for the year 1922.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the point of order is well taken or not, but I am sure it ought not to be made. This item has been carried in the sundry civil bill for many years. It passed the House in the last sundry civil bill a short time ago, but owing to some circumstances of which I am not fully advised it was dropped out in another body.

This appropriation is to provide for the maintenance of the crew of a vessel connected with a fish hatchery on the Maine That vessel has been in use for 17 years, if not longer. I am told that if this appropriation is not made that boat will have to go out of commission, and this means the practical closing down of important operations in connection with that fish hatchery. That hatchery has been in operation on the Maine coast since 1901. I think it was established then. It is doing a tremendously valuable work in connection with the propagation of food fishes. I think the last figures I saw indicated that in 1919 the output of the station was something like 1,289,000,000 fish. This boat goes up and down the coast and gathers up the berried lobsters and brings them into this hatchery, and there they are stripped and hatched and the young lobsters planted up and down the coast. It does the same thing in connection with other kinds of fish. It is doing a wonderful work in the conservation of this important food for the people of this country. I think it would be a calamity if this item were dropped out of this bill. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will not make the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman says it was not the fault of the House that it went out, but that it was the fault of the Senate?

Mr. GOOD. I think I will take a little of the blame myself for the dropping out of this matter. The Commissioner of Fisheries went before the Senate committee after we had carried these two provisions in the sundry civil bill, this and the following one, and he said to them, "We must have $25,000," as I recall, "for scientific investigation as to fisheries." They told him that if he could point out to them where they could save a similar amount they might give him the appropriation. He said he could drop the forces on these two boats and on one other boat. Then they were dropped, but the appropriation was not given. In the sessions of the conference on the sundry civil bill these matters escaped the eye of the House conferees. I overlooked the items. But I am satisfied that you might as well close those fish hatcheries unless you provide a boat to take out the fry and plant them. The Senate has left us with a large appropriation to conduct these two fish-hatchery stations, but there are no boats to take the small fish out and plant them, so that all the work and expenditure is gone and the money is wasted without these boats. I think there is no question about that, and I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] will bear me out in that statement.

Mr. WINGO. I understand they were carried in the other bill, and it was not through the fault of the House that this comes in here as a deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. I think it was somewhat the fault of the con-

In view of the situation that the gentleman describes, Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Maintenance of vessels: For maintenance of vessels and launches, including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921, $4,422.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, reserving a point of order, just what does this refer to? Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] advise me?

Mr. GOOD. That is the maintenance of vessels.

Mr. WINGO. And launches. Did you not take care of that before? Is that a deficiency in that item for this year?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; for this year.

Mr. WINGO. For this year? Mr. GOOD. Yes. That vessel was used in the seal islands service in Alaska, and was caught in a heavy gale, which necessitated repairs costing $4,422. It was an item over which nobody could exercise any control.

Mr. WINGO. It is a bona fide deficiency item?
Mr. GOOD. There is no question about that. It is just the amount necessary for repairs to this vessel that was caught in the storm.

Mr. WINGO. Under the gentleman's explanation I do not think it is subject to a point of order, and being a bong fide deficiency I will not make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation of the point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alaska, general service: For protecting the seal fisheries of Alaska, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921, $9,853.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that item. What is the occasion for this deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. The occasion was the unusually heavy expense in connection with the work in Alaska. First, there was an investigation, at the request of the committee of the House, by the Bureau of Fisheries, which investigation cost $2,500. That investigation was ordered after the appropriation was made, and had to be paid for out of this appropriation. Then it was found that it would be absolutely necessary to have some dental work done for the natives of Alaska, who are wards of the Govern-ment. We provide doctors for them and provide teachers for them. The cost of that dental work is $900. Then a physician was sent to Alaska, who could not live there, and another one was sent there to take his place. The total cost involved in that operation was something like $1,700 of additional expense during the year. The balance is made up of emergency purchases of supplies for the natives of the Pribilof Islands. whole amount is a deficiency and is required for this year.

Mr. WINGO. Why do we furnish supplies for the Mr. GOOD. They work on the Pribilof Islands and take care of the seal herds.

Mr. WINGO. And we just support them? Mr. GOOD. We pay them, also.

Mr. WINGO. Was this dental work to fill the teeth of the seals or of the natives? [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. It was for work on the natives.

Mr. WINGO. I withdraw the reservation of the point of

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE.

Salaries: For additional employees during the fiscal year 1922 at annual rates of compensation as follows: Two assistant directors, at $4,000 each; expert on commercial laws in foreign countries, $4,000; in all, $12,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I make a point of order against the paragraph that it is new legislation and not a deficiency; that it provides for the year 1922 without any authority of law.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman withhold the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I withhold it.

Mr. GOOD. Unquestionably it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I intend to make it later. Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the items that Secretary Hoover laid before the committee. He desires to form a staff here in Washington to direct all the activities for the development of our foreign commerce, and he proposes to throw himself into that great service.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. In making the point of order I am trying to carry out the splendid policy of our President, enunciated yesterday at New York, that he is going to cut down the expenditures of the Government, and that he is going to cut off a lot of employees from the pay roll instead of adding new ones, [Laughter.] and I am backing him up in that laudable program.

Mr. GOOD. I understand all that; but Mr. Hoover explained that our foreign trade has fallen off in the last six months over 50 per cent. He realizes that conditions in the world to-day are such that it is going to take the very best men he can get as counselors and advisers to help advise American industry and American commerce how our trade with foreign countries can be extended and enlarged. The amount involved here is a trifle. It is not a button off our coats. I was unwilling, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] was unwilling, and every member of the Committee on Appropriations was unwilling to take the responsibility for denying this appropriation. In this hour of paralysis of American trade and American commerce all loyal Americans should lift themselves above themselves and give this department what it asks, and thus help develop foreign trade. If that side of the House wants to take the responsibility for attempting to stifle such trade, it is their privilege to do so. I am sure nobody on this side will assume any such tremendous responsibility.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman finds himself out of accord with his President-

Mr. GOOD. Not at all. I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order on the item.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Not more than $25,000 of the appropriation for "Promoting commerce, Department of Commerce, fiscal year 1922," may be used for personal services in Washington, D. C.

Mr. BLANTON. I make a point of order on the item, or I will reserve it, as I see the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE] is on his feet.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I want to reserve the point of order for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations how many additional Government positions are created in this bill as it is reported by the committee?

I can not tell the gentleman. Mr. GOOD.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Does not the gentleman have any idea about that?

Mr. GOOD. No; I have not made any estimate as to that, and it would be a very wild guess for me to say, for instance, how the Secretary of Commerce would expend the fund-just exactly the number of clerks he would employ, salaries he would pay—but not very many clerks will be added by all the items in this bill. The Department of Commerce proposes to spend $250,000 that was appropriated for the Census Bureau in helping industry, because Mr. Hoover thinks that would be more profitable. That would perhaps bring about a reduction in the number of clerks, because the expenditures would be for a personnel of a much more expensive kind than is found in the begin cutting down these Government jobs, as he stated in a speech yesterday in New York?

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman, to be real frank, that there are very few that would be added to this bill by all these appropriations. While the bill carries $100,000,000, as the gentleman knows, when he stops to think he will realize that $60,000,000 is for the Shipping Board and that is not for Government clerks, not a dollar of it. There is $15,000,000 for vocational training for the soldiers. That may involve a small number, but not many. There is $9,000,000 for hospitals for the soldiers. That might involve a few. The big items in the bill will not increase the personnel in Washington; but I doubt if there would be as many clerks in the Department of Commerce next year if you adopt this provision as there will if you do not adopt it, if the Secretary carries out the law and expends all of the appropriation for the Bureau of the Census.

Mr. KINCHELOE. In the whole campaign last year the great shibboleth of the Republican Party was, "We are going to cut down the expenses of the Government, retrench in every way so that the people will get relieved from the great burden of taxation." I am frank to say that the Republicans won on that. Then every time a session of Congress closes the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell], the Republican leader, gets up to show how much they had saved by cutting down the "estimates." And I remember how he rolled this claim under his tongue as a sweet morsel when he said that they had saved in the Sixty-sixth Congress over a billion four hundred millions by reducing the estimates from the several departments of the Government, and made the statement that the appropriations of the Government of every kind and character would not exceed for 1921, $4,473,000,000; and now it turns out in a statement from Mr. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, that the expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year 1921 are going to be over $5,600,000,000. That is more money than was ever appropriated in any Congress during any peace times in the history of this Republic. That means an average in taxes of $56 a head for every man, woman, and child in the United States. I can say to the gentleman from Wyoming that the taxpayers do not care a tinker's damn about the reduction in estimates; what they want to know is how much you are going to reduce the expenditures of the Government, as you promised before the November election. [Applause.]

Now, in the face of that here comes this bill. We all know the reason the gentleman from Iowa could not tell exactly the number of new clerks, and I am not disposed to criticize him on that, but here is the creation of new offices, new jobs, undertaking to make expenditures for 1922 under the guise of a deficiency, when you can not create a deficiency at all until you expend all that is available under the regular appropriation bills that have been already passed for that purpose.

I hope the President meant what he said yesterday, that he is going to cut down the Government expenditures and decrease the officeholders in this Republic, but I must confess that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee is making a very poor start, if he has his way, in creating all the offices that are created in this bill. I think it is the duty of every Member of the House, regardless of which side he sits upon, to make points of order when it comes to creating new offices, especially when you appropriate for the year 1922, when there can not be a deficiency.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I never saw Mr. Hoover until he came into the appropriations room to be heard. I will confess that I had a prejudice against him although he had been for many years an official in the last administration. He captured me; that prejudice disappeared. Now, if the gentleman from Kentucky will turn to the hearings and read them they will prove very interesting. Here is the Department of Commerce, Mr. Hoover is in the Cabinet at the head of that department. I voted for this provision as well as for many other provisions that he recommended in making up the bill. I confess, as I said before, that I had a prejudice against him, but I did not know him and that has disappeared, and I believe he is going to make a great Cabinet officer.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky insist upon his point of order?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order

on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KINCHELOE. There is no doubt that this bill provides for a great many additional clerks. The gentleman, then, does not have any idea when and where the President is going to exceed two commercial attachés employed under said appropriation may be recalled from their foreign posts and assigned for duty in the De-partment of Commerce without loss of salary.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. GOOD. In reference to this item it was explained that in some cases they did not need but one clerk and in other cases they did not need any clerk at all. At other important points they needed more than one clerk. To get a clerk that can speak our own language and is familiar with conditions here and who can also speak the language of the country where assigned was almost impossible—that is, to get the right man for a clerk who would assist the attaché for $2,000 a year. This permits the department to pay as high as $2,500 and permits it to employ a clerk or clerks in cases where he needs more than one.

Mr. BLANTON. The new Secretary seems to have captured the distinguished gentleman from Iowa as well as the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GOOD. I will say that the entire committee without regard to politics was impressed with the statement of Secretary Hoover that we are up against a serious situation in America to-day, and that we ought to do the big thing and the manly thing.

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad to see that the Secretary is growing in popularity.

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, until the gentleman hears from the President I think the item ought to go out, and I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Export industries: For the establishment of industrial divisions in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Department of Commerce, whose duties shall be to investigate in the United States and abroad, including Latin America and the Far East, and to report on domestic as well as foreign problems relating to the production, distribution, and marketing in so far as they relate to the Important export industries of the United States, including the employment of experts, special agents, and personal services in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere; transportation of persons; traveling and subsistence expenses; purchase of furniture and mechanical equipment, reference books, periodicals, trade journals, postage stamps, including special-delivery stamps, stationery and office supplies, and all other necessary and incidental expenses not included in the foregoing, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce, fiscal year 1922, $250,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the paragraph. During the last Congress, when the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was under consideration, an effort was made by the Department of Com-merce, indorsed by practically all the commercial organizations of the United States, to get an appropriation of $250,000 for the purpose of appointing commercial attachés and send representatives of the United States Government into foreign coun-If I recall correctly, the gentleman from Iowa not only refused to admit the item into the bill but actually fought it.

The gentleman is mistaken. That item was carried in the legislative bill, and I was not on the floor during the consideration of that bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not desire to do the gentleman any injustice, and I accept the gentleman's statement. But the effort was made to include the appropriation of $250,000 in the last Congress in the legislative bill, and it was defeated.

Mr. GOOD. In company with the gentleman from Tennessee, was on the subcommittee on the legislative bill when we brought in for the first time a provision creating a department of commercial attachés, and, while I fear there is some overlapping between that and the State Department, I am satisfied that the commercial attachés have performed a very great

I have never said a word with regard to the work of the commercial attaches, except that I have felt that there was some overlapping between their work and the work of the commercial agents of the Department of State, and that that ought to be ironed out. I am told now that they have practically eliminated all friction between these overlapping activ-I sincerely hope so, and I hope that this point of order will not be made. This is the big item in the whole thing, and I sincerely hope the gentleman will not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. BARKLEY. The point I make is this: When we had under consideration the regular appropriation bill covering this department an effort was made to include an appropriation of $250,000 for this purpose. The Congress refused to put it in the bill. Now, within two months after a change of on the part of our friends on the other side?

administration, gentlemen seek to get it in by an appropriation in a deficiency bill.

Mr. GOOD. The item is carried for $171,000 for commercial attachés for next year.

Mr. BARKLEY. But not for $250,000.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. BARKLEY. It is generally contended that the amount carried in the last bill was not sufficient, and it was argued here on the floor for an hour or two. I yield.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman is mistaken with reference to the time the argument was had. It was not with reference to the last legislative appropriation bill, but it was the bill of a year ago this last December.

I will state to the gentleman that the refusal of the committee to provide a larger appropriation at that time was because of the friction constantly going on between the commercial attachés and the Consular Service, and we hoped that by attracting the attention of the various departments and of the House to that thing there would be an ironing out of the difficulty and a better condition would follow. I understand that that has been done, and I am so informed by Mr. Carr, of the State Department, and by Mr. Hoover.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not recall when this item was under consideration before that there was any argument about the friction between the two departments. The opposition was on the ground that it was unnecessary.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Oh, if the gentleman will read the RECORD he will see that all of the argument in favor of the opposition was because of the overlapping friction between these gentlemen with reference to who was entitled to the amount for this purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not remember that argument. I know an effort was made to get this increase in the Department of Commerce, which happened to be under a Democratic adminis-The department asked for it, and the comtration at the time. mercial organizations of the country were insisting upon it, but it was refused. Now that a new administration has come in and a new Secretary of Commerce has asked for this, and there is a prospect for new Republican appointees, I can see where other gentlemen have also been recently captivated by the new Secretary of Commerce, who is a very captivating man. You now demand the $250,000 as necessary to extend our commerce. I appreciate the hunger with which my friends on the other side look upon this item, and it gives me great pain to have to make the point of order, but it is very strange how earnest you are about it now that a Republican administration is in power, when you refused it while a Democratic administration was in power.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve the point of order for a moment?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will reserve it for two minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will not make the point of order upon this provision. Frankly, I do not believe that we have proceeded any further toward ironing out the difficulties and the duplication that has existed between the two departments than we had two years ago. The Secretary of Commerce states that he believes that they will be straightened out, and I feel sure they will be, but there have been no definite steps taken toward coordinating the services rendered by the State and Commerce Departments up to this time. I will say to the gentleman that there was a very strong reason two years ago why this appropriation should have been increased and an even greater reason at this time. I must confess that I am somewhat in sympathy with the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] with reference to the failure to make this appropriation two years ago, but, gentlemen, I do not think that this is a question upon which we should play politics. The business of the country and the interests of the country demand the promotion and extension of our commerce, domestic and foreign. I believe we ought to give every possible aid to the administration in developing our commerce in the interest of the whole country. I have always stood for liberal appropriations for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, because it has great possibilities, and I want to say that I believe the present Secretary of Commerce, if given the opportunity, will greatly promote and extend our commerce and render a great service.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman mean to say by that argument that failure to appropriate two years ago was politics

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman can draw his own conclusions. I was simply led to make that remark by the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], because I recall a number of instances on this floor when I have earnestly endeavored to get greater appropriations for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, but without success. I have always been in favor of giving every necessary appropriation to this important work, and I am in favor now of giving the Secretary of Commerce every dollar that he thinks he can reasonably use for the promotion and extension of our domestic and foreign commerce, because if there ever was a time when it was needed, it is needed now. We have just come out of a great war and we are now facing a commercial war. England and France and other countries are expending more money than our country along this line for the extension of their commerce. We have the resources and certainly our Government ought to take steps to develop those resources and to develop the country.

Farm products are selling below the actual cost of production, thousands are out of employment, and business is suffering throughout the country. The opening and development of foreign markets for the products of the farm and factory will tend to greatly relieve the situation and bring prosperity to every class of our citizenship. This is what the Secretary has in mind, and for my part I would not only throw no obstacles in his way but I would afford him every encouragement and facility which Congress can give him for that purpose. There is no reason why our foreign commerce should not be extended to all quarters of the world. I hope that Congress will not put itself in the position that it may be held even partially responsible for a failure to capture the markets of the world. I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will not make the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, may we have the regular order? understand the gentleman from Texas desires some time and have no objection to his having it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I want to talk on this point. I desire to discuss the item making an appropriation for the investigation of foreign markets and commerce. I sincerely hope the gentleman from Kenutcky [Mr. Barkley] will not make the point of order. My service of several years on the Committee on Foreign Affairs has led me to the conclusion that our Government, in its foreign machinery for ascertaining information with reference to foreign trade, is not up to the high standard maintained by other commercial nations. To-day we are suffering, especially in South America and in Mexico, as well as in other portions of the globe, from foreign influences. I agree with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] that it is of the utmost importance that the Department of Commerce have sufficient appropriations at this time for building up its foreign trade machinery, because by reason of the war and its readjustments it is imperative that America act quickly to secure foreign markets for American goods and to open up European markets, now temporarily stagnant and deranged. American cotton, wheat, and manufactured goods must be marketed to bring prosperity to the producers at home.

There are difficulties in the way which have not been so acute in former years. We are going to find in South America a feeling against this country on account of our tariff laws. I have in my hand several news clippings from Argentina and other South American countries threatening a tariff against the United States because of our tariff policy, and I deem it highly important that we maintain the foreign service of the department. The Republicans claim that the American manufacturer can not compete in the United States with foreign goods, even though foreign goods must bear the freight from abroad to the United States. The same Republicans contend that American manufacturers can and must compete in foreign countries with England. Germany, and France-after adding to the American cost of production the freight to the foreign markets. It is going to be rather difficult for the Bureau of Domestic and Foreign Commerce to reconcile this contradiction-to ascertain how it is possible that products here in America can not compete with the foreign article after the foreign article has been transported from Europe to the United States, and yet how the manufacturers can pay the cost of the production of that article in America, ship it across the sea, pay the freight, and put it in a foreign country and there compete with German, English, and French goods. I think it will be a very enlightening and in-structive piece of information, and I dare say if there is one man on the Republican side who can ascertain that fact it is the present Secretary of Commerce. When he demonstrates that American goods can compete in foreign countries he will explode the Republican claim that they can not compete at home. From his close contact with world affairs he will know best how to promote American manufactures and American products in foreign countries. I hope that the gentleman from Kentucky will not make the point of order, and that we shall do everything that is reasonable in the way of developing American foreign trade. I want to see American foreign trade developed and given the fullest and freest opportunity throughout all the world. It will redound to the benefit not only of the American manufacturers but of every other interest in the United I am for tearing down the artificial barriers and for proclaiming to all the world that America, with her resources and her initiative and her industry, can compete in full and fair contest with other nations. Until we do come to that conclusion we shall never successfully maintain a large volume of foreign trade, for talk alone does not sell goods. You have got to have a product that can compete with your competitor's product, and the only way America can build up a foreign trade is to go into the markets of the world with the other nations of the world and outsell them, because we will sell the best article for the lowest price. [Applause.] Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am going to withdraw the point of order-

Mr. BLANTON, Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas does not have the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. But before the gentleman starts I desire to renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Texas has not the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not want to be kept from making the point of order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate to the fullest extent all that has been said by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] and by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Connally]. I made this point of order largely to call attention to what I called attention to in my former remarks. The people of my district have suffered to a very large extent and very seriously from a financial standpoint because of the fact that they have no foreign market for the sale of the products of that great State; and one of the reasons why I was so earnest in hoping heretofore that this item should have been included in the proper appropriation bill was in order that we might send these commercial attachés and representatives of the United States into every foreign country in the world in order to build up markets for those products which are now depreciated in value and going to waste because of the lack of a foreign market. I think am in a position to appreciate the need of just such a force as this, but it is unfortunate for the rules of the House that the Appropriations Committee is atttempting to create a reorganization of the Department of Commerce on a deficiency bill, because that is what this amounts to. Now, I think that an item of this kind ought to go in, and I think that nobody can contend that we do not need more foreign representatives to look after our commercial interests. Great Britain has sent distinguished men into South Africa so as to build up and extend British trade. France has done the same thing. Italy only a few months ago sent an ex-premier to South America in the interest of trade for the great Italian Kingdom. Surely the United States can not afford to see these activities in progress among other nations and at the same time refuse to do anything ourselves, and particularly is that true of South America, which ought to be the great field of American commerce in the future; and because I believed an item of this importance ought to have gone into the bill two years ago and a year ago, I am willing to withdraw the point of order, hoping that the gentleman from Texas will not renew the point of order, because I believe that the item itself will be of great benefit to the people of the United States from every standpoint.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas renews the point of order. The Chair is ready to rule unless the gentleman wishes to discuss the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. If the Chair will permit me, I would like to state the reason I rose a moment ago to insist on the point of order. I understand from the rules of the House that unless a point of order is made immediately upon its being withdrawn or reservation made, you would waive it through argument. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley] had withdrawn his reservation. I had to renew it before argument. I intended no discourtesy to the Chair. I was only trying to uphold the right I had under the rules of the House.

I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood to the fact that it is true, as he said, that this matter came before the House a year and a half ago, and if it is important, we have had plenty of time during the year and a half to have brought it before the House through the proper legislative committees, and I probably would have supported it, but coming in a deficiency bill at this late hour, I think it is out of place. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, because this $250,000 is a large sum of money, and should come through the proper legislative committee in a legislative way, and not as a deficiency in an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state what is the

Mr. BLANTON. That it is not a deficiency, but legislation on a deficiency appropriation bill without authority of law.
Mr. GOOD. There is plenty of authority of law for it.
Mr. BLANTON. And it covers 1922, and this is supposed to be a deficiency bill for the year 1921.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that there is authority of law for the appropriation and can not sustain the point of order on that ground. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that this is not a deficiency, and is for the ensuing year, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. Good offers the following amendment: Page 45, after line 17, insert as a new paragraph:

"To enable the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to investigate and report on domestic as well as foreign problems relating to the production, distribution, and marketing, in so far as they relate to the important export industries of the United States, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and all necessary, incidental expenses connected therewith, $250,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill, unauthorized by law, and that it is not a deficiency. There has been no estimate for such a deficiency for this fiscal year. The only estimate that has been made before the committee was for the fiscal year 1922, and the committee has no estimate for a deficiency for the present fiscal year of money already expended.

Mr. GOOD. That is not the question of the point of order. The only question is whether this is an authorized expenditure. And it is for the House to determine whether or not it wants to vote that sum of money for the present fiscal year.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not a fact that the last appropriation bill carried an appropriation for an item similar to this, and this would operate merely as an increase of the appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; but I hope before we get through with Mr. BARKLEY. That explains the gentleman's contention, does it not?

Mr. GOOD (continuing). We will have a chance to perfect an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which reads: To enable the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to investigate and report on domestic as well as foreign problems relating to the production, distribution, and marketing, in so far as they relate to the important export industries of the United States, etc., $250,000.

This item is in a deficiency appropriation bill. The Chair can not take judicial notice of the fact that it is for any other time than for the year for which deficiencies are appropriated in this bill and overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF STANDARDS.

The sum of $250,000 of the appropriation of $1,000,000 for the Bureau of the Census for the fiscal year 1922 is transferred to the Bureau of Standards and made available during that fiscal year for the following purposes and in the following amounts, respectively:

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Iowa a question. This paragraph makes available $250,000 of the appropriation of $1,000,000 for the Bureau of Census. Does the gentleman believe that it is practicable to take from the Bureau of Census $250,000 for the fiscal year?

Mr. GOOD. The Secretary of Commerce said that they would save $500,000, but he hoped that we would not take more than $250,000, as some conditions might arise where he would want

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This $1,000,000 was provided by the legislative committee, the committee of which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] was chairman, and passed only in February, was it not?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And the gentleman says that we appropriated $250,000 more than was needed by that

Mr. GOOD. He says he can get along with $750,000 for the next year, and doubts if he can expend that amount, but does not want us to take more than $250,000 away. But in-

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I am going to make the point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point of order on the paragraph. It is clearly a change of existing law, and the Chair sustains the point of The Clerk will read.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Byrnes of South Carolina: Page 46, line 10, insert: "Bureau of the Census: The sum of $250,000 of the appropriation of $1,000,000 for salaries and expenses of the Bureau of the Census for the fiscal year 1922 shall be carried to the surplus fund and be covered into the Treasury immediately upon the approval of this act."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not germane, and is legislation.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, as to its being germane, I do not think there can be any doubt, under the appropriations for the Department of Commerce. Furthermore, it reduces the salaries of the officers of the United States Government, and certainly is in order.

Mr. GOOD. This paragraph is under the Bureau of Standards. We have no paragraph covering the Bureau of the Census.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The Bureau of Standards paragraph that has been read.

Mr. GOOD. That is not in the bill. There is no place in the bill that refers to the census at all.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It refers to the Department of Commerce, and the Bureau of the Census is only a bureau of the Department of Commerce, and the Department of Commerce is in the bill, these various appropriations being carried under the head of the Department of Commerce.

The gentleman from Iowa has said that the Secretary of Commerce says he has $500,000 more appropriated for the Census than he needs, and I am seeking to cover back into the Treasury $250,000.

Mr. GOOD. I did not make the statement that broad.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars by this amendment is to be covered back into the Treasury, the $250,000 that he says he has no need for and no use for. I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order against the amendment, inasmuch as the Secretary says he has no use for it.

Mr. GOOD. Before the bill becomes a law he will be able to use it for the purpose the Secretary has in mind.

The CHAIRMAN. On what theory does the gentleman from South Carolina contend that his amendment is in order?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. We are appropriating for the Department of Commerce, and the Bureau of the Census is one of its bureaus.

The CHAIRMAN. We are appropriating for what year? Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This bill is presumably for the year 1921. But under the Holman rule I submit that if the amendment shows on its face that it reduces the salaries of officers of the United States Government, it is in order. If the Chair will consult that rule I think he will see the reason why I urge the amendment. That is one of the cases where, under the provisions of that rule, an amendment is in order, if it is shown that it reduces the salaries of the officers of the United States Government. The money referred to in the amendment was carried on the original bill for salaries and expenses of the germaneness?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I was answering the in-quiry of the Chair as to germaneness. It is the Department of Commerce that is now under consideration, and under it the Bureau of the Census. By referring to the statute the Chair will see that it is one of the bureaus of the Department of

So much on the question of germaneness. If it is germane, it reduces the salaries of officers of the United States Government by covering back $250,000 of the $1,000,000 directly appropriated in the legislative act for salaries in the Bureau of the Census.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina contend that the amendment is germane at the point where it is offered?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I submit that it is only under the Department of Commerce that it would be germane; and the Bureau of Standards paragraph, having been eliminated from the bill, it is as much in order here as it would be at the end of the next page, page 47. If that is eliminated, this is the last place where it could be offered under the Department of It would not be in order under the Navy Department or under the War Department but under the Department of Commerce it would be in order. The next paragraph on the next page shows that the next department is the Department of Labor. It is in order because it is one of the bureaus of the Department of Commerce. As has been suggested to me, the Chair should take official cognizance of the law which provides that the Bureau of the Census is a part of the Department of Commerce and not of any other department of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. This bill deals with deficiencies for the years 1921 and prior fiscal years. The amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] deals with an appropriation made for the year 1922. The Chair has ruled that items dealing with the year 1922 are not in order on this bill. The Chair has no reason to regret any decision made with respect to the former items that have gone out on points of order, and the Chair does not believe that the amendment is in order at this time on this bill, and therefore sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuation of the investigation of structural materials, such as stone, clays, cement, etc., including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $50,000.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas reserves a point of order.

Mr. GOOD. I will ask the gentleman to make his point of order. But the paragraph is not subject to a point of order.
Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. Does not that all go out in view of the fact that all from lines 10 to 15 has gone out?

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph that went out is the paragraph between lines 11 and 15, inclusive.

Mr. WINGO. Here is the idea: You can not put anything in a bill by taking something out. This one is included in the paragraph that is provided for in the language from line 11 to line 15; in other words, expenditures for the year 1922. is part of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does not the gentleman from Arkansas understand that the bill is being read by paragraphs and that each paragraph must be sustained or otherwise?

Mr. WINGO. Certainly, but the Chair in ruling on it must take the bill as a whole. Even though you have knocked out a part of it, you must find out what the paragraph is. You can not say that this a deficiency, because the division on its face, when you consider it under the subheads, provides for the fiscal year 1922.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can take judicial notice that it is not a deficiency.

Mr. WINGO. You must not only take judicial notice, but you must take ocular notice of the bill, and the bill shows that it is for 1922. Does the gentleman from Iowa claim that there is a deficiency for 1921?

Mr. GOOD. I am asking now for a deficiency for 1921.

Mr. WINGO. Is there a deficiency for 1921? Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. How much? Mr. GOOD. I do not know.

Mr. WINGO. Who said so? Mr. GOOD. I do not know. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. Is there an estimate for it? Has the gentleman brought in here an item without an estimate?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes. We have put in several items without estimates, and they have been passed. We put in the items for the two boats for the fish-hatchery station. There is no estimate for them.

Mr. WINGO. Who came before the committee and made an estimate here for the present fiscal year for a deficiency on this investigation?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman has the hearings. He can read them and find that out for himself.

WINGO. Oh, yes. I have the Library of Congress at hand that I can consult, if I want to.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman has been appointed by the leaders over there to conduct this filibuster, and he must read for himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINGO. I am not conducting a filibuster, but trying to cut out increases not authorized.

Mr. GOOD. If it is not that, I do not know what you would call it.

Mr. WINGO. That is right. You do not know what to call [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. I say, Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary under all the decisions that there shall be a deficiency in order to report a deficiency bill for any fiscal year. That has been held repeatedly.

Mr. WINGO. Yes; I knew a man once who in an hour of mental aberration held that the moon was made of green cheese; but I never thought that under the leadership of the gentleman from Iowa there would be brought in here a deficiency bill asking to give a department something in the way of a deficiency when nobody from that department had estimated any deficiency, and it is conceded it does not need the money. I thought the gentleman from Iowa was too much of an "economist" to do that. You talk economy, but do not practice it. This bill is typical. Instead of reducing the number of clerks and officeholders in Washington this bill creates new offices, expensive new boards and commissions, thousands of new clerks, and adds to the operating expenses of the Government millions of dollars. That is the way you are redeeming your pledge of economy. Such waste and extravagance is an outrage.

Mr. GOOD. The chairman has always held that that was a matter that rested with the sound discretion of the House whether or not it would grant a deficiency. If the bill carries an actual deficiency of $1,000, it is in order to increase it to $1,000,000 if necessary, if the proposed increase is germane. It rests with the sound discretion of the House.

Mr. WINGO. That is not germane to the point I want to impress on the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not care to hear further discussion of the point of order. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the Chair hear me

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I want to submit that the Chair has before him in this bill, in the preceding paragraph, the statement that this amount is for the fiscal year 1922. It is to be made available. Now, the Chair certainly—
The CHAIRMAN. That item is not in the bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. But the Chair knows that it was for the year 1922. Nothing has occurred of which the Chair has any cognizance to change it and make it for 1921. There is no assurance that there is any deficiency. There is no estimate submitted. The chairman has said so, and I know that he will so state.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman voted yesterday to put in $200,000 for the enforcement of national prohibition. there an estimate for that?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I did not vote for it, as a matter of fact.

Mr. GOOD. I thought that whole side of the House voted

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I was not in the Hall at the time, but if I had been here I would have voted for it.

Mr. GOOD. I am sure the gentleman from Arkansas voted for it.

Mr. WINGO. Certainly.

Mr. GOOD. And there was no estimate for it.

Mr. WINGO. I know there was not any estimate for it.
Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If I had been here, I would have voted for it.

Mr. WINGO. That was a plain deficiency. I voted for it on the gentleman's own statement. The gentleman by his own statement showed mathematically that $200,000 less was appropriated than had been estimated for.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not see any necessity for any display of heat concerning this matter, but it does seem to me that in the interest of orderly procedure the paragraph should be carefully looked at by the Chair.

The paragraph that has just gone out on a point of order is not complete in itself. Under the practice of the House appropriation bills are read by paragraphs. All other bills are read by sections. Now, the paragraph which has gone out on a point of order is not complete. The punctuation at the end of it is a colon. This subsequent paragraph, to which the gentleman from Arkansas has reserved a point of order, is merely one item of that which is contained in the first paragraph that has gone out on the point of order. So is the next paragraph which fol-It does seem to me that as a matter of common sense, that being merely an integral part of the subject matter that was involved in the first paragraph, it would be in order to make a point of order against it. Perhaps it ought not to be made. Perhaps it would not go out by reason of the paragraph preceding it going out on a point of order, but since the point of order has been made against the preceding paragraph and since order has been made against the preceding paragraph, and since the punctuation itself shows that it is directly connected with that, I confess I can not see— Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. Of course, it was necessary for the gentleman to make the point of order as soon as the paragraph was read, or he would have waived the point of order. Now he has made the point of order to the only provision in the whole page that is subject to a point of order. But having done that, and it having been sustained, the rest of the provision stands as it is and is presented to the sound judgment of the House to say whether they will vote for it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let me ask the gentleman, as a matter of fact, is not this paragraph now under discussion directly connected with the first paragraph?

Mr. GOOD. Not now. It was.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That was while the paragraph was in the bill.

Mr. GOOD. It was connected with it, but it was a separate paragraph and it did contain references to items that followed it. I do not see how the gentleman could do anything else than just what he did, which was to make the point of order to that paragraph. If he had not done so, he would have waived the point of order. The other provision stands, and the gentleman knows that the Chair can not tell, as it has been held a great many times, whether there is a deficiency or not. Now, yesterday we added $200,000 to this bill for the enforcement of the prohibition law. There was no estimate for that. I do not know to this day whether there is a deficiency or not. I have no way of knowing. It has not been communicated to Congress. Yet I could not have made a point of order to that amendment. Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The thought in my mind, I will say to the gentleman, is not whether there is a deficiency The thought that is in my mind is that this paragraph beginning in line 16 and extending through line 19 is directly connected with the paragraph from line 11 to line 15.

Mr. GOOD. No; it is not connected in such a way that it would have changed the rule so as to allow the gentleman to withhold his point of order until the whole of the items had been read. The gentleman would have to waive the point of order if he had waited.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, but since it is admitted that it is connected with the preceding paragraph, then I respectfully submit that the Chair can not as a common-sense proposition now hold that because this item with which it is directly connected has gone out, therefore it stands alone. That does not seem to me to be good sense. I may be mistaken

Mr. GOOD. Let me ask the gentleman this question. The wording in line 10 is the Bureau of Standards and suppose the whole item went out. Does the gentleman mean to say that I or some other member of the committee could not offer as an amendment the items contained in lines 16 to 25 as deficiencies and not be subject to a point of order?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know how that would be.

Mr. GOOD. It would not be subject to a point of order. That being the case it is perfectly plain that it is not subject to a point of order now.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If it is connected with the paragraph that has gone out on the point of order I will adopt the reasoning

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes. Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Suppose the paragraph that went out on a point of order had been stricken out as an amendment. The other two paragraphs would remain in just the same. When it goes out on a point of order is it not the same effect as if it went out on an amendment?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Not necessarily. I take it that if the first paragraph had gone out by amendment the others would have gone out also by amendment.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Not necessarily.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That would follow as a result, I think, but perhaps not necessarily.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If the three items were in order and the point of order was sustained, it could be reinserted by amendment, so the very thing could be accomplished in that way.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am predicating my theory on the statement of the gentleman from Iowa that this second paragraph is connected directly with the paragraph that went out on a point of order.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The first paragraph having been taken out and each one of the other three items are complete in themselves because they do not depend on the first item. Now, the first item has gone out. Of course, the three items make the sum total of the amount appropriated in the first item. That item having gone out, the other three items being germane, there is no reason on earth why they should be affected by the first item going out on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was made to lines 11 to 15, inclusive, carrying an appropriation of $250,000 out of an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the Bureau of Census. The Chair sustained the point of order to eliminate those lines. That leaves an item for the Chair to decide under the Bureau of Standards .

For continuation of the investigation of structural materials, such as stone, clays, cement, etc., including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $50,000.

That language is clearly in order on a deficiency appropriation bill. It is not for the Chair to strike it out. If it is not proper in the bill any member of the committee can move to strike it out. A similar question arose earlier in the day, and the Chair read a decision that was similar in principle. Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the para-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.
The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WINGO moves to strike out, on page 46, lines 16 to 19, inclu-

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, can not we agree on time for debate on this motion? I want to finish the bill to-night.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Tennessee wants 10 minutes and I want 5 minutes and the gentleman from South Carolina 5 minutes.

Mr. GOOD. I think that is too much time, because we want to finish the bill to-night. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. WINGO. That is allowing 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee. I will forego my five minutes.

Mr. GOOD. No; I want five minutes myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I object. Mr. Chairman, there is no necessity for the gentleman to think that he can drive. Here is a proposition on which time has been wasted by the gentleman from Iowa, who says that now he wants to expedite the time when he knows that the item has been retained by a strained construction as being in order. There is no deficiency. It does not provide any deficiency for the current fiscal year, but what it is proposed to do is to transfer for use during the fiscal year of 1922 $250,000 from the census appropriation, and of that sum $50,000 is to go to these gentlemen who are playing with stone and cement, when, as a matter fact, those of you who have been studying the use of structural stone and cement in building operations know that the best experiments, up-to-date experiments, are not conducted by the Bureau of Standards but by private concerns. It is admitted by the committee in bringing in this bill that they do not need it for the current fiscal year, but under the ruling of the Chair you are going to give them $50,000 when they do not ask for an additional

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Wingo) there were 62 ayes and 33 noes.

Mr. Wingo. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point that no quorum is present; the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eight Members present, a quorum. The motion is agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I made a point of order against this paragraph, and I support the motion to strike it out for this reason: This Congress was in session a few months ago. The committee of which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] is chairman went into the question of the appropriation for the Department of Commerce with great care and with an honest effort to conserve the Treasury of the United States, and at the same time give such funds to this department of the Government as it actually needed.

Sitting with him from that side of the House there was the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. Wason] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Davis]. After the most careful consideration of this estimate of the Department of Commerce for $175,000 the committee recommended that the Congress should appropriate $125,000. They came into the House, and sitting here you heard the explanation of the item in the bill. formally voted for $125,000. The matter went to the Senate, and the Senate agreed with your judgment. Now, here within two months, there comes an appeal by the department from the decision of the Congress, and what new evidence is offered? What after-discovered evidence is brought here to warrant you in reversing your judgment and to give to this department for the next fiscal year, not $125,000, but every dollar that they asked for the next fiscal year? In effect they say to you, "We demanded $175,000, and you had the temerity to reduce it to $125,000, but we come back here now, before the end of the fiscal year, before any necessity is apparent, and say that we want what we asked for, and not one cent less will be taken." Are you going to do it? They demand every dollar of the $175,000, on an appeal from the decision of the Congress.

Then the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, asks you not only to do that but to do something worse than that. He asks you to vote for $50,000 as a deficiency for the Bureau of Standards, to experiment in the investigation of stones, clays, and cement. Fifty thousand dollars for the balance of this fiscal year! This bill will not become a law until June 5 or 6 at the earliest. Therefore, he wants you to give this bureau $50,000 to spend in three weeks prior to July 1. What a position to put yourselves in! They asked for $175,000 for the next fiscal year, and you gave them $125,000, and now the gentleman from Iowa says, "Let us give them $50,000 for the three weeks prior to July 1." For what purpose? He says they want it for the next fiscal year. I challenge any man to show that the Secretary of Commerce or the Director of the Bureau of Standards has asked for a single dollar for the time that is to expire between now and July 1. He asked for it for the next fiscal year. You, pledged to economy, say, will not even wait until the next fiscal year, but we will just will not even wait until the next iscal year, but we will just throw you $50,000 now to let you work on your experiments in cement and clay prior to July 1." How can you explain such a record? Are you going to do it simply because you are asked to do it? Simply because you are asked to do an unwise thing—I had almost said a foolish thing—are you going to do it because the chairman of the committee asks you to do it? Then what becomes of the economy plea of my good friend from Indiana [Mr. Woon], who would not give them more than $125,000 for the next year, and of my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. Wason], and of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Davis]? Are you going to reverse them just because the Secretary of Commerce and the director of a bureau say to you "We asked for this $50,000 and we want -stand and deliver "?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I believe that by granting this appropriation some way will be found so that at least a goodly part of it will be available for the next fiscal year. It is apparent that items of this kind are obnoxious to some gentlemen in the House. Personally I think that the other side of the aisle is making a great mistake in its refusal to follow the gentleman who has refused to play politics with the bill. If the other side of the House had followed the courageous leadership of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns], it would have resulted more advantageously to them politically and in every other way than by this maneuvering that we are now passing through. The Secretary of Commerce explained to us that building costs are so high to-day that it is almost impossible for a poor man to acquire a home. It was explained to us that not more than 10 per cent of all of the cement manu-factured and tested by the Government passed the Government test, and the Secretary of Commerce believes that if he is permitted to standardize the clay products so that the costs can be reduced, manufacturers will be able finally to effect a reduction of 20 per cent in all of the building activities of the Government. I am willing to try him out. I believe that the American people are willing to try him out. He pointed out to us how some of these things can be accomplished, and if perchance the bill is not amended in other particulars so as not to carry this appropriation over into next year the money will not be expended, and not a dollar will be wasted. It seems to me that the least we can do when the country is demanding cheaper homes is to appropriate a small sum of money if by that appropriation we can reduce the cost of building everywhere, and that is the purpose of this provision. It is constructive. The agencies against the provision are destructive. On this side we want to help American industry and the American home builder, to help the home builders of America so that the poor man may, perchance, some time have his dream of owning a home come true. Everything we can do in that direction we propose to do. You on the other side of the aisle do not want to see these results accomplished. If by the expenditure of the small sum of $250,000 for all these items the Secretary of Commerce can do what he believes can be accomplished in reducing the cost of production by proper standardization, then I say it is well worth while, and I hope the provision will not be stricken out and that the motion may be defeated. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For technical investigations in cooperation with the industries upon fundamental problems involved in industrial development following the war, with a view to assisting in the permanent establishment of the new American industries developed during the war, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $100,000.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the point be made now. I call for the regular order.

The gentleman does not care to give the gen-Mr. WINGO. tleman from Tennessee

Mr. GOOD. I do not object to the gentleman taking five minutes; but let the point be decided. It is not subject to a point of order, but I would like to get along with the bill.

Mr. WINGO. I do not think the gentleman ought to shut out the gentleman from Tennessee. He has done it twice.
Mr. GOOD. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. WINGO. I was pursuing the customary course in reserving the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. I call for the regular order. Mr. WINGO. · Oh, well, if the gentleman wants to pursue that kind of tactics, I can make the point of order. The point of order is it is new legislation. I will repeat, in addition to what has been offered before, that on the face of the bill it shows it is for 1922, even if offered for 1921. There is no deficiency, it does not claim to meet a deficiency, there is no authority of law, it is new legislation, and proposes to conduct an investigation of things that are not authorized by law, and there is absolutely no authority of law for it.

The CHAIRMAN. There is authority of law.

Mr. WINGO. Not for this.

The CHAIRMAN. The law creating the bureau authorized these activities

Mr. WINGO. Oh, the law creating the bureau was passed before the war took place, and it could not provide for an investigation by a bureau of problems which developed following the war. It would be absurd to say that. The bureau was created before the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The decisions of the Chair enlarging the activities of the Department of Agriculture and all departments of the Government, including the Departments of Commerce and Labor, have under the general authority, which is very sweeping in the creation of this department, held in order items for activities of this kind in appropriation bills.

Mr. WINGO. Does the Chair rule that under general authority establishing a bureau that you can authorize special investigations of industrial projects that are created subsequently and growing out of subsequent acts that the Chair would take judicial note have arisen since its creation? The Chair certainly would not want to go that far.

The CHAIRMAN. This item comes within the general scope of the activities of the Bureau of Standards, which are as fol-

The functions of the bureau shall consist in the custody of the standards; the comparison of the standards used in scientific investigations, engineering, manufacturing, commerce, and educational institutions with the standards adopted or recognized by the Government; the construction, when necessary, of standards, their multiples and subdivisions; the testing and calibration of standard measuring apparatus; the solution of problems which arise in connection with standards; the determination of physical constants and the properties and materials, when such data are of great importance to scientific or manufacturing interests and are not to be obtained of sufficient accuracy elsewhere. The bureau shall exercise its functions for the Government of the United States, or for any State or municipal government within the United States, or for any scientific society, educational institution, firm, corporation, or individual within the United States engaged in manufacturing or other pursuits requiring the use of standards or standard measuring instruments.

It provides for doing that for which the Bureau of Standards was created and simply appropriates for the activity, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this paragraph provides for an appropriation of $100,000 "for technical investigations in cooperation with the industries upon fundamental problems involved in industrial development following the war." I consider the appropriation wholly unnecessary by cause we may as well realize that there can be no "industrial development following the war" until the price of iron and steel reaches normal. These materials enter so much into the construction of our industrial, economic, and domestic life in the way of railway construction, building construction, all sorts of machinery, household commodities, and so forth, that it has always been regarded that the price of steel was a very correct barometer of other prices. The price of iron and steel advanced threefold and even more during the war over prewar prices. The United States Steel Corporation, of which James A. Farrell is president, made profits to the extent of more than a billion dollars during the two years the United States was in the war. In other words, during the two years that we were all supposed to be patriotically fighting in a common cause for the preserva-tion of our country and our ideals the Steel Corporation made profits greater than its capital stock.

I call your attention to the range of wholesale prices of iron and steel and certain other important commodities, taking 100 as the basis, as of February 1, 1915-1921, as follows:

Article.	1915	1916	1917	1918	1919	1920	1921

The foregoing figures were compiled by the bankers' economic service.

The following range of wholesale prices, compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor, are illuminative in this connection:

1 February 1.

While later official figures are not available, yet it is well known that there has been a considerable decline since February 1 in prices of farm products and numerous other commodities mentioned in the two foregoing schedules, during which time the decline in prices of iron and steel have been almost

Now that the war is over, the United States Steel Corporation is unwilling to get back to a normal basis. There has been less reduction in the cost to the consumer of iron and steel than almost any other commodity. The price of these commodities is now abnormally high, and it is artificially and arbitrarily held there by the United States Steel Corporation, which is the head of this trust which controls the prices of iron and steel and retards readjustment, as I have shown, and which fact I shall, if given time, substantiate by additional proof.

The March issue of the Iron Trade Review, which is certainly not unfriendly to this Steel Trust, says:

Complete readjustment of the iron and steel market to a stabilized basis manifestly has not yet been accomplished, and conditions remain decidedly unsettled. The cleavage between the position on prices of the independent companies and that of the Steel Corporation has been rendered more pronounced by a further descent of some of the schedules of the former producers. Competitive prices as much as $9 to $11 per ton below maximum figures now being maintained by the largest producers have appeared the past week, and this spread is growing steadily. That the Steel Corporation must meet this situation before many days is a matter of common market opinion.

It is thus seen that the United States Steel Corporation was thus holding up prices, while the independent companies were endeavoring to bring them down. However, the different members of the Steel Trust, under the guiding genius of the United States Steel Corporation, of which James A. Farrell is president, got busy and effected an agreement under which the United States Steel Corporation made the very slight reducton of 5 to 10 per cent on certain of its steel products, and the independent companies increased their prices, thus making prices more uniform. Thereupon the United States Steel Corporation announced a general wage reduction of 20 per cent, effective May 16. Of course, this wage reduction more than made up for the price reduction.

The effect of this agreement and action by the members of the Steel Trust is described by a recent issue of the Iron Trade Review, which says:

No appreciable stimulation of new business has resulted from the reduction and readjustments of steel prices recently made effective by the Steel Corporation and independent mills. * * * All present signs, moreover, point to the fact that the best that can be hoped for is a slow and exceedingly gradual recovery. Buyers generally are showing a reluctance to accept the new price level at its face value, in the apparent belief that further readjustments are probable before stability will have been restored. will have been restored.

Likewise, the effect of the trust agreement is described by the Iron Age, which in a recent issue says, in part:

The chief effect of the coming together of independent and Steel Corporation prices by the raising of the former and the lowering of the latter was the closing of business by the independent companies on which they had made quotations below the new level.

Thus the bulk of the new orders of the past week has gone to the independents, but at the same time the Steel Corporation has been helped by the reinstatement of business which had gone off its books while it was maintaining Industrial Board prices.

There is no indication that consumers will change their policy of limited buying.

Furthermore, The Annalist, a magazine of finance, commerce, and economics, published in New York, in its issue of May 16, 1921, under the title of "Iron and steel," says:

1921, under the title of "Iron and steel," says:

It has been said of the iron and steel industry that it was either "prince or pauper." While it may not be literally true to say that it is pauper, now the fact remains that business is dwindling rather than picking up. It is probable that the industry as a whole is operating now at less than 40 per cent of capacity, and that by another month activities may have slackened to somewhere in the neighborhood of 25 per cent. This certainly is not reassuring. The unfilled tonnage figures of the United States Steel Corporation as of April 30 showed a falling off of more than 400,000 tons, and forward business now is approximately only half of what it was when the peak of orders was reached in the war years.

It is the price situation which continues to be the dominant factor in the industry. It appears that as long as prices hold up so strongly against the trend of the times that business will suffer, for the feeling is evident that the artificial plane of prices can not continue indefinitely, and there is no one who wishes to stock up on steel products with such a clouded outlook as to the future. In other words, the only buying which is coming into the market is that which represents urgent requirements, the satisfying of which must be undertaken, no matter what the cost. Building is not being entered into on any scale commensurate with the need. * * *

Ultimately it would appear that prices must again be cut, and in the long run steel products will get on a basis where the price schedule presents a high degree of attractiveness, and then, and not till then, will buying demand reassert itself.

In other words, it is apparent that the public is naturally on

In other words, it is apparent that the public is naturally on a strike so far as buying steel products is concerned, realizing that prices are abnormally high, and yet the Steel Trust, in an effort to drive the public to paying its exorbitant prices, is willing for its mills to be shut down, its hundreds of thousands of employees thrown out of work, and the readjustment and resumption of industry generally to be retarded. And yet, it is insisted that the man responsible for this situation, and guilty of this conduct, should be selected as the Chairman of the United States Shipping Board.

While the United States Steel Corporation is so independent and arrogant that it does not ordinarily take time to make excuses for its misconduct, yet the only defense I have heard offered from any source of its failure to reduce prices has been the question of wages. As already shown, its recent small decrease in prices was more than counterbalanced by its reduction in wages. Furthermore, as complete evidence of the fact that the United States Steel Corporation has been profiteering in an unconscionable manner, and that its high prices are not made recessary by the wages it pays, I beg to call attention to certain facts.

The United States Steel Corporation has been in existence 20 years.

It was organized by the house of Morgan with a capital of $1,000,000.000, the greater part being water.

At the last annual stockholders' meeting, held in Hobeken, N. J., April 18, 1921, Judge Gary reported that the stock and bonded debt of the corporation now amounted to $1,423,411,831, and that during the 20 years of its existence it had charged off from earnings the enormous total of $1,623,571,449 for depreciation, sinking fund, and ordinary repairs.

This meant that the trust, out of the excess profits wrung from the consumers of steel, had rebuilt the plants which it had taken in at fancy prices when it was endeavoring to establish its monopoly.

It has paid dividends totaling more than $1,000,000,000.

In addition to all that, it has on hand in cash, in the form of surplus, sinking, and reserve funds, $702,370,464.

The foregoing figures are taken from a tabulated history of the United States Steel Corporation compiled by Dow, Jones & Co., and published in the Wall Street Journal of April 19, 1921.

In his last annual report, covering the year 1920, John Skelton Williams, Comptroller of United States Currency, in commenting upon the excess profits of the United States Steel Corporation, said:

The increase which has taken place in wages since the war does not excuse present prices for steel and iron products. A careful analysis which was made of the reports of one of the largest and most important steel and iron companies (Judge Gary's company) shows that that company in the last year of the war, 1918, charged on an average for every ton of steel which it produced at least $25 per ton in excess of a price which would have enabled the company to pay full dividends upon its very large capital stock. The report of the same company shows, furthermore, that its net earnings were so enormous that the company could have paid its accustomed dividends upon its shares even if it had paid its employees wages 100 per cent higher than the wages it actually did pay.

In a letter to Judge Gary, written February 15, 1921, Mr. Williams again nailed the steel corporation in these words:

In the two years we were engaged in the war the Steel Trust made more than $1,000,000 000 of profits, the exaction of which had a most disturbing and injurious effect, not only upon our allies but upon our country in the midst of war. These earnings were so large that the trust could during that time have doubled the salaries and wages of every one of its 268,710 employees and officers and leave a surplus sufficient to pay interest and sinking-fund charges and leave a balance of more than $7,000,000 after dividends had been paid on preferred and common stock.

A large part of those enormous profits were exacted of the United States for munitions and other equipment with which to fight the common enemy while we were in the midst of the greatest war of all times. Furthermore, a large part of those profits were upon steel that entered into the construction of the merchant fleet of the United States. And yet it is proposed that the disposition of our merchant fleet, which cost the taxpayers of this country approximately $4,000,000.000, shall be determined and directed by the head of the corporation which wrung from the Government in time of war the profits above mentioned.

The Steel Trust is not satisfied with the enormous profit it made during the war. It is not satisfied with the enormous amount of funds in its treasury. It not only is not satisfied to take any losses during the readjustment period, as most other industries are doing, but it is not even satisfied with reasonable profits. It insists on war profits in peace times.

Can the man responsible for this profiteering, for this inordinate greed, for this lack of patriotism, for this crime against the Government and the citizenship of this Republic, be expected to change his disposition overnight? Can it be reasonably expected that he "will bring from his private capacity to his public office an ambition to expand the shipping industry of the United States" in the interest of all the people? Would he be "animated by an ambition to serve" the Government? "The leopard does not change its spots."

So the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Bureau of Standards to cooperate with Government departments, engineers, and manufacturers in the establishment of standards, methods of testing, and inspection of instruments, equipment, tools, and electrical and mechanical devices used in the industries and by the Government, including the practical specification for quality and performance of such devices, and the formulation of methods of inspection, laboratory, and service tests, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $100,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that there is no law authorizing all the purposes as stipulated in this paragraph, and that it is not a deficiency; but it is an attempt to place legislation in certain respects on a deficiency bill, unauthorized by law

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer to perfect the amendment. In line 2, page 47, strike out the words "engineers and

amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows: Mr. Wingo offers the following amendment: Page 47, line 2, strike out the words "engineers and manufacturers."

Mr. WINGO. Now, Mr. Chairman, of course I may be guilty of lese majesty if I seek to cut "business out of the Government," as some gentlemen will contend, but you all understand the situation—this proposes to put Government in business. You have a proposition here of $100,000 for the year 1922, say that you are going to vote for this from the standpoint of economy, and when you say that you know you are a bunch of liars and are just putting up a bluff. Talk about economy! You might as well milk a ram goat with a sifter as to talk about making Republicans economical. Your President talks in New York about economizing in cutting out offices, and you have not done anything while in power except increase offices and expenditures. Under this head, out of the $250,000 are included "personal services in the District of Columbia." If you cut out the words, the department would not want it, because it is intended to increase the personnel here in the District of Columbia. To do what? The gentleman from Iowa—and I can almost hear the mocking bird singing in the old apple tree and see the honeysuckle growing on the workingman's door-said with that $50,000 experiment in clay he is going in three months' time to reduce the cost of construction 20 per cent.

Well, we may do it, but we shall have to do it with a bunch different from those that the gentleman has training behind him to-day, because it takes constructive ability and brains to do that kind of thing, and even Mr. Hoover, wizard as he is, can not perform that miracle in three weeks' time. You are going to have so-called experiments conducted here in Washington, out in the aristocratic suburbs of Washington, by office-holders drawing high pay, and you say that it is to reduce the cost of construction! Why, every man on that side who has studied this question knows very well that that is not the way you are going to reduce the cost of construction of buildings in this country. If you bring in a bill here and undertake to aid the workingmen of America to build their homes and make it possible for them to get their homes on reasonable terms, I will join with you, but do not attempt to mislead the workingmen of America by pretending that you are going to make it possible for them to get their homes on reasonable terms by putting a few more high-priced timeservers on the pay roll out here in the aristocratic suburbs of Washington. Who ever heard of a program like that? If you are going to have bona fide experiments conducted, why do you say that you are going to cooperate with manufacturers in perfecting economical devices? You will interfere with manufacturers with this bunch of timeservers that you have proposed. You will put them on the pay roll and pay them $100,000 for three weeks' time.

Gentlemen, I would like to see this bill passed to-night, and if you were to use a little horse sense and a little courtesy and ordinary consideration you could pass it to-night; but I think you will read the engrossed bill to-morrow morning. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, in order to expedite matters, I yield back the remainder of my time. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the Chair continues to flatter me by referring to me as "the gentleman from Tennessee," especially as my friend from Iowa [Mr. Good] has just referred to "the gentleman from Tennessee" in such a complimentary way. But inasmuch as the chairman of the committee in his remarks opposing the preceding amendment referred to politics and the manufacture of campaign material, I will say that I have engaged in no such cam-committee that as to these three or four items I reserved the

Mr. GOOD. Oh, I did not intend to refer to the gentleman in paign. When the bill was pending in committee I notified the any such connection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I believe that in this paragraph we notify the different departments that they can come in upon an appropriation bill and get additional money for the next fiscal year before the next fiscal year has begun. If you do that with one department you extend an invitation to all of them to come in and do likewise. I believe many of you gentlemen honestly want to economize, but you can not do it by leading the heads of departments to believe that you will carry out this plan of increasing appropriations above the amount .granted for next year.

What are the facts about this item? They submitted an estimate for this fiscal year for $25,000 for the whole fiscal year 1922, and then your committee saw fit to recommend nothing, and the Congress gave them nothing. Now, here in six weeks you come in and, treating the matter not as it is, but as the chairman wants it to be, as an appropriation for the next fiscal year, he is asking you to do the foolish thing of giving them $100,000, when the estimates submitted in the regular way for the next fiscal year were for only $25,000. Think of it! That is what you do if you carry out his purpose of putting it in here with the idea that in another body it will be made available for the next fiscal year.

But he is asking you, sensible men, to do something even more absurd than that. He is asking you to vote now—and the RECORD will show it—appropriating $100,000 for the balance of this fiscal year for an activity for which they asked only $25,000 for the next fiscal year. I see the distinguished leader of the majority [Mr. Mondell] on the floor. He has often paraded here—it was a root of the river large way. here-it was a part of the ritual he adopted-and boasted of the reduction of the appropriation below the estimates. But now there is no reduction. You even exceed their estimate by $75,000 for the next fiscal year. That is exceeding the speed limit. The invitation now is, "Ask for what you want, and if you ask for $25,000 we will throw in $75,000 for good measure." [Applause on the Democratic side.] What a notice to send out to departments! I ask of you if it is playing politics to come in and submit that to you, as men of common sense, and to ask you if you are going to do it. You boasted of reducing this very estimate of $25,000, giving them nothing at all. It was one of your economies. Now you come in and give them for the same purpose not the $25,000 they asked for but $100,000. Now what has occurred since February? What great menace to the industry of this country has occurred that we must have the Bureau of Standards inform the manufacturers of the country how to conduct their business? Why, there is not a man out there who can advise the Association of Manufacturers of this country how to conduct their business. They know more about conducting their business than anybody connected with the Bureau of Standards ever will know. Yet you are going to give them $100,000, as the Record will show, for three weeks, to tell the manufacturers of the country how to conduct their business. If you want to do it, all right. But square it if you can with your pledges and with the statements you are making every day in the year about economy. I want you to practice what you preach. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, when this matter was under consideration in the committee, Secretary Hoover called attention to the fact that by the commission known as the "Screw-thread Commission" the hardware dealers of America were saved a capital charge all the way from $15,000,000 to $50,000.000 a year in their hardware stocks, just on bolts. The Secretary of Commerce is convinced that hundreds of millions of dollars can be saved just in hardware lines alone if there can be brought about a standardization of hardware. And so it is in all of the industries. He estimates that one of the big elements of increased cost is the great number of different standards that every dealer must carry, and the Secretary has in mind, not in three weeks but in the next year, to build up in America an industrial unit that will standardize these various items, many of which are used in the home-building industry and in building large structures. It is a big idea. It is a big thing. The Secretary of Commerce has done big things, and he will do big things in the future for the country if we on this side of the House can adopt a progressive, constructive policy upon which he can build. You ask what has happened since last February. We have placed in the Department of Commerce one of the greatest engineers, one of the greatest manufacturers in America, and we are going to support him. [Applause.]

I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WINGO) there were—ayes 68, noes 19.

Accordingly the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. There are two amendments pending, one to strike out and the other to perfect.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas to perfect the paragraph is first in order.

The question being taken, on a division (denranded by Mr. Wingo) there were-ayes 20, noes 66.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. Byrnes of South Carolina) there were—ayes 23, noes 70. Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

EMPLOYMENT SERVICE.

The sum of $125,207.97 of the appropriation "Advanced transportation, United States Employment Service, 1918 and 1919," is reappropriated and made available to enable the Secretary of Labor to complete the payment of obligations covering transportation incurred during the fiscal year 1919 by the War Emergency Employment Service.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 47, line 17, strike out all of lines 17 to 23, inclusive.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, Lask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6300, the second deficiency bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MacGregor, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for one week, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS,

By unanimous consent, Mr. French was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Aaron Kibler, H. R. 1785, Sixty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. Parrish was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of James M. Waide, jr., H. R. 9814, pension, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. French was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Sam Tilden, H. R. 9648, Sixty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House dispense with Calendar Wednesday business tomorrow

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday business to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, my recollection is that the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee has a bill pending.

Mr. MONDELL. They have a bill pending, but it will not require the entire day. They have no further legislation ready for consideration, and the committee would prefer to have the next Calendar Wednesday rather than to-morrow.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course I never like to interfere with the majority in the conduct of business. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

A bill (S. 1877) for the relief of the Flathead Nation of Indians: to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 1878) to permit the State of Montana to exchange cut-over timber lands granted for educational purposes for other lands of like character and approximate value; to the A bill (S. 1879) granting a pension to Henry Hankins (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEW:

A bill (S. 1879) granting a pension to Henry Hankins (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 1890) providing for the appointment of Warrant Officer Herbert Warren Hardman as captain in the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, to take rank under the provisions of section 24a of the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920 (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military

A bill (S. 1881) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, as amended, to establish an Hawaiian homes commission, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 1882) to protect the public against fraud by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation in interstate commerce of misbranded, misrepresented, or falsely described articles, to regulate the traffic therein, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. WELLER: A bill (S. 1883) granting a pension to Anna Claude Howard; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 1884) for the relief of John F. Kelly; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 1885) granting a pension to Belle Thompson Alter; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 1886) granting a pension to Margaret L. Burns; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 1887) to protect interstate commerce in foods, drugs, and medicines, and to extend the provisions of the food and drugs act of June 30, 1906; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 1888) authorizing the Secretary of War to denate to the William R. Terry Chapter, Daughters of the Confederacy, city of Bedford, Bedford County, Va., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BALL submitted an amendment providing that an appropriation of $323,620 be made for improvements at the Philadelphia quarantine station, intended to be proposed by him to the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NORRIS submitted an amendment providing that the Secretary of War be authorized and directed to dispose of by transfer to the Department of Agriculture under existing laws by sale so many motor trucks and passenger-carrying automobiles as will, in addition to such trucks and automobiles as have been sold or transferred since January 1, 1921, aggregate during the first six months of the calendar year 10,000 motor trucks and 2,000 passenger-carrying automobiles, intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

CONDITIONS IN IRELAND.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in the issue of May 25 of the Nation appears an article by Sir Horace Plunkett entitled "Ireland To-day-Sir Horace Plunkett's Plan." I ask unanimous consent to insert that article in the RECORD. an important contribution which it would be well if Englishmen, Irishmen, and Americans would very carefully consider and weigh.

In view of the resolutions which have been introduced and the numerous petitions which have been presented regarding Ireland, I believe it would help clarify the situation and serve the interests of all concerned to give consideration to the views of a distinguished resident of Ireland, whose patriotism and statesmanship are well established and recognized.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Florida will be granted.

The article referred to is as follows:

"TRELAND TO-DAY-SIR HORACE PLUNKETT'S PLAN. "[By Horace Plunkett.]

"I have been invited to explain to American readers the latest means adopted by moderate Irishmen-Irishmen, that is, to whom the policy of Mr. Lloyd-George is abhorrent and the doctrine of Mr. De Valera seems in one matter impracticable—the latest means adopted by them to induce and enable the Government to put an end to an Irish situation which is cruelly disastrous to Ireland, utterly discreditable to Britain, and productive of lasting mutual hatred between the two peoples.

"Over 600 men, women, and children have been killed since the beginning of the year in conflicts between the Irish republicans and the forces of the Crown. Nearly as many more have been wounded. The wanton destruction of property and the complete dislocation of the country's commerce and industry continue. This is a state of things which at any previous period would have led to the downfall of the Government at Westminster. For whatever reason the party now in power is allowed to persist in a policy which no Irishman believes can possibly succeed-a policy which, in 6 counties of Ireiand, will set up a government hateful to one-third of their population, while in the other 26 counties it will be regarded as adding the injury of partition to the insult of alien government, and will remove the Anglo-Irish conflict further than ever from a settlement.

"The supreme tragedy of this Irish situation lies in the fact that a certain and proclaimed remedy has lain ready to the hands of the Government all through these dark months. Two years ago the Irish Dominion League was founded; it is not yet too late to bring peace and friendship between the two countries by the solution it advocates. With the agreement and assistance of Irishmen representing many shades of political opinion I have brought forward in their name a new plan for enabling the Lloyd-George administration, once and for all, if their avowed desire for a peaceful settlement is sincere, to show that it is so by their actions or, by their refusal, to close our ears entirely to their unsupported protestations of good will.

"The plan is embodied in a memorial to the prime minister which advocates a new approach to an Irish settlement as an alternative to the continuance of this heartrending conflict until a military decision is reached in a ruined country. poses that the Ulster Unionists should be asked-without abandoning the powers and privileges assured to them under the government of Ireland act, 1920-to join with their fellow countrymen in an all-Ireland conference for the sake of keeping Ireland contentedly in the British Commonwealth, and that those entitled to speak for the majority of the Irish people should be asked to abandon secession for the sake of Irish The main assumptions on which the scheme is based are:

"1. That the Government's policy has not only, as the prime minister now admits, failed tragically but that there is no prospect whatsoever of any turn of its disastrous tide. spirit of resistance and the actual number of active participants in the armed conflict are increasing notwithstanding the terrible suffering inflicted upon the Irish republican army and the communities in sympathy.

2. The majority of Irish people are determined to adhere to the republican demand and to support those fighting for it as long as the Government adheres to its attempt to impose upon Ireland by force a constitution which the majority of its people will not accept.

"3. If such a settlement as Mr. Asquith and the Liberals have already approved were firmly offered and accompanied by a truce while it was being submitted to a representative assembly of the Irish people-with amnesty should a settlement be reached-an immense majority in southern Ireland would accept the offer.

'4. Northern Ireland would ultimately, if not at once, come into the settlement, because fiscal autonomy in southern Ireland (which would be an essential of a settlement) would involve a tariff wall around the six counties, to the utter destruction of their economic life.

"5. No issue to the conflict other than a military decision is possible unless the Government takes the initiative and brings about negotiations between southern and northern Ireland upon a possibly acceptable basis of settlement.

"These assumptions are sound and the scheme is properly based upon them. Writing for Englishmen I might give good reasons for believing that the proposed change in the British Government's attitude would enormously improve its moral position in Britain as well as Britain's prestige abroad. Writing for Americans I will restrict myself to the change the adoption of the scheme would make in the situation here in Ireland.

"The Government is committed to holding the elections under the act over the whole of Ireland. In the six counties it will lead to the setting up of a parliament in which only one party will be represented. The institution will be a mere replica of the Ulster provisional government which was ready to be set up in 1914. I believe those in Sir Edward Carson's confidence, who subsequently had an Irish policy formulated in their ex-clusive interest, were determined to use their control over the parliament and the government with exemplary moderation, if not generosity, toward the minerity in their area, and so justify themselves before the world Whatever their intentions they are now completely disillusioned upon the working out of The northern government will have the fierce the policy. hostility of an unrepresented minority, who will have the sympathy and not a little cooperation of practically the whole of southern Ireland. For business reasons the Ulstermen never liked partition, many of them to my certain knowledge thinking it impracticable but relying upon the bargaining value of their own parliament for setting up an all-Ireland government favorable to themselves. In the backs of the minds of these people-in the fronts of their minds there is still the hatred stirred up in the days of the covenant-they will be glad of another opportunity to negotiate. A conference established in the manner outlined in our memorial will give it to them. They would not, however, touch the scheme unless requested to do so by their English supporters in the Government.
"In the south of Ireland the forthcoming elections will obviously be a wanton farce, making England ridiculous before the world, if held as now ordered. The proceeding will not merely be farcical, it will be mischievous in a way which few. even here in Ireland, appreciate. Sinn Fein will return probably over 90 per cent of the members, whose only qualification will be that they can be trusted to demand a republic and never to darken the door of the Parliament to which they are elected. Yet these men will stand before the world as the authorized spokesmen for the democracy of Ireland for the next few years. Even Sinn Fein will not put forward the men in whose political capacity they believe, for the simple reason that having M. P. after their names marks them for Black and Tan attention. If, on the other hand, the members elected are to sit in a constituent conference or assembly, not only will the best Sinn Feiners stand but men of moderate views would be welcomed by Sinn Fein as a necessary minority in a really representative Irish gathering.

"The greatest difficulty was to save the Government's face, and on this point our scheme meets, as no previous scheme has met, the actual political necessities of Mr. Lloyd-George's These are the two points we are pressing him to government.

"(a) If the southern elections are held only for a parliament which won't meet, a body of extremists will be installed for the next two or three years as the authorized spokesmen of the Irish democracy in any negotiations between Britain and Ireland or between the southern and northern Irelands created by the act of 1920. If the elections are also for a constituent assembly, I am convinced a good sprinkling of first-rate men, representing all views, would be returned. In the former case no settlement would be possible till after another election, or a military decision; in the latter case a settlement would at worst only be postponed. (b) The scheme saves the Government's face with its rank and file who will give it credit for any settlement which comes out of the elections under the act.

"But it is not enough to point the way through Irish difficulties, as often by their manner and means as by their policy and intentions have British Governments outraged the feelings of my fellow countrymen. There are difficulties in Ireland which are beyond the horizon of Westminster. We have therefore, after long and careful consideration, devised a procedure calculated to minimize these difficulties, and we set out in order the steps required to give a fair trial to the plan we propose.

1. The prime minister to state in Parliament that the Government accepts in principle the status of a self-governing dominion for Ireland on the terms above indicated, provided that those authorized to speak for the majority of the Irish people and for the Ulster Unionists, respectively, agree to meet in an assembly representative of the whole of Ireland and discuss a settlement upon that basis.

"2. If both Irish parties are ready to meet for such a discussion-and this can easily be ascertained-the Government to facilitate the meeting of the present elected representatives from southern Ireland so that they can appoint delegates to confer with the Government upon a cessation of hostilities and such other preliminary arrangements as may be necessary to make it possible for the subsequent negotiations to proceed.

"3. The forthcoming elections to take place on the understanding that the members returned for the whole of Ireland will immediately thereafter meet as a constituent assembly without necessarily taking their seats in either parliament.

"4. Parliament meanwhile to pass a bill authorizing the constituent assembly to frame a constitution for Ireland in accordance with the powers and limitations of full-dominion status. At the first meeting of this assembly negotiations to be opened with the Government in regard to defense and foreign relations.

"5. The members representing the six counties of northern Ireland may, at any time during the deliberations of the constituent assembly, declare by a majority that they decide to set up a parliament and government for their area as provided in the act of 1920, and in the event of such decision the members from southern Ireland may either adopt or reject the dominion status for their 26 counties.

"6. If a parliament of northern Ireland is thus established, it shall have power at any time to unite with the southern Ireland dominion on any terms which may be mutually agreed,

"Such is the plan thought out by a body of Irishmen who passionately long for the freedom of their country in order that its people may be able not only to develop their own human and material resources, which they alone understand, but also to take their place in the family of nations to which they belong. Given this opportunity they will be, for the first time in 700 years, not perhaps friends of the British Govern-ment for a while but of the British people."

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On May 20, 1921:

S. 594. An act for the relief of certain ex-service men whose rights to make entries on the North Platte irrigation project, Nebraska-Wyoming, were defeated by intervening claims. On May 25, 1921:

S. 1479. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Washington & Old Dominion Railway, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River.

PERRY'S VICTORY MEMORIAL, PUT IN BAY ISLAND, OHIO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the first annual report of the Perry Victory Memorial Commission, dated December 6, 1920, which was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to section 5 of the act entitled "An act creating a commission for the maintenance, control, care, etc., of the Perry's Victory Memorial on Put in Bay Island, Lake Erie, Ohio, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1919 (40 Stat., 1322-1324).

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, Man 25, 1921.

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM-CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 15).

Mr. McCORMICK. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1084) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes. I ask that the report may be printed and lie on the table.

Without objection, the report will The VICE PRESIDENT.

be printed and lie on the table.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment of the committee, which the Secretary will state.

The READING CLERK. On page 58 add a new section to be numbered section 16.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] is necessarily absent at this moment. He has amendments to propose to this amendment of the committee. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dillingham], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Sutherland], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh], who are in attendance on a hearing before the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who expected to discuss some amendments which he intends to offer to the pending amendment of the committee, is detained for a few moments, and he is willing I shall now offer an amendment which I had intended to propose when the text of the bill is reached. If there is no objection on the part of the acting chairman of the committee, I shall offer my amendment at this time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection.

Mr. McLEAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 51, line 25, after the words "Provided, That," insert the words "with the exception of submarine torpedo boats," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That, with the exception of submarine torpedo boats, no art of this appropriation can be expended except on vessels now being constructed.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, this amendment does not accomplish what, in my opinion, should be accomplished. It merely extends to the board the right to expend a small portion of the $90,000,000 appropriation for the purpose of preventing the entire suspension of the submarine program, but it leaves it entirely discretionary with the board. It does not add a dollar to the total of the appropriation. It merely notifies the board that it is the opinion of Congress that the matter of submarine construction should receive very careful consideration.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Secretary to restate the amendment, so that I may understand where it ap-

The READING CLERK. On page 51, line 25, after the word "That," it is proposed to insert "with the exception of submarine torpedo boats," so that the text will read:

Provided, That, with the exception of submarine torpedo boats, no part of this appropriation can be expended except on vessels now being constructed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the amendment does not add to the appropriation, but it would add to the appropriation if any action were taken under it.

Mr. McLEAN. It would not necessarily do so. I think the Senator from Idaho knows that there are 12 fleet submarines included in the 1916 program. Three of them are in process of construction, as I understand, at Portsmouth; contracts have been let for three; and the other six are still in the future. If I understand the situation, if the amendment which I have proposed is adopted, it will permit the board to expend a part of the $90,000,000 in the construction of submarine torpedo boats.

Mr. BORAH. Is it the understanding of the Senator from Washington, the acting chairman of the committee, as to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut, should it become effective and should the Navy Department operate under it, that the expenditure would be made from the $90,-000,000 that is appropriated and that it would not be necessary to come to Congress for a deficiency appropriation?

Mr. McLEAN. The expenditure could not be made unless it should be taken from the $90,000,000 appropriation. If a part of this appropriation be used for submarines, I assume that it will have to be taken from the fund which would otherwise be spent in the construction of battleships. They certainly will not abandon the construction of the airplane carriers.

Mr. BORAH. If the effect of the amendment is simply to take a portion of the $90,000,000, in case it is expended at all, and use it in the construction of submarines, I have no objection to the Senator's amendment.

Mr. McLEAN. That is as I understand it. Mr. BORAH. Is that the understanding of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]?

Mr. HALE. The amendment does not propose to force the department to use the appropriation, but simply allows them to use a portion of the $90,000,000, if they see fit so to do, for the construction of submarines.

Mr. BORAH. And if they construct any submarines they have got to take the money from the $90,000,000 appropriation?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. President, the comparative merits of the Mr. McLEAN. submarine and the battleship and aircraft have been pretty thoroughly discussed. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate in repeating things that have been said with regard to the submarine. My hope is that the distinguished acting chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who has so ably and successfully defended his bill, will realize the inoffensiveness of the amendment and will permit it to go to conference.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I have always favored the building of the submarines that were authorized in the 1916 program. I frankly say, however, to the Senator from Connecticut that I think the intention of the department is to defer their construction, but their construction has not been abandoned nor the authorization canceled. With that understanding, I have no objection to his amendment. It simply leaves it in the discretion of the department to exercise the authority which has already been granted to it, and for that purpose to include the submarines, in case they should determine to do so, in the contracts which are to be paid for out of this appropriation.

Mr. McLEAN. Then, I understand that the Senator from Washington is willing to accept the amendment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am willing to accept it. I should like, however, to add an amendment to the amendment, to come in after the words "torpedo boats," by inserting the words "and

Mr. McLEAN. I certainly have no objection to the Senator's amendment to my amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. T The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. At the end of the proposed amendment, after the words "torpedo boats," it is proposed to insert 'and one transport," so that it will read:

Provided, That, with the exception of submarine torpedo boats and one transport, no part of this appropriation can be expended except on vessels now being constructed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean] as modified by the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I have conferred with the acting chairman of the committee regarding the amendment which I now propose. I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, line 18, after the figures "$343,400," insert the following:

Provided, That no person owing allegiance to any country other than the United States of America shall be eligible to hold office as a member of the colonial councils of the Virgin Islands of the United States nor to hold any public office under the government of said islands: Provided further, That the income tax laws now in force in the United States of America and those which may hereafter be enacted shall be held to be likewise in force in the Virgin Islands of the United States, except that the proceeds of such taxes shall be paid into the treasuries of said islands.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, as the Virgin Islands are under the Navy in the matter of government, it seems to me this is an appropriate time and place in the pending bill to correct a situation in the Virgin Islands that has needed the attention of Congress for some time.

When the Virgin Islands were taken over by the United States from Denmark it was provided that anyone residing there who did not care to become a citizen of the United States by certain procedure could retain his Danish citizenship. think of all the inhabitants of the islands there were only somewhere around 30 in number who exercised that privilege. One of the individuals who retained his Danish citizenship edits a paper at St. Thomas which, I think I am fair in saying, is hostile to the United States. His utterances show no friendly He is a member and has been feeling at least to this country. feeling at least to this country. He is a means and St. John, president of the colonial council of St. Thomas and St. John, have the perfectly anomalous situation of a Danish subject, a man who refuses to become a citizen of the United States, and who has provoked much feeling against the United States by his paper, at the head of the council making laws to govern portions of those islands. He is not now the head of the council, because his term has expired, but he has been reelected to the council, as I understand. It ought not to be that a Danish subject could be a member of the council making laws for those islands. That is what my amendment will prevent.

In the second place, we are spending some $375,000 a year out of the Treasury to carry on the affairs of the Virgin Islands. There are great planters in the Virgin Islands who the committee believed when they visited those islands were escaping the income taxes. If the income-tax laws of the United States should be applied to the Virgin Islands, we can raise enough money, I think, to make the Virgin Islands practically selfsustaining

Those are the two points that are covered by my amendment, and I would be glad if the Senator from Washington could see his way clear to accept it. Let me say further that I have a letter from the present governor of the Virgin Islands strongly indorsing the amendment and urging its adoption.

Mr, POINDEXTER. Will the Senator have the letter printed in the RECORD?

Mr. KENYON. I think, Mr. President, it may be of interest to insert in the RECORD the letter received by me from the governor of the Virgin Islands, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that it may be incorporated in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

GOVERNMENT OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS OF THE UNITED STATES,
St. Thomas, May 9, 1921.

My Dear Senator Kenyon: I was inaugurated in the Council Chamber in St. Thomas before the Colonial Council and a large assemblage of officials and citizens on April 26, since which time I have been actively at work getting hold of the situation here, after which I shall go to St. Croix on the same mission. I would not be able to go there at once, anyway, for the Vixen is not at present seaworthy and funds for naval repairs are not easily available, owing to the necessity for rigid economy.

funds for naval repairs are not easily available, owing to the necessity for rigid economy.

There have been improvements since your commission was here. Taking your recommendations in order, the following is the present condition as far as I have gone:

1. The water problem is still serious and the season has been very dry. We are about completing a watershed and large cistern for the French colony (Cha-Chas) and when completed and filled by the hopedfor rain, these poor people will have water at their doors instead of having to walk a half mile for each bucketful.

2. The transportation service is somewhat improved between the islands and with Porto Rico. I intend to study this matter closely.

3. The substitution of American currency awaits the action of Congress. A bill gotten up by the Treasury was shown me before I left Washington.

isiands and with Porto Rico. I intend to study this matter closely.

3. The substitution of American currency awaits the action of Congress. A bill gotten up by the Treasury was shown me before I left Washington.

4. The new code of laws is already in force in St. Croix and the one for St. Thomas and St. John will go into effect on July 1 next.

5. Much improvement has been made in the schools both materially and intellectually speaking, and the junior high school, established since your visit, is thriving. I shall inspect the schools of St. Croix later just as thoroughly as I am now delving into those of St. Thomas. I feel much encouraged from what I have seen.

6. The bunkering question is still in bad state.

7. I am taking active steps with the Post Office Department to establish mall service with St. John. Our service with San Juan and with St. Croix is now biweekly and very satisfactory.

8. I have not yet gotten to the agriculture question, but the Secretary of Agriculture promised me his help when I need it.

9. The bar at Christiansted is a very trying and dangerous one to mariners. It is a big question. When I have given it personal study I shall be better able to discuss the matter.

10. We have quite a good little library now here in St. Thomas, and it is most interesting to see how crowded it is with eager children. I shall see it greatly expanded, slowly but surely.

11. I am studying the question of local taxation and shall bring it vigorously before the councils. Please note my suggestion as to an amendment to the naval appropriation bill, at the end of this letter, dealing with officeholding and lncome tax.

12. As yet the councils are separate.

13. The judicial situation is still somewhat in flux. I shall have more to say of it later.

1 desire to strongly recommend that you make an effort to attach the following proposed amendment to the naval appropriation bill now before the Congress:

8243,440." add the following:

Proposed amendment to H. R. 4803, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session, U

Senator William S. Kenyon, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator whether there is any taxation imposed upon the people in addition to their local taxes?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; there is.

Mr. KING. We are compelled, then, to appropriate, as I understand, about $350,000 per annum for the purpose of governing the islands?

Mr. KENYON. I think the appropriations ren in the neighborhood of $370,000, in addition to what is raised by taxation on the islands, but some of the rich planters of those islands have, in my judgment, not been paying a fair proportion of taxation.

Mr. KING. Let me inquire further if, when the islands were subject to Denmark, appropriations were made by the parent Government for the upkeep of the islands and the maintenance of local government?

Mr. KENYON. I think so. I think for some years the islands have not been self-sustaining, due largely to the same causes that I am trying to remedy by the amendment which I have proposed.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that the amount of $340,000 plus the local taxes is too much money. The Senator will recall that when the Territories were receiving appropriations from the Federal Government they did not receive, respectively, nearly that amount, and yet they had populations of from 50,000 to 200,000, 300,000, and 400,000. The Senator has visited the islands, and may I inquire whether, in his opinion, the amount which Congress is called upon to appropriate is excessive?

Mr. KENYON. No; I think not; I believe that we have not done our duty by them. The possibilities in the islands are marvelous; but they need a new water system; they need a dredging of the harbor at Christiansted. They have established a new junior high school since the commission visited them, but they need money for a number of purposes. It is a land we acquired and a land we forgot. A fair system of taxation will reduce the amount the Government is compelled to pay, but I do not believe that it will entirely eliminate it. There must be many things done in the Virgin Islands in the next few years.

Mr. KING. Let me inquire of the Senator, in view of his amendment, whether there is any spirit manifested by the people to become citizens of the United States?

Mr. KENYON. Oh, yes. I think I stated to the Senate that there were not over 30 or 35 who refused to become citizens of the United States

Mr. KING. I did not so understand the Senator. Mr. KENYON. There were not over that number who took advantage of the provision that they could retain their Danish citizenship; but one of the 30 has been the president of the council making laws in the islands, and it seems to me that such a situation is intolerable.

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I ask the Senator from Iowa what is the present status of the proposed legislation for establishing a civil government in the Virgin Islands?

Mr. KENYON. There has been a code of new laws, I will say to the Senator, prepared after great pains and trouble, and that code has now been adopted by the council of St. Croix and will be adopted, possibly in the next 60 days—I think that is a safe estimate-by the council of St. Thomas and St. John. So they will have a code of American laws. They have had a situation under which Danish laws have governed those islands. For instance, some offenses were punishable by boiling in oil: but, of course, such punishment has never been inflicted since we secured possession of the islands.

Mr. BORAH. Oil is too expensive for that, Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I am in hearty sympathy with the purpose of the Senator from Iowa, as expressed in the amendment. I think that the members of the councils of the island ought to be citizens of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. President, my recollection is that the only committee amendment undisposed of is the one proposing to incorporate section 16, relating to aeronautics.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia has offered an amendment to section 8, which the Secretary will

The Assistant Secretary. On page 55, at the end of section 8, it is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, That any officer of the Navy having not less than 16 years of active service since the date of first commission or warrant may, with the approval of the President, be transferred on his own application to the United States Naval Reserve Force, class 1, in the rank held by such officer on the date of transfer: Provided further, That an officer so transferred shall receive only such pay as is now or may hereafter be allowed by law for officers of the United States Naval Reserve Force.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia state just what he intends to accomplish by the amendment?

Mr. SWANSON. Under the present rules any officer who serves 16 years can resign from the Navy. Any officer can be retired now, and get three-fourths pay, if he is ordered before a board. A great many naval officers resign, and a great many of them are retired. They get three-fourths pay when they are on the retired list; and when an officer files an application, just as in the case of enlisted men, after he has served 16 years, he can apply to be transferred to the Naval Reserve, not the retired list, and can be put on the Naval Reserve list, and does not get any pay except that which the regular members of the Naval Reserve get. If an officer comes and desires to resign, they will very probably say, "We will not accept your resignation, but we will transfer you to the reserve." Then he is subject to the order of the Navy in time of emergency. You can order him out. He gets no pay except the pay of the reserve for naval volunteers and officers. That is the pay he gets.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the pay he gets under the existing law? Mr. SWANSON. No; not under existing law. They can get no pay higher than that of a lieutenant commander. If a captain wants to resign after he gets to a certain age, and he is not promoted and is passed over by the selection board, the next time he goes out of the Navy entirely. Now, instead of having him go out of the Navy entirely, or retiring him on three-fourths pay, he can go into the Naval Reserve.

There is a letter here from the Secretary of the Navy explaining the matter, and I think it will save money, so they say. In addition to that

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator allow the letter to be read?

Mr. SWANSON. I will. Let the letter from the Secretary of the Navy be read. The matter was referred to him. The committee considered it, and referred it to the Secretary of the letter will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, Washington, May 6, 1921,

Hon. CARROLL S. PAGE, Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

My Dear Senator: Replying further to the committee's letter inclosing a proposed amendment to the naval appropriation bill (H, R. 4803) providing for the transfer of officers of the Regular Navy to the Naval Reserve Force after 16 years' service, and requesting the department's views thereon, you are informed that the department heartily approves of the proposed legislation and recommends its enactment.

departments views theat the proposed legislation and recommends its energity approves of the proposed amendment is to transfer officers from the Regular Navy to the Naval Reserve Force, class 1, after not less than 16 years' service, permitting them to retain the rank in which they are transferred and granting them thereafter only the same privileges as to pay as are at present or may hereafter be allowed by law for officers of the Naval Reserve Force. The period of 16 years mentioned places the transfer of such officers under the same limitations as to time as are now in force for the transfer of enlisted men from the regular service to the Naval Reserve Force.

By permitting an officer to transfer under these circumstances it would avoid his resignation and actual severance from the service and would make him at all times subject to the same laws and regulations as now pertaining to the Fleet Naval Reserve; and the Government, therefore, for the outlay made, would have more and better control of the services of the officers so transferred than if they were allowed to resign to be appointed or enrolled in the Naval Reserve Force.

EDWIN DENEY,

Secretary of the Navy.

EDWIN DENBY, Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, for the last month I have been studying the question of the amount of money that the Government of the United States pays to retired officers of the Army, the Navy, and the Coast Guard.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, this is not a retired officer. He gets three-quarters pay. I think the Senator is right. The object is to lessen and get rid of that list, and I think it ought to be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I think this is a step toward the same thing. This is the first step. We will take it now, and they will all be in there in a very little while.

Mr. SWANSON. No; if the Senator will permit me, under the present law officers who resign can be put into the Naval Reserve, which they do, but they are not put in at the rank which they have. They can get no higher rank than that of a lieutenant commander. Let me explain to the Senator the only difference between this and the present law. It is not a retirement. I am opposed to any retirement. I think the list is entirely too large. I have always fought it.

At the end of four years an officer wants to resign from the Navy under the present law, after you have educated him. He is a captain, say. Under the present law he can resign from the Navy, and then he can enlist in the Naval Receive for four years, and he can not have any higher rank than that of a lieutenant commander. At the end of four years he can re-enlist or not reenlist in the reserve, as he sees proper. Now, I have an idea that after 16 years, when you have gone to the expense of educating a naval officer, you want to keep control

You spend money here to have a reserve. A great many of them you take from civil life. A great many of these men are anxious to continue their connection with the Navy if they can do it and keep their rank; and all that this amendment does is to transfer them, or their application, with the approval of the President-not retire them on three-fourths -to the reserve, where they get exactly the same pay that reservists get who come from civil life, no pay higher than that of a lieutenant commander. The only change is that they keep their rank. If a man is a captain when he is transferred to the reserve, he keeps his rank of captain. The department tells me that it will save money.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the department says it will save money, but it does not say how it will save money. Will the Senator explain that to a layman?

Mr. SWANSON. I will explain it. When an officer is retired the Government pays him three-fourths pay without his rendering any service, and a great many officers are retired. They ask to be retired, and they are examined, and more are retired than ought to be retired. They like to keep up their connection with the Navy. Now, here is an officer who is a captain. He has not passed the selection board. He has missed it twice, and he is retired from the Navy, and goes on the re-tired list with three-fourths pay. Under this amendment that captain could be put in the reserve as a captain, and all the pay he would get would be four months' pay for serving three months. That is, they call them out for 30 days. In order to be confirmed, to get over $12 a month, which is the pay for the reserve, this officer has to be called out and serve in the Navy 30 days, three months in four years. Even if he is a captain, he can not get any higher pay under the reserve than that of a lieutenant commander. For that 30 days' service he would get the pay of a lieutenant commander, which he gets under the present law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do know that there is no officer of the Navy or the Army who is ever proposing legislation that is going to save any money. That I do know. know about the details of this matter, but I think before the Senate votes upon it we had better understand it a little more than we do.

Mr. SWANSON. I shall be glad to answer any questions the Senator has to ask me.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator this question: Is not the same thing true as to retired officers, that they can be called into service at any time? Mr. SWANSON. They can be called into service, but while they are not called into service you pay them three-fourths pay at all times.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that. Mr. SWANSON. The difference between the two propositions is that under this amendment you pay them one month's pay a year.

Mr. FLETCHER. How much does the reserve officer get?

How much is the reserve pay?

Mr. SWANSON. He gets $12 a year as a reservist. Then he has to be confirmed. In four years he has to give three months' service. They pay him for his service, while he is on active duty, the same as they do in the reserve. This simply makes it discretionery to put officers in the reserve after 16 years of service.

Mr. SMOOT. It does not in any way affect an officer who desires to serve his time. If he has served 16 years, and has arrived at the age of retirement, he will retire and go on the retired list-

Mr. SWANSON. Of course, that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. Because he has every advantage that the man now would have if he went into the reserve, so we would never save a dollar there; and there is some advantage to a man who serves 16 years and wants to leave the Government service and go into some business and hold some kind of connection with the Navy Department, so that he can come back into the service if, perchance, he desires to do so.

Mr. SWANSON. That is true.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all there is to it.
Mr. SWANSON. No; the Senator is right about that; but here is a captain who wants to resign. After 16 years they never refuse to accept his resignation, as a rule.

That is right; let him go out of the service. Mr. SMOOT.

Mr. SWANSON. In that case his pay stops; but the Navy would like to have, in time of emergency, the right to order that man into active service. Let him be in the reserve. Keep him available. He is educated. He is a good naval man. Let him come out and practice 30 days every year, take 36 drills, and pay him exactly the same as they pay 'he reservists that come from civil life—no more. The same law applies to him, and he is subject to the orders of the Navy. Then in time of war, in emergency, you do not have to ask him to come back after he has resigned and we say we will not accept his resignation. You order him back; you command him to come back; you have control of him. Some of these men are among the best men in the Navy. You have absolute control of them, and I think we ought to do it.

An officer comes and says, "I want to resign." "We are not going to accept your resignation. You want to go into business; that is all right; we will transfer you to the reserve.'

Mr. BORAH. And keep him on the pay roll.

Mr. SWANSON. We do not keep him on the pay roll.

Mr. SMOOT. That is where he will land.
Mr. SWANSON. No; that is a mistake. You do not keep him on the pay roll. If he retires, he is on the pay roll. The only thing you do is to transfer him to the reserve, like the reservists that come from civil life. You pay him no more and no less. The amendment says that he shall have no compensation except what is given to members of the reserve.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Virginia to the fact that if this amendment is to be considered, it is not in order now. offered as an amendment to an amendment to the bill which has already been adopted. The Senator had better propose to put it into the bill at some other point, where it will be in order so far as the bill itself is concerned. I suggest that it be offered to come in after line 22, on page 16, as an amendment to the bill, and not as an amendment to an amendment to the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. Very well; I offer it there.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question? He says that the pay of these naval reservists is only $12 a month.

Mr. SWANSON. Twelve dollars initiation fee-not $12 a month; $12 for the year. Then, when they practice, you pay For instance, they have 36 drills a year. have to practice three months out of four years.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What do they get paid for that?

Mr. SWANSON. They get two months' pay for the drills and for the cruises they have, which about covers the time they are in the Navy

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator explain why in his bill here the retainer pay and active-service pay of members of the Naval Reserve Force, which the House put in at $7,000,000, has been raised to $12,000,000? It seems to me that is a very big item, and it seems to me that that must indicate that there is very large employment of these Naval Reserves.

Mr. SWANSON. We have a very good Naval Reserve.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that we have a large Naval Reserve, and we have a large Army reserve. I can not say as to how good they are.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It seems to me this comes back to the point I made yesterday.

Mr. SWANSON. The only question is, when a naval officer resigns or when a naval officer is willing to go into the fleet reserve, Is it wise to give him permission to do so with the rank he has? Not any higher pay, because they can not get any higher pay than that of a lieutenant commander. can take people from civil life now. The only question is as to whether naval officers whose resignations you are going to accept on the condition that they go into the reserve, or whether naval officers who want to go out of the Navy, can have the same privileges in the fleet reserve, simply keeping their rank. The officer can go in there now. The question is whether he shall be in there as a captain or as a lieutenant commander. He can not be any higher than a lieutenant commander.

That is what the amendment does. It allows them when they are transferred to the naval reserve to have the rank they have in the Navy, with no higher pay than that of a lieutenant commander.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator's amendment apply to cases only where officers propose to resign from the service?

Mr. SWANSON. It applies only to cases where they make an application, with the consent of the President. Then the President can transfer them to the Naval Reserve with the rank they had in the Navy, but not increasing the pay to a rate any higher than the present rate, and the highest rank they can hold is that of lieutenant commander. That is the only change in the law.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Are there any considerable number of officers who resign while in full service?

Mr. SWANSON. Capt. Palmer, one of the best men in the Navy, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, resigned and accepted a place outside, but he afterwards went into the Naval Reserve as a lieutenant commander. He is now in that force as a lieutenant commander. I will state how it operates in his case.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is not answering my question.

Mr. SWANSON. I will answer it; I am just giving the Senator one example. The effect of this amendment would be to make it so that Capt. Palmer would be transferred to the Naval Reserve as a captain, subject to the orders of the department at all times, at precisely the same pay a naval reservist gets who enters from private life, as a great many of them do. Then he would all the time be subject to orders and get no higher pay. It does not increase his pay. There are a great many applications. The usual course is that those of lower rank, after they have served eight years, resign and their resignations are accepted. I think they are accepting too many resignations, after the Government has educated the men. This amendment would make them serve 16 years before their resignation would be accepted.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Are there many resignations; and if so, how many?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not know how many there are. I know that there are many pending in the department. There are less pending now than there were six months ago; but at those times when business is good and very attractive they are pending in large numbers.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the resignation of an officer is accepted, that ends the expense of the Government, as far as that officer is concerned, does it not?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes; and they get another officer in his place, Mr. HITCHCOCK. Under the Senator's amendment the officer who went on the reserve list would not only get the retainer every year but if called into active service he would get full pay?

Mr. SWANSON. Under the present law, any officer who resigns can apply and be appointed at his present rank.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He would get the full pay, then, when

Mr. SWANSON. The reserve officer always gets full pay, not exceeding the pay of a lieutenant commander, when called out.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. For how many months? Mr. SWANSON. For two months a year.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That item which the House put in at $7.000.000 the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate raised to $12,000,000, and this amendment will make that item still larger in future years.

Mr. SWANSON. No; it does not increase the pay at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is this item of $12,000,000? It was $7,000,000 in the bill as it passed the House, and now the Senate has raised it to $12,000,000, and it seems to me the Sena-tor's amendment would make it obligatory to raise it to a still higher figure in the future bills.

Mr. SWANSON. It reads:

Retainer pay and active-service pay of members of the Naval Reserve Force, $12,810,222.

There are always deficiencies in that item. The law fixes certain conditions under which they shall come in, just as they have a fixed number of men.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator is mistaken in that. The number of reserves called out each year depends upon the judgment and policy of the Navy Department.

Mr. SWANSON. No; there is the retainer pay of $12 a year, and you do not get a cent more than that unless you have 36 drills a year. Then you enlist for four years, and you have a cruise of three months in the four years. When that is confirmed you get the pay of two months, because you really have about two months' active service.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator will not claim that is any small item. It is $12,000,000. That can not certainly be for paying a man $12 a year. That involves full pay for a good many officers and men, evidently.

Mr. SWANSON. This does not apply to officers alone. This is for the entire Naval Reserve. It covers all the ranks and places

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand. Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask the Senator if these officers of the Navy are retired and become members of the Naval Reserve Force, what privileges do they have in the way of the use of a commissary?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not think they have any such privilege. Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know that they have not?

Mr. SWANSON. I am satisfied that they have not. I do not think any but regular naval officers have those privileges, though I could not answer definitely.

Mr. SMOOT. I think if the Senator will look it up he will find that the case is different from what he thinks.

Mr. SWANSON. They try to run the commissaries at cost, anyway.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly aware that they charge 10 per cent over and above the cost of the goods, and that 10 per cent is supposed to cover the cost of maintaining the commissary. But why should we give an officer who desires to retire from the service after 16 years' service the privilege of buying from the commissary? Why should he expect that privilege?

Mr. SWANSON. They have that privilege now. Any officer who resigns from the Navy can enlist in the reserve. He can not enlist at a rank any higher than that of lieutenant commander. The only change made by this amendment is to allow him to have the rank of captain or higher.

The amendment affects only those who are captains or higher. Any officer who resigns to-day can go into the Naval Reserve. So you do not give him any privilege he does not already possess. The only difference it makes is to provide that if an officer retires with the rank of captain, he keeps his rank; but it does not change the pay. He is still a captain in the reserve. If a captain in the Navy were to resign to-morrow, he could go into the Naval Reserve, but he could not go in at a rank higher than that of lieutenant commander, and the pay of that rank is the highest pay that he could get now. Under this amendment he could be appointed in the reserve at the rank which he held in the Navy, as a captain or any higher rank, but he would get no higher pay than that of a lieutenant commander. It does not change the pay at all. There is no change of the law except in that regard. If the Senate thinks a man who is a captain in the Navy, and serves as a captain in the reserves, should get no higher pay than that of a lieutenant commander—because we do not pay retired officers a salary higher than that of a lieutenant commander—that is all right. This amendment only affects that matter. It affects nothing except that. He shall be transferred at the rank he holds. That is all there is to it.

Mr. SMOOT. There is another provision in this proposed amendment I would like to have the Senator explain. It reads:

Provided, That any officer of the Navy having not less than 16 years of active service since date of first commission or warrant—

And so forth.

Does that mean that an officer who had served 10 years following his first commission and had left the service, then had come into the service again and served for 6 years, could, under this provision, be considered as having served 16 years?

Mr. SWANSON. No; it means 16 years continuous service.

Mr. SMOOT. It does not say that.
Mr. SWANSON. Let the word "continuous" be inserted there, because that is what is intended.

Mr. SMOOT. It seems to me that it is worded in such a way as to show that that was not intended.

Mr. SWANSON. It is plain. The only point is the question of rank. I will read it for the Senator. It reads:

Provided, That any officer of the Navy having not less than 16 years of active service-

You can change that to read, "16 years of continuous active service," because I think that ought to be in there—since the date of first commission or warrant-

Some of these officers started as warrant officers, and others as privates may, with the approval of the President, be transferred on his own application to the United States Naval Reserve Force, class one, in the rank held by such officer on the date of transfer.

That is really the only change from the present law. The present law provides that they can not get any higher pay than that of a lieutenant commander. This reads:

Provided further, That an officer so transferred shall receive only such pay as is now or may hereafter be allowed by law for officers of the United States Naval Reserve Force.

Mr. SMOOT. He takes the chance of having a law passed which would pay him three-quarters pay or half pay or onequarter pay

Mr. SWANSON. No; not the retired officers.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes.
Mr. SWANSON. It is simply the reserve pay. The only difference is that if a captain, an admiral, or a commander resigns from the Navy he is transferred to the Naval Reserve as a lieutenant commander. This simply allows him to go into the Naval Reserve with the rank he had in the Regular Navy, but with no higher pay. We simply desire to have them keep the rank, with no higher pay.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. How about those officers who have had the rank of captain, say, who have enlisted in the Naval Reserve and who only have the rank of lieutenant commander? Will they be favored also?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not think this would cover their cases, because they were transferred upon their own application. The law did not at that time allow them to be given rank higher than that of lieutenant commander.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The next thing we know they will be asking that they be commissioned in the grades occupied by them in the Regular Navy.

Mr. SMOOT. Why should they not?

Mr. SWANSON. If they were captains in the Navy they are certainly competent to be captains in the reserve. It seems to me that anyone who has been a captain in the Regular Navy is competent to be a captain in the Naval Reserve.

May I inquire of the Senator, suppose the re-Mr. KING. serve officers should be requisitioned, would the rank they bear in the reserve determine their rank in the new service to which they may be called; or, rather, would not their rank be determined by their capacity, competency, and the duties assigned to them, regardless of the rank which they held in the reserve? Let me illustrate: Suppose that under the present law an admiral should retire and be placed upon the reserve-if we can conceive of such a thing-a war should break out, and under the law he should be called back into the service. He is retired and goes into the reserve as a captain or lieutenant commander. When he is called back he might be assigned to the command of a squadron. The Senator does not mean to state that the title which he had in the reserve would determine the station and title which he would have when he was put back into active duty?

Mr. SWANSON. If he was a captain in the reserve and he is called into regular duty, he would come into the Navy as a captain. Under the present law he could not come in with any higher rank than that of lieutenant commander, if he resigned. There would be no power to commission him higher than as a lieutenant commander.

I was illustrating my point by the case of Capt. Palmer. Capt. Palmer, who is one of the best men in the Navy, was the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, and he resigned. If he were ordered back into the Navy, he would come back as a lieutenant commander. If this amendment is adopted, he would be called back as a captain. That is all there is to this.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator if there is any difference in this regard between the Navy and the Army? I have in mind now a man who resigned from the Army who was a captain, a graduate of West Point, and went into the practice of When the Great War broke out he immediately cause to Washington and entered the Army, and was commissioned as a brigadier general because of his ability and his competency.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That was a temporary grade.

Mr. KING. They did not go back to ascertain what rank he held when he resigned from the Army. If a man resigns from the Navy before the retirement age, enters the reserve, and a war breaks out and they need him, and he is competent to handle a squadron, it seems to me that he could be given a rank entitling him to occupy such a position. The law certainly is elastic enough to authorize that.

Mr. SWANSON. You can not do it under the law. That is the reason why we need this amendment. Then the law ought to be changed. Mr. KING.

Mr. SWANSON. Unless you go through a regular course at the Naval Academy you can not get into the Navy as a com-missioned officer. When we provided for the reserve we stipulated that no officer in the reserve should hold a rank higher than that of lieutenant commander. Take the case of Capt. Palmer, who is a lieutenant commander in the Naval Reserve now. If this amendment had been in effect when he retired from active service, he would now be a captain, and when ordered in the Navy he would come in as an officer with no higher pay than that of the grade he was occupying while in the reserve.

Mr EMOOT. Mr. President, I want simply to say that as a result of my investigation of the law which was passed, affecting the Public Health Service particularly, little amendments have frequently been offered to appropriation bills which did not seem to amount to anything on their face, and no one thought they ever would be taken advantage of, but they were written with a view of covering up really what was intended. The result has been that it has cost the Government of the United States tens and hundreds of thousands of dollars.

I am fearful of this, and in the future I am going to watch the retirement business and the promotions if I can, and know before they are agreed to, so far as I can, just what is going to happen. I frankly say that under this amendment I do not know just what is going to happen, and unless the Senator wishes to withdraw the amendment until I can make an investigation of it I must make a point of order against it at this

Mr. SWANSON. I shall wait until later and let the Senator look into it.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to know more than I do now what it is going to lead to. I believe with all my soul that it is brought here for the purpose of giving an advantage to some people who have been in the service and who want to get out of the service. If they can do better out of the service than in the service, they would have this provision to fall back on.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I may be out of the Chamber when the amendment is voted on, and therefore I desire to make a point of order against it now, if the Senator from Utah does not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Jones of Washington in the chair). The amendment has been withdrawn and is not pending

Mr. KING. For information, while it is not relevant to any matter now pending, I inquire of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] if he possesses the information whether retired officers, whether they have resigned or have retired and get retired pay, have the advantage of buying their supplies from the Government; in other words, do they have the advantage of the commissary department?

Mr. HALE. They have no such advantage. Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator from Maine say that retired officers have not this advantage?

Mr. HALE. The resigned officers have not. Mr. KING. Do retired officers have it?

Mr. HALE. Retired officers have that privilege.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from New York

[Mr. Wadsworth] if that is true as to the Army?

Mr. WADSWORTH. My recollection is that retired officers who happen to live in the neighborhood of an Army post where a commissary sales store is maintained may make their purchases at that commissary sales store, but that does not mean that all retired officers of the Army by any means may take advantage of any such privilege, because they are scattered all over the country and most of them are hundreds of miles from an Army post. It costs the Government nothing. They pay cash for what they purchase.

Mr. KING. I am not so sure about that. I do not have the figures here, but some information has been furnished me showing the additional expenses resulting to the Government in the way of overhead, in increasing the amount of supplies kept on hand, clerk hire, civilian hire, and so forth, incident to furnishing commissary advantages to retired officers of the Navy and the Army. I know nothing about the matter, but if retired officers or officers who have resigned are getting the advantages of the commissary department, I think it is wrong.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator, of course, knows that an officer who has resigned from either service has no privilege of Mr. KING. I am glad to know that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would be impossible to give them such a privilege.

Mr. KING. Through adroit amendments sometimes offered to appropriation bills, and especially to Army and Navy appropriation bills, not by Congressmen and Senators wittingly, but by reason of the efforts of those proposing the legislation who claim some advantages through that legislation, I am not so sure but that the Government has been compelled to assume many obligations and responsibilities which in justice ought not to have been placed upon it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I invite the careful scrutiny of the Senator from Utah to the Army legislation with respect to any person who resigns from the Army having any privilege whatsoever. I also invite the Senator's careful scrutiny to the amendment that has just been withdrawn, for if the Senator from Utah desires to reduce the number of retired officers in the Navy he will vote for that amendment.

Mr. KING. I am not so sure whether that would be advantageous. There are so many of these amendments suggested by officers who have retired or want to retire from the Army and the Navy or by persons having some peculiar or special interest, the effect of which no one can anticipate in advance, that the situation calls for a very careful examination when such amendments are tendered, before the Senate or House of Representatives accepts them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the next amendment passed over.

The Assistant Secretary. On page 58, the committee proposes to add as a new section section 16.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that is an amendment in which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] is interested. and he is now out of the Chamber. May I say, however, that the Senator in charge of the bill called my attention to a point of order which I raised upon another matter? Upon what page does that appear?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Page 37, changing the statutory limit of $300,000 for repairs and changes to capital ships to $500,000.

Mr. BORAH. I wish that the Senator briefly would state the facts in regard to the purpose of that amendment, so that there may appear in the RECORD what the object is and what the situation or condition is with reference to the completion of these ships and why it is necessary to change the statutory

Mr. POINDEXTER. The necessity of it arises out of the enormously increased size and cost of vessels. The original act, of August 29, 1916, limited the authority for making repairs upon capital ships to $300,000. The result of that is that on a battleship which costs $30,000,000 the department would not be authorized to expend any more than $300,000 upon repairs.

The object is to increase the $300,000 limit to $500,000 upon the great, new capital ships of the Navy, to give discretion to the Bureau of Construction and Repair, under the Secretary of the Navy, in proper cases, to make repairs upon those vessels, but not exceeding that amount.

Mr. BORAH. At the present time the limit of the amount of repairs on the capital ships is $300,000?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is $300,000 and it is now proposed to increase it to $500,000.

Mr. BORAH. I withdraw the point of order. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to suggest that the clerks at the desk inform him that a point of order was made to the amendment and the Chair sustained it; so that the amendment is out. The best way to reach it, the Chair will suggest, will be for the acting chairman of the committee to offer it when the bill gets into the Senate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I shall pursue that course

Mr. KING. Mr. President, apropos of that, if the Senator will pardon me, I should like to inquire of the Senator whether or not this amendment is to cover the cost of repairs to the Tennessee, for instance. The Tennessee has been in commission one year. It was supposed to be ready for service, and advertisements have been made of tests to be made, and the newspapers seem to have been employed to convey the idea that it was a grand success. My information is that in the Tennessee for one year the machinery has been defective, and that this amendment is for the purpose of enabling the department to make amends in mechanical construction of the vessels where there are manifest defects-defects which have been the result of improper devices or improper mechanical skill.

I should like to inquire of the Senator whether the experience on the Tennessee and other boats has not demonstrated imperfect electrical appliances and imperfect electrical systems, especially with respect to the drive shaft?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Tennessee had some difficulty by going aground in the navy yard waters at New York, but I have no information that its machinery is defective. On the contrary, my information is that its machinery is very excellent.

The purpose of the amendment is very simple. Of course, it would apply to the Tennessee as well as to any other ship, and the question is simply this, regardless of how the condition may have been created: We have a ship that is worth $30,000,000 and we find that certain changes or certain repairs are necessary to that ship which will cost $500,000. At present the law does not authorize the expenditure. As a matter of economical business prudence it seems to be obvious that they ought to be authorized in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. The limit is now $300,000, and the purpose of the amendment is to raise the limit to $500,000.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator that even if there is a limitation of $300,000 for repairs, if larger repairs are necessary they should be made, and the limitation should be raised, but I wish to call attention to a statement which was made in a Rockland, Me., press dispatch of May 16:

The battleship Tennessee, America's latest word in fighting ships, went into Penobscot Bay to-day to begin her trial runs. These tests, twice postponed by major machinery mishaps since the Tennessee was commissioned nearly a year ago and delayed again last week by a burned-out motor, were threatened to-day by further difficulties by unfavorable weather conditions. * * The runs set for to-day in-runde tests of all propellers at speeds ranging from 8 to 15 knots and of inboard and outboard propellers at from 12 knots to maximum speed. The battleship was built to make a speed of 21 knots.

I inquire what is the matter with the Tennessee? What has been the matter with her during the year she has been unable to run after having been commissioned? What is the matter with her motors? What is the matter with her drive shaft? What is the matter with the machinery of the Tennessce? Let me inquire, by way of parenthesis, and I shall talk about that a little later, what is the matter with some of the machinery in some of our submarines?

My information is that electric-drive machinery of the same make as that installed in the Tennessec is being provided for the Massachusetts, the Lexington, the Constellation, the Saratoga, the Ranger, the Constitution, and the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can not give the Senator detailed information about the electric-drive machinery of those capital ships, but I have general information that some defects were found. At first it was not known what caused them. Upon investigation they found those defects were due to a very simple cause, which was easily removable and which was removed, and that subsequently the electric-drive machinery of the ships worked with great success.

Mr. KING. This ship was commissioned one year ago. There were major machinery difficulties, not minor. Tests have been made twice and the ship failed, as I am advised. There seems to be something inherently wrong in the mechanism or in the design, yet we propose to put the same kind of machinery, the same driving system, into the boats the names of which I have just furnished to the Senate.

At a later time I shall offer an amendment the effect of which will be that until it has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of the President that the propelling machinery can provide the maximum battle speed contemplated by the contracts for capital ships those ships shall not be accepted and payment shall not

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator state the date of the newspaper dispatch from Rockland, Me.?

Mr. KING. May 16.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of this year?

Mr. KING.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It so happened that I was on board the battleship Tennessee in Hampton Roads about the middle of March, and while I am a perfect amateur about all that kind of machinery, the situation was explained to me at some length. One of the motors was burned out during the maneuvers in Cuban waters. The ship came back in advance of the fleet under her own power, being driven by two of her propellers instead of by four. It was then being discussed where she would be repaired. She has since been repaired.

On a visit to the fleet the other day, at the time when the fleet arrived at Hampton Roads, I was informed by officers, who certainly ought to know what they are talking about, that the Tennessee is in first-class condition and is able to meet any requirement made of her. Further than that, officers of the Tennessee and other naval officers with whom I discussed this very matter-because I regarded it as somewhat serious-said that it would be perfect folly to abandon the electric drive, which is the best in the world.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Tennessec was built at the New York Navy Yard by the Government. It was commissioned in 1920, and has gone through its trial test success-Only recently it was reinspected by a board of inspection of the Navy Department and found to be in excellent condition. In a week, or approximately that time, it will leave for the Pacific coast to join the Pacific Fleet. I am informed by Admiral Taylor that the motors were furnished by the Westinghouse Co.; that some minor difficulty was discovered in the operation of the motors; that that was remedied, but that it was remedied at the expense of the Westinghouse Co. under their contract, and that the repairs in that instance would not in any way come within the expenditure referred to in the amendment which was suggested a moment ago.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I, of course, confess to having no knowledge of shipbuilding, and I have to rely upon statements made by others, but my information is—

Mr. LODGE. Who is the officer who makes that statement?

Mr. KING. I do not care to say.

Mr. LODGE. We have anonymous officers paraded up and

We have anonymous officers paraded up and down here, and I thought as a matter of curiosity that I should like to know who he is.

Mr. KING. I think if the Senator from Massachusetts, in alluding to any officers being paraded, has reference to me, he is entirely in error.

Mr. LODGE. I should not have asked except for the fact I thought the Senator was reading from a newspaper.

Mr. KING. No; I was not reading from a newspaper. Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator said he was quoting from a Rockland newspaper.

Mr. KING. What I was reading was taken from a newspaper. Mr. LODGE. That is what I thought.

Mr. KING. A part of what I stated was taken from a newspaper; it is a newspaper item that the tests had been "twice postponed by major machinery mishaps since the Tennessee was commissioned nearly a year ago."

Mr. LODGE. I have heard the paragraph read. Where was it published?

Mr. KING. At Rockland, Me., May 16. Mr. LODGE. Is the Tennessee there?

Mr. KING. All I know is what the statement says, and my information is that it was there

Mr. LODGE. At Rockland, Me.?

Mr. KING. No; at Penobscot Bay. The article states:

The battleship Tennessee, America's latest word in fighting ships, went into Penobscot Bay to-day to begin her trial runs.

Mr. LODGE. That item is dated May 16 of this year?

Mr. KING. Does the Senator say that the Tennessee has not been in commission for a year?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; I am not denying that, Mr. KING. Does the Senator say that the driving mechanism of the ship has not been out of commission?

Mr. LODGE. I know there was an accident to the motor head, which has been repaired. There are occasional accidents to machinery.

Mr. KING. Oh, I presume so. The Senator does not furnish any information to the Senate when he makes that observation, though he may deem it very trite and very wise.

Mr. LODGE. I was not trying to furnish any information.

That is furnished by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I was inquiring of the Senator from Massachusetts, if he is familiar with this matter, whether or not the Tennessee did not fail upon two occasions in the trial tests?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know. I was asking for the Senator's authority for his statement and who the officer was who made the statement.

The statement that I have just read about the Mr. KING.

Tennessee failing twice was in a newspaper.

Mr. LODGE. Exactly, The Senator's authority is a Rockland, Me., newspaper.

Mr. KING. And I am asking the Senator from Massachusetts, who is a distinguished member of the Naval Affairs Committee, if the information conveyed in the newspaper is wrong?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know; I am trying to find out. I have a strong suspicion that the test of the Tennessee did not take place at Rockland, Me., but I may be wrong.

Mr. KING. If the Senator had listened, he would have known that the newspaper stated that it was in Penobscot Bay.

Mr. LODGE. The test of the Tennessee? Mr. KING. I did not hear the Senator's observation.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wanted to know what the newspaper

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the date of the communication from which the Senator from Utah has read, may I ask?

Mr. KING. I have read the statement three times, but I will read it again:

Rockland, Me., May 16-

Mr. LODGE. Is that May 16 of this year? Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the year?

Mr. KING. It is this year.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The ship was commissioned a year ago. Mr. KING. I understand that. Let me read the statement again, in order that the Senator may not misapprehend it. Mr. BORAH. I think we should send for the Senator from

Mr. KING. The article reads:

The battleship Tennessee, America's latest word in fighting ships, went into Penobscot Bay to-day to begin her trial runs. These tests, twice postponed by major machinery mishaps since the Tennessee was commissioned nearly a year ago, and delayed again last week by a burned-out motor, were threatened to-day by further difficulties by unfavorable weather conditions. It was thought be naval observers that Capt. Leigh would be able to put the Tennessee through most of her prescribed runs, although possibly unable to complete the day's schedule of 26 tests.

The runs set for to-day include tests of all propellers at speeds

The runs set for to-day include tests of all propellers at speeds ranging from 8 to 15 knots and of inboard and outboard propellers at from 12 knots to maximum speed. The battleship was built to make a

My information is that this battleship, though it was commissioned a year ago, because of major defects in machinery was unable to meet the maximum requirements of the contract; that there were defects in the motor and defects in the drive; and that it has taken one year after it was commissioned to prepare it to make the final test. I am not now sure whether it has made the test showing the maximum speed during a given length of time. It is very clear that a machine may respond for a few minutes or for a few hours to a high speed, a maximum speed, but may fail if it is required to respond for the Tennessee, whether the mechanism had lived up to its an indefinite period or for a reasonable period, one which is necessary in order to show ability to meet the maximum test which it will be called upon to meet.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What conclusion does the Senator from Utah draw from his information and what is his proposition in regard to the matter?

Mr. KING. I offered that as supporting the proposition made by the Senator to increase the appropriation for repairs from $300,000 to $500,000. It is obvious that, if we are going to have many failures of this character, we will have to increase the amount from $300,000 to $500,000, and I was wondering whether or not in the new ships, which are to have the same maximum speed requirements and the same drive, provision had been made or was being made to obviate the difficulties and the defects that existed in the Tennessee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will say to the Senator that provisions are being made to obviate those difficulties. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the amendment we are discussing in the Senate is not an appropriation, but an extension of the limit of authority to expend money for repairs upon ships from $300,000 to $500,000 as a maximum limit.

Mr. KING. I understand that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, the practical question would arise, which I have heretofore stated, whatever may have been the cause of the defects, or whatever may create the necessity for a change, whether or not in the interest of economy and good business, following principles that anyone in a similar situation to the Government would follow, there ought to be authority to incur, when it is necessary, expenses for repairs up to that maximum amount.

Now, as to the electric-drive question-Mr. KING. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. POINDEXTER. In just a moment I will yield. I understood the Senator to say that he was not objecting to that, but as to the Tennessee and as to the electric drive the Senator is misinformed as to the failure of the Tennessee upon her trial tests. The Tennessee has been given her trial tests and has passed them very successfully and, as I stated a moment ago, is fully equipped and ready for service and is about to leave for the Pacific coast.

As to the electric drive generally, my information is that instead of being a failure it is a remarkable success. In my judgment the ships of the United States Navy have been put ahead of any other ships of their class in the world because of having this improved system of propulsion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was about to say that I have no objection to the amendment which increases the limit from $300,000 to $500,000; indeed, I think it would be false economy for the Government to restrict repairs to $300,000 if by adding another $100,000 or $200,000 a useless vessel may be converted into a valuable fighting machine.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no fault to find at all with the Senator's criticisms. I think they do good. I think that any information whatever that can be obtained, or even any tentative suggestion as to defects in ships, or as to the failure of construction or of plans, ought to be brought out in the open and discussed. It is bound to have a good effect.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator, and na I agree with the Senator, and naval officers and naval constructors-I wish to make this statement for their benefit—must not exhibit too much tenderness of feeling. are spending the people's money; they must give an account of their stewardship, and if defects appear in their work they will be subject to criticism, and they should be criticized.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is correct, and I think they welcome criticism. I have no brief on their part; my interest in the matter is identical with that of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I understand that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But the Senator from Utah is too experienced a lawyer not to appreciate the importance of getting at the real facts of the case and to weigh the testimony in ac-cordance with its character. What we want to ascertain about such a subject as that which he is now discussing is what the real facts are, and in order to do that we would have to go a great deal further than the information which the Senator has in hand enables us to go; we would have to examine into the minute details of the machinery and the exact character of the defects, if any.

Mr. KING. I entirely agree with my distinguished friend, but I was wondering whether the committee had information as to the wisdom of continuing the present mechanical devices on guaranties and its former reputation, and whether it was wise, in view of the fact that one year had elapsed from the time that vessel was commissioned until the final tests were made, during which time tests had been made which had failed, to put into the new vessels being constructed the same mechanical devices. I have called the attention of the committee to it, and I have no doubt the naval board's attention will be challenged

Mr. POINDEXTER. The remarks of the Senator will aid in that direction, but they have been challenged to it, and, as I have stated before, most of the defects which were foundand it is not unnatural that to a certain extent in actual operation there should develop defects in complicated machinerywere found to be due not to any fundamental cause at all but to some very trivial fault in mechanical arrangement, such as too close contact with some part of the ship which interfered with the operation of the machinery in one case, as I recollect; so that simply by increasing the distance so as to give free play the defect is entirely removed. Of course, the defects to which the Senator refers which have already been corrected in the case of the Tennessee will not be repeated in the case of subsequent ships.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am glad to learn from the Senator that the Tennessee has remedied the defects, and made repairs, and measured up to the tests which were prescribed. In view of that information, unless I learn something to the contrary, I shall not offer the amendment which I intimated that I should offer, requiring that the President shall be satisfied with respect to these boats, before machinery of this character is put in them, that this machinery will measure up to the maximum tests and guaranties which are required.

ment of the committee to section 16.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] has two amendments to that section. I shall have to suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the committee known as section 16.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in section 16, on page 58, line 17, after the words "Marine Corps," I move to amend by inserting the words:

Who shall within one year after his appointment qualify as an air-craft pilot or observer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 58, line 17, after the words "Marine Corps" it is proposed to insert the words:

Who shall within one year after his appointment qualify as an aircraft pilot or observer.

So as to read:

There shall be a chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from the officers of the active list of the Navy or Marine Corps, who shall within one year after his appointment qualify as an aircraft pilot or chearent.

And so forth.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, my information is that the Secretary of the Navy and the Chief of the Bureau of Operations, who are responsible for the administration of such aeronautic service as the department has, approve this amendment. In so far as I am able to accept it, I do accept it. I should like to say that I understand there are some further mendments to be offered by the Senator from Wisconsin. Of course, provision ought to be made for a reasonable time to allow the officers who have charge of that service to comply with these requirements.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think my further amendments cover that Mr. POINDEXTER. In accepting it, I desire to say that many qualities besides that of being able to fly are required for the proper conduct of a bureau of the Navy, even though it be a bureau of aeronautics. A man might be a flyer and still be an egregious ass. In fact, I think there have recently been some instances of that kind. On the contrary, he might be a good administrator, very successful in the conduct of a branch of the Navy Department dealing with aeronautics, with all of its surface activities as well as those in the air, even though be might not be a flyer; but my understanding of the policy of the department is that all officers of the Navy should be flyers, and in accordance with that there is certainly no objection to making that a condition of the qualification of the Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics.

As an instance of the success of a bureau which is conducted by an officer who is not a flyer, as compared with one conducted by an officer who is a fiver, my information is that the aviation service of the Army is under the direction of an officer who is an actual flyer. Capt. Moffett, director of naval aviation, is not a flyer; and yet, as a comparison between the two services, in a test which has been arranged by the Navy Department in connection with the Army for determining the extent to which bombs can be dropped upon ships at sea, the Navy director of aviation proposes to send out bombing planes to make an effort to destroy the ship which is to be the target, whereas the Army aviation service, which is under the control of an officer who is qualified as a flyer, has declined to participate in the test. I understand that the Army people wanted the test to take place within 30 miles of the shore, whereas the Navy proposed that it should be 60 miles from the shore. Of course, the question of what is a reasonable distance from the shore for aviators to operate is a matter for those who are technically qualified in the service to determine; but it is perfectly evident that if they are going to be very effective in the destruction of enemy fleets, in case any such fleet should ever approach the shores of the United States, they ought to be able to go at least 60 miles from the shore.

I am simply calling attention to the fact that Navy aviators propose to operate at that distance, whereas the Army aviators, under control of a man who has been exploited a great deal as a flying officer, declines to participate in that test. Of course, we shall see what the results shall be in the tests, which I understand have been arranged to take place about the latter part of June.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment to section 16 which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 59, line 22, strike out the period after the word "Navy" at the end of section 16, replace it with a colon, and add the following:

Provided, That not to exceed 30 per cent of the officers in each grade below that of rear admiral who fall to qualify as aircraft pilots or as aircraft observers within one year after the date of their detail into the Bureau of Aeronautics shall be permitted to remain detailed in this bureau: Provided further, That flying units or detachments, with the exception of aircraft carriers or other vessels, shall in all cases be commanded by flying officers.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have some other amendments which I desire to submit, but I wish to offer some observations of a general character upon the bill before I proceed to do so.

Monday, May 16, 1921.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. President, on the 27th of April last the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] presented to the Senate, in a speech which he delivered here, a startling arraignment of the Government's neglect of the sick and disabled soldiers. The Senator gave us the facts which he had secured at first hand from a personal inspection of Federal hospitals provided for ex-service men in Massachusetts and elsewhere who were drafted and who volunteered to take part in the late war.

Sir, I recall that during the last session there was a protracted debate in this body, led by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson], to secure adequate appropriations to provide suitable hospital accommodations for the men who had gone out at the call of their Government in the late war. Members of the Committee on Appropriations and other Senators opposed and succeeded in defeating the necessary appropriations to provide hospital accommodations for the men who had been disabled and whose health had become broken in the service of their country. They contended that it was necessary for the Government to retrench, to curtail, to economize, and insisted that the soldiers and their friends were unduly persistent in pressing for relief; that we had a great war debt upon us; that taxes were very burdensome; that business conditions were bad; that it was necessary for us to repair the waste places; that it was vital to our future prosperity to reduce expenditures in every department and cut appropriations to the bone in every direction.

I see around me in this Chamber at this time, sir, Senators who voted to put us into this war. I see here Senators who will vote for this bill carrying $500,000,000 of appropriations in support of a plan to make the American Navy the largest navy of the world. I see all about me Senators who voted for a bill giving billions of gratuities to the railroads of this country, who vociferously proclaimed their patriotism when that seemed to be the popular thing to do, and demanded the crucifixion here and elsewhere throughout the country of every man who did not believe that it was a war to end war and to preserve democracy.

Within the sound of my voice are many Senators who will readily vote for $40,000,000 battleships, which will be out of date and ready to be scrapped by the time they are constructed, and who are either indifferent to or oppose and defeat every effort which is made in this body to obtain even the minimum of decent hospital treatment for the men broken and crushed by the hell of war.

The ex-service men were here at the last Congress asking for the passage of a soldiers' readjustment bill. Other bills were put ahead of it. Other bills are being put ahead of it at this session. It is said from time to time that in good season the soldiers will be cared for. Mayhap they will; but one thing is absolutely certain. Upon the facts as presented here to the United States Senate and to the country, they are not being properly cared for now.

Soldiers are suffering, are undernourished, are wanting medical treatment and medical care, are housed in places unfit for veterinary hospitals, are denied their insurance, their allow-ances, but the Senate finds an abundance of time to pass bills to reduce the taxes on wealth and vote bounties to the railroads.

ASK $500,000,000 FOR YEAR'S EXPENDITURES IN NAVY.

And now, Mr. President, we are confronted in this bill with a proposed appropriation of half a billion dollars for one year's expenditures in the Navy. In the face of admonitions from the Treasury Department that the taxable resources of this country are practically exhausted we have the spectacle of one of the great committees of the Senate engaged in conducting hearings with a view to exempting the wealth of this country from taxation and fastening upon our country a system that will further impose burdens upon the great mass of the people of the United The senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] the other day called upon some member or members of the Finance Committee to set forth the program of that committee to meet the conditions the Secretary of the Treasury had described in a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives.

LOADING THE TAX BURDEN ON THE BACKS OF THE PEOPLE.

I will say to him now that one of the plans is to repeal the excess-profits tax. Another of the plans upon which the Finance Committee of the Senate is working is the reduction of income taxes upon the higher incomes for the relief of the millionaires of the country.

Then, led by my colleague upon the committee, the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot], we are now conducting in the Finance Committee hearings the aim and object of which is to impose a turnover tax every cent of which is to be paid by the consumers of this country. It is the expressed hope of the advocates of that proposition that by imposing a turnover sales tax upon the burden bearers, the hewers of wood and the carriers of water, the great masses of the people of this country, they will be able to collect in the neighborhood of $2,000,000,000, and in that way relieve the war profiteers of the payment of excess-profits taxes and reduce the taxes upon the larger in-

Money must be had from somewhere to take care of approxi-mately the five billions of burden that is now laid upon the people of this country in order to maintain their Government, but plans are maturing to cast the bulk of that burden on the great mass of the toilers of this country.

Mr. President, I turn now to address myself to the pending

OUTLINE OF THE 1916 PROGRAM.

The 1916 program, adopted by Congress on August 29, 1916, provided the following naval plan:

A. Ten first-class battleships, 6 battle cruisers, 10 scout cruisers, 50 torpedo-boat destroyers, 9 fleet submarines, 58 coast submarines, 3 fuel ships, 1 repair ship, 1 transport, 1 hospital ship, 2 destroyers, 2 destroyer tenders, 1 fleet submarine, 2 ammunition ships, 2 gunboats.

B. One additional battleship had been authorized before the act of August 29, so that 11 battleships and 6 battle cruisers, making a total of 17 capital ships, are now under construction.

Let us see what has happened to that program. Contracts have been let for all vessels listed above, except 12 destroyers, 1 transport, and 6 sea-going submarines, which Admiral Coontz testifies will not be built at all.

I have figures here showing the state of completion of the 17 capital ships up to this time, as shown by the testimony taken before the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House and the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate, which I have undertaken to analyze with some care. Mr. President, without going into that in detail, I ask leave to print here, in connection with my remarks, just exactly the condition at which this program of 17 battleships has arrived as a building proposition up to the present hour, together with comments from Senator King's minority report.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF COMPLETION OF 17 CAPITAL SHIPS.

First group.

Name.	Where building	State of completion.	Ton- nage.	Horse- power.	Knots.

The above state of completion of the ships in this group is 71.46 per cent. These ships are of the superdreadnaught type, of approximately equal displacement, horsepower, and speed, and all except the California mount 16-inch guns. The California mounts 14-inch guns. Their completion would give the Navy 21 capital ships of the dreadnaught and superdreadnaught type of the most modern construction and effectiveness, which, with 21 second-class battleships now in commission, would give us a Navy of 42 battleships.

The average state of completion of the ships in this group is 15.53 per cent. These battleships are all designed to mount twelve 16-inch guns. They are over 10,000 tons heavier in displacement than the superdreadnaughts in the preceding class, have more than double the horsepower, and only a speed of 2 knots in excess of the five superdreadnaughts in the preceding class. There are no battleships or battle cruisers in the British Navy or the Japanese Navy of equal displacement and power.

THE COST OF COMPLETING THE 1916 PROGRAM.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Appropriations have already been made aggregating $538,270,000. This money has been spent to bring 10 battleships of the 1916 program to an average—an average, mark you—of 35.3 per cent completion; 6 battle cruisers to 5.28 per cent completion; and to complete 77 submarines destroyers, and miscellaneous craft, and to start the construction of 35 other subsidiary vessels.

Revised estimates now place the total cost of the program at $972,000,000. So that the minimum cost of completing these vessels would be in excess of $433,000,000, according to the Navy Department's figures. That is taking into account the amount of money that has been expended on them up to this time, and what it will cost to finish them.

Senators perfectly well understand that these figures are low, because the cost of 17 capital ships alone, at $40,000,000 each, would be $680,000,000. The Navy's figures do not include the cost of necessary naval bases, and auxiliary craft, which we must have to round out our fleet.

Senator King, in his minority report upon this bill as presented to the last Congress, estimated that to complete the 1916 program will cost $1,000,000,000 in addition to the $538,270,000 already appropriated.

GENERAL BOARD ALREADY HAS NEW BUILDING PROGRAM.

In addition to this staggering program, the General Board of the Navy recommended, on September 25, 1920, and Secretary Daniels urged the adoption of an additional three-year program of 88 vessels to supplement the 1916 program. The new program urged by the General Board consists of 3 battleships, 1 battle cruiser, 30 cruisers, 8 gunboats, 18 destroyers, 12 minelaying submarines, 6 cruiser submarines, 4 airplane carriers, 3 destroyer tenders, and 3 submarine tenders, the cost of which would far exceed $600,000,000.

There will be required for the operation of the vessels of the 1916 program an additional personnel of at least 25,000 men in the Navy, adding millions of dollars to the annual Navy budget. Requisitions of the Navy for the next fiscal year for maintenance only already amount to more than $500,000,000. The upkeep of the 18 capital ships under construction, including pay of men, coal, oil, repairs, and so forth, is about $3,000,000 per annum-just the upkeep-or $51,000,000 per annum for the maintenance or upkeep of the 17 vessels.

It is well for Senators to understand that we are not merely committed to the $500,000,000 that this Senate bill carries, we are being drawn into a scheme that expands with every turn of the wheel, and we are urged now to go forward, because if we were to retrench at this time by scrapping and destroying these vessels, some of which are only barely begun, we would waste all that has been invested. But, oh, how much better to waste the relatively little amount, large in itself but small when you contemplate what it drags after it, how much better, unless you are prepared to go the whole route, unless you are prepared to say that we are utterly hardened and indifferent to what the burdens of the people of this country shall be in taxation.

I am going to have something to say about those who are interested in this scheme of imposing these burdens upon the people of this country and what their power is and how that power secures the support of the parliaments of every country of the I shall be able to fasten upon members of parliament and officials in high places in all the countries of the world their direct pecuniary interest in building up these mighty armaments. I think some conclusions will naturally be deduced from those facts, if not by Senators, at least by the taxpayers of our own country.

Congress can save from half a billion to a billion dollars by refusing to complete the 1916 program authorized five years ago. Senator King's minority recommendation is as follows, somewhat condensed:

In my opinion the five battleships which are approaching completion should be completed.

He refers to five battleships whose average state of completion is 71.46 per cent. He further said:

Work upon the remaining battleships, six in number, should be at

He refers to six battleships whose average state of completion is only 15.53 per cent.

That makes up an issue for us to vote upon. I think I will make it clear that other Governments are not completing the programs which they adopted as long ago as we adopted this program; that they regard them as obsolete and the investment as waste; and that therefore, as to so much of the program as Senator King has indicated would be wasteful if completed, his judgment is borne out by the judgment of the British Admiralty and of other authorities in the world.

The last war demonstrated some things. It demonstrated a good many things that are worth while for us to take into account unless we feel an utter indifference as to our responsibilities to the public and choose instead to accept the suggestions of the great interests behind the making of armaments and munitions.

Senator King said further:

One cruiser should be completed, but the construction of the remaining five should be suspended, if not wholly discontinued.

All five of the battle cruisers upon which he urges work to be suspended or abandoned are less than 8 per cent advanced in construction. Commenting upon the saving this would effect, Senator King said:

If this plan was adopted there would be an immediate saving to the Government of between $450,000,000 and $500,000,000, and the ultimate saving would be very great, amounting to tens of millions of dollars annually.

Mr. REED. Mr. President-

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri. Mr. REED. For my information I desire to ask the Senator if there are outstanding contracts or commitments by the Government beyond the 15 per cent that is spoken of by Senator King in his report; that is to say, the statement is that these cruisers are completed or advanced to 15 per cent of construction, but does that 15 per cent cover contracts for material, contracts for work which may have been made, or are there contracts and obligations of the Government out in addition to the 15 per cent?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Upon that point his report is not detailed enough for me to make answer, and as I am not a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs I have to rely upon such testimony as the committee supplies. But as to the soundness of his suggestion, I think we have some evidence to support it by what Great Britain is doing with respect to her uncompleted contracts of about that same period of time.

Mr. REED. I was not criticizing; I was merely asking for

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, I understand. Senator King conclusively shows that by suspending building for the present, millions of dollars would be saved by reduction from present high levels of cost of material, more than offsetting the estimated loss of $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 which the majority report declares would follow suspension. I suppose, perhaps, that fifteen or twenty million dollars additional might be the estimated of the majority as to the obligations which relative mate of the majority as to the obligations which existing contracts would require us to assume if they were canceled. even at that the plan suggested by the minority report would be a very great saving to the Government. The report con-

Another feature that should be taken into account in determining whether or not there should be a suspension of actual work under the 1916 program is that the cost of construction is very much greater now than it will be within the next two or three years. The contracts let for their construction are based on the high levels established during and immediately after the war. Those high cost levels operate as a disturbing factor in all industrial circles. They affect everything else that is going on in the country. They are impediments to economic readjustment and obstacles to a return to sound and just economic conditions. The contracts are upon the cost-plus plan or system, which has proven in practice to make for the grossest waste and extravagance. If we were to pay all the excess damages resulting from cancellation of those contracts and make them over again on a reasonable and just business basis, I have little doubt it would be a good investment for the Government.

I submit, in addition, that if a suspension of the construction of the entire program would recult in a loss of $25,000,000 the gains would be very much more. In the first place, the cost of construction at a later period will be materially diminished. Within a year it would be reduced from 25 to 50 per cent, and suspension of work upon the entire program for six months, even if work were resumed upon every ship, would save the Government, in my opinion, considerably more than $100,000,000. A number of ships, it will be remembered, are being constructed in Government, in my opinion, considerably more than $100,000,000. A number of ships, it will be remembered, are being constructed in Government yards, and the loss there from suspension of work would be unimportant.

I have here just a few notes of what England has done. Be-

I have here just a few notes of what England has done. Before the war Great Britain authorized a building program of four battle cruisers of the Hood type. Keels of three vessels were laid, and I quote from Senator King's report:

At the end of the war the British Admiralty scrapped the three keels, notwithstanding $8,170,000 had been expended in work upon them.

This action was taken deliberately by the British Admiralty. Undoubtedly their position was influenced, if not controlled, by the experiences and lessons of the war, and yet in the face of the fact that the British Admiralty scrapped the keels of three battle cruisers upon which there was an average outlay of $2,733,333 each, our General Board is now laying the keels and proceeding with the construction of six battle cruisers, and insists that there be no suspension of work, although the money actually laid out is much less than that expended upon the British vessels.

The Scientific American of February 12, 1921, a publication with which all Senators are, of course, familiar, contains this

To make good these losses during the war and to keep pace with demands of the war, she (Great Britain) took in hand a large program of new construction, but when victory was assured, and the world menace of the German fleet had been removed, all the outstanding contracts were canceled except in the case of certain vessels of a smaller type that were near completion, and a large number of ships, including three sister ships of the 42,000-ton battle cruiser Hood, were broken up on the spot and sold as junk.

As a matter of fact, it is some seven and one-half years since the British Admiralty has laid down a battleship of like class, and not one has been ordered since the fall of 1918.

Mr. REED. I do not wish to dispute the statement. to ask the Senator whether he has seen a recent article in the press to the effect that the British were now building several superdreadnaughts, to be armed with 20-inch guns, and to be the greatest monsters ever put afloat? I saw that statement; but, of course, like every other statement we see in the press, we generally are not certain for a little while whether the information is accurate. I do not mean to reflect upon the press, but in their haste to give early news they sometimes fail to investigate. statement, if true, is a very important factor, and I wondered if the Senator knew about it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know about the statement, and I also know about the statement that was to be found in certain newspapers on yesterday of the great building program of the Japanese Government. I also remember, Mr. President, that about the time the House of Representatives and the United States Senate are considering a naval appropriation bill in every single Congress since I have been in public life, going back to 1885, I have found the newspapers filled with this sort of stuff just at the opportune moment when it would be most influential and most effective with the National Legislature.

Mr. President, I want to say that the testimony is overwhelming that the great interests which are engaged in this business are in combination, first, in each of the countries, putting each country entirely at the mercy of the combination; and, second, that they are combined throughout the world.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Does the Senator know whether or not the battleships of Japan are built by the Japanese in Japan or are built by Americans in the shippards of the American Steel Trust?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am not able to answer as to the present moment, but I know that battleships have been built in American shipyards for foreign countries.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. My question was caused by the newspaper reports not very long ago-about three weeks ago, think-of a speech made at some sort of a banquet in New York City by Judge Elbert Gary, in which he spoke of the large naval program upon which Japan had embarked, and congratulated her upon that fact and encouraged her to pro-I suppose the Senator from Wisconsin remembers the speech?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think I do remember it now that the Senator states the fact.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The speech was quoted in the leading New York dailies, if not in the dailies of Washington City.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator for reminding me of the fact.

Mr. President, Congress authorized the building program which I have just laid before the Senate on the 29th of August, 1916. Secretary Daniels at the time that program was adopted said that it provided for "the largest fleet of war vessels ever provided at any one time by any nation."

PROGRAM OF 1916 CHILD OF "PREPAREDNESS" CRAZE.

This projected fleet has come to be known as the 1916 program. It was authorized when war was raging in Europe and the "preparedness" craze was sweeping over this country. We had here from England, Maxim, a member of one of the combinations to which I have referred, addressing audiences all over this country. We had a well-staged, carefully worked out scheme to carry this program through. When Congress authorized that program Great Britain, Germany, Japan, Austria-Hungary, Russia, and Italy all had powerful fleets engaged in war. E ght months after Congress yielded to the plea that "preparedness" would insure peace, this country went to war with Germany. The 1916 program was immediately abandoned. Confronted with actual hostilities, our naval authorities stopped the construction of battleships and cruisers and concentrated on antisubmarine craft and submarines as the type of vessels best adapted to the needs of modern warfare. That is what we actually did.

But it is now proposed to resume the 1916 building program practically as it was laid down five years ago and Congres asked upon the recommendation of the General Board of the Navy, concurred in by the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate, to appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars for this purpose.

The principal arguments relied upon by those who advocate the appropriation of this money for the completion of the 1916 program are as follows: It is contended, first, that having begun the construction of 16 capital vessels it will be more economical in the end to complete them; second, that this country needs and will have when the program is completed a navy second to none. In the controversy which has risen over this question arguments have been given wide publicity over the ry. They have found ready acceptance in many quarters. country. To show that these arguments are erroneous, after an examination of the testimony which has been given before the House and Senate committees, I undertake to assert the following propositions:

(1) This country is absolutely impregnable against offensive attacks by any nation or combination of nations in the world.

(2) We have to-day a Navy twice as strong as that of Japan and only slightly inferior in actual fighting strength to that of Great Britain.

(3) If we complete the 1916 program and enter upon the additional three-year program recommended by the General Board. by 1927 we shall be in relatively no better position than we are to-day.

(4) The 16 capital ships of the 1916 program will be obsolete within five years and the easy prey of submarines and airplanes.

(5) To complete the 1916 program alone, providing the fleet with the necessary bases and auxiliaries, will cost between $1,000.000,000 and $1,500,000,000.

(6) The only possible benefit to be derived from continuing the 1916 program will go to the armor manufacturers and to the great financial interests which desire a powerful offensive Navy and imposing battleships to protect their interests and their investments in foreign lands.

(7) The opinion of the best naval authorities in this country and abroad is unanimous that by building a reasonable number of airplanes and submarines at small cost and keeping our coast defenses in good condition this country will continue impregnable against attack in the future as at present.

Sir, the bill before us carries an appropriation of $500,000,000 for the Navy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922. Before we entered the European war four years ago there was not a man in the United States Senate who would have had the hardihood to suggest an appropriation of such magnitude for military and naval purposes. In 1915 the European war was at high tide. The people of this country contemplated with horror the spectacle of one-half of the human beings in the world at the throats of their fellow men. Everything that could strike terror to the hearts of mankind was taking place on the battle fields across the Atlantic; everything that could appeal to the Congress of the United States to make extravagant and unprecedented expenditures of the people's money for military purposes existed in 1915. Yet in that year, with all of the military power of England, France, Russia, Italy, and Austria-Hungary actually being employed in warfare, Congress appropriated only $147,-788,807 for the Navy.

The total appropriations for all military purposes—that is to say, for the Army, Navy, the coast defenses, the Military Academy, the Naval Academy, and pensions for the past wars—amounted to the sum of $429,234,515.

I am at a loss to understand, sir, how any Senator can hope to go before his constituents and justify a vote cast at this time for an appropriation for the Navy alone which will exceed by $70,000,000 the total appropriations for all military purposes in 1915.

Have we forgotten that the war is over, and that at the cost of untold billions of dollars and millions of lives a victory was won?

The military power of Germany and Austria has been destroyed. Even the victorious powers of Europe are exhausted and unable to meet the interest upon their staggering debts. The navies of Germany and Austria have been sunk or dismantled. Austria was left by the peace treaty without a mile of coast line.

Mr. President, there is not a single nation in the world to-day which has a navy that was not allied with us in the Great Warnot one. If it was not necessary for us to arm against Germany and Austria-Hungary before the war, why is it necessary now to arm against nations with which we were allied less than three years ago? Are we to serve notice on the people of this country that after sacrificing their sons and their savings to defeat our enemies they are now to be taxed more billions to crush our allies?

UNITED STATES IMPREGNABLE AGAINST ATTACK.

But, Mr. President, we are told that this enormous Navy is to be built for defense, not for aggression. I undertake to say that we could suspend the building of every ship now under construction and remain secure against any nation or any combination of nations which attempted to attack us; and I shall now undertake to support that statement with competent testimony.

I speak first, sir, of our coast defenses. If we are interested in defense, if we mean defense, we should first inquire as to our coast defenses.

GEN. WEAVER PRONOUNCES UNITED STATES COAST DEFENSES THE BEST IN THE WORLD.

The highest authority on this subject in the United States at the time of his death, less than three years ago, was Gen. Erasmus Weaver, the head of the Coast Defense of this Government. He was a member of the General Staff, a member of the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications, a member of the Joint Army and Navy Board. After the European war had been raging for nearly 18 months he testified before the House Committee on Military Affairs as follows:

We have the best coast defenses in the world. The guns now mounted and those contemplated will give us an entirely satisfactory defense.

GEN. NELSON A. MILES.

Gen. Nelson A. Miles, retired, was called before the committees of Congress when we first turned our attention to preparedness in 1916, in the days just preceding our entrance into the war. This distinguished general was not a "parlor" general. He had participated in all the wars covering a period of nearly half a century in the history of this country and had inspected the military establishments of every foreign nation. He said:

I am prepared to say that our coasts are as well defended as the coasts of any country and with the same class of high-power guns and heavy projectiles. They are better in some respects than the guns that are mounted at the Dardanelles, which have resisted the most powerful ships of war of the British and French Navies.

I quote further:

The results at Alexandria, Port Arthur, and at the Dardanelles furnish sufficient evidence that guns on board ships are no match for coast fortifications and submarine guns.

The British Admiralty broke and went down to defeat on the mistake that the combined navies of Great Britain, Italy, and France could overcome the batteries and the defenses at the Dardanelles. Every well-informed artillery officer in the world supports this statement. The Allies attempted the impossible at the Dardanelles. They met a crushing defeat. That defeat confirmed the military judgment of the world. For accuracy and destructive power the gun planted on shore outclasses the gun on shipboard.

Mr. KING. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, there was testimony before the Naval Affairs Committee to this effect—and a portion of that testimony came from Admiral Sims-that no fleet coming from Great Britain or from Japan, no matter how powerful, could land upon our shores; indeed, they could not approach nearer than 100 miles; and he said they would have to steam around and then finally go home.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Is not the permanence, the cohesion of the entire British Empire founded upon the fact that Gibraltar can not be passed?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Exactly; exactly. The power, the accuracy of these land fortifications make it impossible to approach them with guns on shipboard.

"SHIP ATTACKS ON FORTS ARE FUTILE "-ADMIRAL FLETCHER.

I call another high authority as to the condition of our coast defenses before our entrance into the war, when our possible enemies were infinitely stronger than they are to-day. Admiral Frank F. Fletcher, chief of the Atlantic Fleet-and that put him at the head of our whole Navy-then the ranking officer of our Navy, said before a House committee—and I quote from his testimony:

It has been recently forcibly demonstrated that ship attacks on forts are futile.

This war has conclusively demonstrated what every military strategist knew before, that it is impossible for sea craft to successfully attack land fortifications.

Mr. President, that was the opinion of the best authority in this country before our entrance into the war and after the war in Europe had been on for a period of nearly two years. The head of the coast defenses, a distinguished former head of the Army, and the chief of the Atlantic Fleet all agreed that we were adequately prepared for defense from actual attack by any nation. These military men, appearing before the committees of the Senate and the House, went further in their statements. They exploded the fear which had been expressed in Congress and throughout the country that it would be possible for an enemy nation to move an expeditionary force against this country. Gen. Miles said of such an undertaking:

It is an unsupposable thing.

Rear Admiral Knight, then a member of the General Board and president of the Naval War College, was questioned on this subject by Representative Calloway. I quote from the

Mr. Calloway, I want to get a concise statement. You consider the enormous dangers of transporting a fleet across a great expanse of hostile water—

Admiral Knight. And maintaining it.
Mr. Calloway. And maintaining it?
Admiral Knight. Yes; I think these dangers are almost insuperable.
Mr. Calloway. Almost insuperable?
Admiral Knight. Yes.
Mr. Calloway. And the maintaining of it is necessary to the conduct of war?
Admiral Knight. Yes.
Mr. Calloway. And you say those difficulties are almost insuperable?
Admiral Knight. The difficulties are almost insuperable?

Admiral KNIGHT. The difficulties are almost insuperable.

That was the situation, Mr. President, when Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Russia, as well as Great Britain and Japan, had powerful navies cruising the high seas. Our coast defenses were pronounced to be the best in the world, superior in some respects to those at the Dardanelles, which withstood the combined navies of the Allies; and our best military authorities agreed, on the basis of what had been demonstrated in Europe, that a successful attack against the great cities and harbors protected by those defenses was "an unsupposable thing" and an insuperable undertaking."

Mr. President, I shall take up further on in my discussion the possibilities that have been developed out of the recent war, and any changes that the experience of the war has contributed to this subject.

I know, Mr. President, what answer will be put forward here and elsewhere in response to that argument. It will be said that conditions have changed since 1916, and that we are more vulnerable at this time than we were before our entrance into the war. I am going to meet that argument, and I am going to meet it with the most expert testimony that can be found touching upon this subject.

ADMIRAL SIMS CONFIRMS EARLIER OPINIONS.

I believe it will be generally conceded that the American naval officer who had the best opportunity for observing what took place in the war was Rear Admiral William S. Sims. Admiral Sims commanded all the American fleets in European waters during the war. He was in constant touch with the great naval commanders of the allied powers.

During the hearings held by the Senate committee Admiral Sims was called to give his opinion of the latest developments in naval warfare. The admiral put himself in the same position as Gen. Miles and Admiral Knight, and assumed a hypothetical attack upon this country by another nation. The conclusion Admiral Sims stated to the committee, based upon his experiences in the war, unrivaled by any other American commander, Speaking after the war, Adwas definite and unhesitating. miral Sims said:

Distance is such an obstacle in warfare that Great Britain with all of her force could not attack this coast here without a base on this side to operate from. She has not a single ship that can come across the ocean and get back again, let alone staying here without assistance.

It may be suggested that they will establish a base. What will we be doing while they are establishing a base? They have to come 3,000 miles to establish a base, and the first move of that kind is the signal to this country.

This is the opinion of Admiral Sims as to the chance of Great Britain successfully attacking this country at a distance of 3.000 miles.

I imagine what is passing in the minds of some Senators, that we transported troops to France; we carried an army across; and were pretty efficient on the other side.

But we had a base already established for us on that side. We had the protection of the navies and the assistance of all the merchant marine of Great Britain, France, and the other

There is not any force on this side to cooperate effectively with all the combined navies of Europe.

Admiral Sims did not state whether it would be easier for Japan to attack from 10,000 miles than for Great Britain from 3,000 miles; that was hardly necessary. But he did make some interesting and, I believe, incontrovertible statements, showing that by building a reasonable number of submarines and airplanes at small cost to supplement the coast defenses, this country will remain absolutely secure from enemy attack.

I intend to go into this subject more fully a little later in my argument. Probably the greatest authority on gunnery in the world is Admiral Sir Percy Scott, of the British Navy. Admiral Scott was responsible for inventions and systems of training to which the modern battleship owes whatever effectiveness in gunnery it possesses to-day. Since the war, Admiral Scott has published his memoirs under the title, "Fifty Years in the Royal Navy." He has taken somewhat advanced ground, Senators, and he has called down upon his offending head the wrath of the General Board of this country, and some of the officers in like case abroad, who, as I think Admiral Sims testified, have to stand for this old program, because any other course would be suicide for them.

Commenting upon the lessons of the war as to the comparative strength of battleships and land fortifications. Admiral Scott said:

The idea that the battleships of the Mediterranean Squadron could reduce the forts and guns protecting the Dardanelles sprung from a sad want of knowledge. The authorities responsible for the mistaken idea were impressed by the success with which the German guns had reduced the Belgium forts—an instance of superficial thinking by superficial men who were in high places at that time-and concluded that in the same way ships' guns could reduce the Dardanelles forts. This deduction was due to a fallure to realize the difference between firing on land and firing from a ship.

Admiral Scott goes on to state—and I shall quote him more fully on this subject later—that the battleship which he regarded "as dead before the war" is "more dead now, if that is possible.'

I do not believe it would be possible to find a single admiral of standing in the American Navy who would dispute with Admiral Sims and Admiral Scott the proposition that for actual defense of the coast of this country we have nothing to fear from any navy or from the combined navies of the world. Yet, strangely enough, sirs, the jingoists who demand unprecedented expenditures for a great navy have succeeded in obscuring the truth from the great mass of people of this country.

There is a method in this ruse of advocating huge navies "for defense." Once let the people of this country grasp the truth asserted by Admiral Sims and Admiral Scott and it will be impossible for the Congress to vote tax burdens upon them such as the one now contemplated.

OUR NAVY TO-DAY IS SECOND ONLY TO GREAT BRITAIN'S.

We have at the present time a Navy but slightly inferior to Great Britain's and greatly superior to that of Japan. The best figures available show that on January 1, 1921, the British Navy had 717 vessels, with an aggregate tonnage of 2,412,146 tons; the United States, 413 vessels, with a total tonnage of 1,181,884 tons; Japan, 75 vessels, with a total tonnage of 486,252 tons. Of battleships of the first line, Great Britain has 26, the United States 16, and Japan 6. Of battleships of the second line, Great Britain has 20, the United States 16, and Japan 4. Of battleships of the second line, Great Britain has 20, the United States 16, and Japan 4. Of battleships of the second line, Great Britain has 20, the United States 16, and Japan 4. battle cruisers of the first line, Great Britain has 6, Japan 4, and the United States none.

Japan has no fleet submarines of the first or second line, no ordinary submarines of the first line, 10 of the second line, and only 27 destroyers of the first line and 12 destroyers of the second line.

The United States has 260 destroyers of the first line, 21 destroyers of the second line, 52 submarines of the first line, 44 submarines of the second line, and 2 fleet submarines of the first line. It is thus seen that with the single exception of battle cruisers, the American Navy is greatly superior in every respect to the Japanese Navy.

I ask leave to insert in the RECORD at this point tables showing the strength of the British, American, and Japanese Navies on January 1, 1921, together with the vessels which are building or have been projected.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. These figures demonstrate two important facts. They show beyond question that our Navy to-day is more powerful than any afloat except that of Great Britain, and further, that if we spend the hundreds of millions of dollars necessary to complete the 1916 program, we shall be relatively in no better position in 1923 or 1924 than we are to-day. That is the certain prospect we face when we decide to contime the 1916 building program, originally laid down on the eve of war, and now to be carried out in a time of profound peace.

There is no question of our ability to carry out this program, Mr. President. We have a national wealth larger than that of Great Britain and Japan combined. There is no doubt that we can eventually lead those great nations in a race of armaments, and there is no doubt that when we take the lead they will follow us. If we take that course, we do it with the certain knowledge that in 1923, or even in 1927, when we have completed 88 new vessels recommended by the General Board, in addition to the ships of the 1916 program, we shall be in exactly the same rank as we are at present. Nay, if we are to follow the reactionary policy of the General Board and build vulnerable and expensive capital ships, while Great Britain and Japan build aircraft and submarines, we shall find ourselves, after spending hundreds of millions of the people's money, relatively weaker than we are to-day.

WHY THE CAPITAL SHIP WILL SOON BE OBSOLETE.

It is impossible to consider the question of whether we are to continue the 1916 program without weighing the evidence as to the effectiveness of submarines and aircraft against the capital

It is apparent from hearings before the House and Senate committees that American naval officers are divided upon this The General Board, while conceding the great development of aircraft in the last few years, stubbornly insist that the capital ship will remain "the backbone" of the fleet in The admirals on the board who appeared before the Senate committee spoke disparagingly of the high authorities in this country and abroad who contend that the battleship is "obsolete," and that the submarine and airplane have rendered surface craft almost useless.

The position of the General Board is not unlike that of the Admiralty of the British Navy. Indeed, it may be said to be on the same footing. The British Admiralty, spurning the opinion of Lord Fisher, Admiral Scott, and other high British authorities, urged that the building program authorized by Great Britain before the war be completed. But until recently at least the House of Commons has refused to authorize the construc-tion of a single capital ship. I say "until recently" simply because I have seen in newspapers these current statements that we always see when an appropriation bill is under way in either branch of Congress. I have no confidence in the publications now being made as to the big navies that are being built. They have proven false in the years that are gone by. I think it is a fake. I think it is engineered, and if Senators follow me in what I have to say I will furnish such good evidence of the fact that it has been done before, and done with a selfish object on the part of selfish interests, not only in this country but abroad, that I think I will be able to raise a question of doubt in the minds of Senators on that subject.

When Sir Philip Gibbs appeared before the House Naval Affairs Committee he was asked by Congressman Britten if Admiral Scott wielded "a considerable influence in England."

Sir Philip Gibbs replied:

Sir Percy Scott does, sir. He is considered to be the greatest naval brain we have.

On June 4, 1914, Admiral Scott sent a letter to the London Times which startled the world. I read it on the floor of the Senate one night during the early days of the war. This letter contained the following statements:

Now that submarines have come in, battleships are of no use either for defensive or offensive purposes, and consequently building any more in 1914 will be a misuse of money subscribed by the citizens for the defense of the Empire. * * * Submarines and airplanes have entirely revolutionized naval warfare. No fleet can hide itself from the airplane eye, and the submarine can deliver a deadly attack even in broad daylight. Under these circumstances I can see no use for battleships and very little chance of much employment for vast cruisers. * * * In my opinion, as the motor vehicle has driven the horse from the road, so has the submarine driven the battleship from the see.

When this letter was published on the eve of the war, five British admirals denounced the prediction as "a mischievous scare," "a fantastic dream," and Admiral Scott's ideas were condemned in the press as an approach to midsummer madness.

After the war had amply justified his prediction, Admiral Scott, in his book "Fifty Years in the Royal Navy," published in 1919, pages 313 to 315, he wrote:

I have seen the royal navy change from sails to steam, from fighting on the water to fighting under water and over the water. What is the future navy to be? Some officers say that the battleship is more alive than ever; others declare that the battleship is dead. I regarded the surface battleship as dead before the war, and I think her more dead now, if that is possible. The battleship of to-day costs roughly £8,000,000; she carries about 1,000 shells containing about 100,000 pounds of high explosives; her effective range is, say, 15 miles; she is vulnerable to aircraft with bombs and aerial torpedoes, and to submarines, the latter possibly carrying a 15-inch or 18-inch gun; and the ordinary automobile torpedo is still in process of development, and may, in the future, carry a ton of high explosives, which would probably sink any battleship.

For £8,000,000 we could build many airplane-carrying ships, equipped with airplanes carrying over 100,000 pounds of high explosives. If these airplanes carried fuel sufficient for five hours, their range would be about 150 miles out and 150 miles home.

In the battleship we put all our eggs into one basket. In peace time the airplane-carrying ships could be used as passenger ships, and the airplane for carrying passengers instead of bombs.

As to the relative cost of upkeep, a single battleship would require in peace time about £120,000 a year. The airplane-carrying ships and the airplanes would cost nothing; they would be earning money. The officers and men to form the crews of the ships would belong to the merchant navy. Airplane pilots will be as numerous as taxi drivers and get about the same pay. The battleship waddes along at 20 miles an hour, and can not waddle very far, and in comparison with an airplane has a very low rate of speed.

The future is with the airplane, which is going to develop rapidly

The future is with the airplane, which is going to develop rapidly in the next few years. Probably we shall also have submersible battleships of 10,000 tons. What chance will the surface battleships, presenting a huge target, have against such a vessel?

Tuesday, May 17, 1921.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in what I had to say yesterday upon the pending bill I attempted to show that our coast defenses are equal, if not superior, to those of any country in the world. I submitted the testimony of the highest military authority upon the coast defenses of this country that they were equal to the defenses of the Dardanelles; and if I may be pardoned for gathering up the threads of the discussion as I presented it on yesterday, introductory to what I shall say to-day, I should like just to read the statement of Gen. Erasmus Weaver, under whom, as the head of our coast defenses, much of the construction was installed. He judged of it after the European war had been in progress for some 18 months, and he had a chance to see what the modern engines of war had been able to do in demolishing coast defenses and land batteries. With his ripe judgment matured under the stress of the war, he still said nearly two years after that war

We have the best coast defenses in the world. The guns now mounted and those contemplated will give us an entirely satisfactory defense.

I quoted Gen. Miles and Admirals Knight and Fletcher to substantially the same effect.

Let me say to any Senator who is present here to-day who was not in the Senate yesterday when I made my argument that this testimony from these eminent military authorities has, as I believe the American people will conclude-whatever the Senate may say-a direct and conclusive bearing upon the amount of money that ought to be appropriated at this time under the pending bill.

Mr. President, unless the Senate is prepared to say that we are equipping a Navy here for aggressive action against the other nations of the world, that we are not taking the position that we will simply defend and protect American interests and equip a Navy adequate for that purpose, then, Mr. President, I believe that no Senator can justify his vote for the appropriations which this bill carries. I believe that it is conclusively shown by all the evidence that has been taken by the committees in the last four or five years, both of the House and of the Senate, that for defense we are adequately equipped without assuming the burden and imposing upon the people the enormous taxation required by this bill to construct and carry out the program of 1916.

I spent some time yesterday in demonstrating that when we shall have carried out that program we shall have invested our money in junk that will be useless.

Before I concluded yesterday I had laid before the Senate the testimony of Admiral Scott, of the British Navy, and it seemed to me that I had very conclusively established that in the first place our coast defenses were such that it was folly and wicked extravagance for us to expend money to build great war vessels, those contracted for or planned for under the naval arrangements of 1916.

I had shown that Great Britain had abandoned the construction she had contracted for under the situation she faced in 1916. I believe, Mr. President, that it is amply demonstrated that we have, as a result of the late war, developed to a situation where to continue to construct according to plans that were adopted in 1916 is little less than a legislative crime.

Mr. President, I now resume what I had prepared to say on yesterday at the point where I was interrupted by the adjourn-

When I broke off to move an adjournment last night I had been discussing the position of Admiral Scott in the British That Admiral Scott had been subjected to some criticism by the British Admiralty was noted in the course of what I had to say, just as Gen. Miles and Gen. Weaver and Admiral Fletcher and any other man connected with the Army or the Navy who has had the courage to speak his honest convictions with respect to our defenses and to the program we ought to adopt in this country has been on every occasion the subject of criticism by his associates in the Army and in the Navy who are connected with the General Staff or with the General Board. Any naval officer or any Army officer who ventures an opinion which does not fit in with the plans of the General Staff of the Army and the General Board of the Navy encounters, of course, the criticism of those gentlemen. I suppose there is the average amount of selfishness to be found among the officers of the Army and the officers of the Navy which would be found in any other organization, and I think the Congress can reasonably expect that it will always encounter from the members of the staff of the Army and from the members of the General Board of the Navy opposition to any reforms which may be suggested which would in any way militate against the advancement and the promised promotion and honors that may result from continuing the old system.

THE GENERAL BOARD'S ATTACK ON ADMIRAL SCOTT.

I pause here long enough to comment on a very interesting passage in the hearings had before the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs February 8, 1921. All the members of the permanent General Board of the Navy, with the exception of Admiral Sims, appeared before the committee on that occasion. Those distinguished admirals, of course, were eager to defend the report of the General Board adopted by the Senate Naval Affairs Committee, in which it has been asserted that capital ships would remain the backbone of the Navy. Slighting references were made to Admiral Scott, but no effort was made to answer him or to meet his arguments or to refute his statements of fact. Indeed, the spokesmen of the board seemed to rely almost entirely upon the recommendations of the first lord of the British Admiralty, who presented the naval estimates for 1920, which the House of Commons has apparently repudiated.

The first lord of the British Admiralty, it may be said, corresponds to the Secretary of the Navy in this country, so that no more significance should be attached to the first lord's recommendations and views and expert opinion than we would attach in this country to the recommendations made by a Secretary of the Navy called from civil life to preside over the Navy Department.

We find one of the admirals of the General Board dismissing the contention of Admiral Scott, who had spent his 'ife in the Navy of Great Britain and whom Sir Philip Gibbs describes as "the best naval brain in England" in the following language:

There are enthusiasts. We have read a great deal of Sir Percy Scott as being the opponent. As far as I know, Sir Percy Scott's ideas have made no impression upon the British Admiralty, who are responsible.

Of course, Mr. President, the General Board of the United States Navy is cheered to find the British Admiralty taking the same reactionary position which the General Board has assumed. But it is idle to cite that fact as proof that Admiral Scott is in error in his contention.

Another member of the General Board volunteered this statement to the Senate committee, speaking of Admiral Scott:

He has not been employed for many years, and he has a grouch, too.
Q. That is interesting. How long since he has had any responsible command?

A. I can not tell you, but not for many years.

At this point another member of the board volunteered his contribution to discredit Admiral Scott as an authority. said:

In the war he was given a temporary job in London, and he holds it. Q. Is he in the Navy now? A. He has retired.

This interesting colloquy was terminated with a final shot at Admiral Scott by the admiral who first referred to the English commander. I quote from him:

It is approximately 10 years since Sir Percy Scott has held responsible command. Certainly be held none during the war.

I am putting into the RECORD these statements of these gentlemen, upon whom Senators rely in casting their votes for the appropriations contained in this bill. I say that these gentlemen of the General Board of the Navy, as well as the gentle-men of the General Staff of the Army, make war upon any man in this country in the Army or the Navy, and upon any man on the other side, who ventures, in the interest of the public and of scientific warfare, an opinion which does not contribute to the general plans of the various boards which take care of those gentlemen in their advancement in grade.

OFFICERS OF ARMY AND NAVY PUNISHED FOR ADVOCATING LIMITED ARMAMENT.

Mr. President, I have taken note in recent years of a very peculiar circumstance surrounding every hearing held by House and Senate committees on our Military or Naval Establishments of which I have any knowledge. Whenever a general or an admiral has the temerity to come before a congressional committee and assure the country that we are reasonably safe from attack or that millions of dollars can be saved by building less expensive armaments he immediately pays a heavy penalty. It seems to be the unwritten law, laid down by the General Board of the Navy and the General Staff of the Army, that any high officer who differs in opinion from their recommendations shall be punished for his heresy.

I believe one of the best cases in point is that of Gen. Nelson

A. Miles, who last appeared before a congressional committee, I believe, in 1916. Gen. Miles was an opponent of conscription and of universal military training, and he believed in a small standing Army, thinking that it was sufficient to meet our needs, because, as I have already shown, it was his opinion that we were absolutely safe in this country from an offensive attack by an enemy.

I will venture to say that if this distinguished soldier, whose active service in the United States Army surpasses that of any other living man, had joined in the chorus of jingoistic statements which have been heard before these committees in the last few years he would have been quoted daily in the press and he would have been the constant recipient of honors from military as well as civilian officialdom instead of living in Washington in quiet retirement, as he does to-day.

Mr. Presdent, this explains the spirit in which the General Board of our Navy undertakes to discredit Admiral Scott, Nothing I could say would tend to disabuse the minds of the Senate committee of the impression gained from the statements made by the admirals of the General Board. I have no call to defend Admiral Scott and the principles he has advanced. They have been so unanswerable that they need no defense. however, interested in the inaccuracy and ill temper with which the General Board has spoken of Admiral Scott, because it reveals the attitude of mind with which they have approached this whole problem and the intolerance and pride of opinion with which they have repelled suggestions that the policy of spending hundreds of millions of dollars on out-of-date capital ships may not be a wise one.

CONGRESS RELIES ON GENERAL BOARD'S RECOMMENDATION.

I dwell upon this, sir, because the committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives have come to rely upon what the General Board and the General Staff may say as the final word.

I have before me the memoirs of Lord John Arbuthnot Fisher, admiral of the British fleet and certainly one of the outstanding figures in British naval history. Admiral Fisher it was who built the first dreadnaught, and while in 1919 prior to his death he declared that the capital ship must be "scrapped," he can not be accused of being an "enthusiast" for new and untried methods of warfare, nor can prejudice against the old type of vessel, which he himself developed, be attributed to him.

WHAT LORD FISHER SAID OF ADMIRAL SCOTT.

I wish to place in the RECORD at this point, to prove the utter falsity of the statements made in disparagement of Admiral Scott by men connected with our Navy, the following para-graphs from pages 248 and 249 of Lord Fisher's memoirs published in 1919. I quote:

The very first thing I did when I returned to the Admiralty as first sea lord for those seven months in the first year of the war was instantly to get back Sir Percy Scott into the fighting arena.

False in one thing, false in all! The men of the General Board, the men in our Navy who seek to discredit a man like Sir Percy Scott in the face of his record and his achievements and his standing in England deserve to be condemned and branded as unworthy of belief. Sir, if we needed any proof to show that something is afoot here which ought to be scanned with a microscope, I think we have it here.

"He held no position of any consequence for 10 years," said one of our admirals called as a witness to determine things upon which we are to base our votes, under our oaths, representing our constituents and spending their money as a trust fund. How much credence is to be given to men of that type? Talk about honor in the Navy and in the Army! I think it behooves the Senate and the Congress and the country to look into these statements with some care.

Admiral Scott discredited? Here is Lord Fisher, first sea lord of the Admiralty, who says that the very first thing he did on coming into command when the war was on was to summon this foremost naval authority, as Sir Philip Gibbs said, the "best naval brain" in all England, to the support of the English cause. And men in our Navy, not approaching him in prestige or experience, seek to smirch him simply because he is not in favor of appropriating billions for the old and obsolete forms of naval warfare.

Lord Fisher said:

The first thing I did when I returned to the Admiralty as first sea lord for those seven months in the first year of the war was instantly to get back Sir Percy Scott into the fighting arena. I had but one answer to all his detractors and to the opposition to his return.

What was it? Listen to his words:

He hits the target!

That is what Lord Fisher said of him. That brain of Scott's, working with the accuracy of a Corliss engine, goes to the target, answers the question, solves the problem, seeks the heart and core and marrow of the proposition that is under consideration. That is what Lord Fisher means when he says, "He hits the target."

He also was maliciously maligned. I don't mean to say that Sir Percy Scott indulges in soft soap toward his superiors. I don't think he ever poured hot water down anybody's back.

Again, he says:

Suffice it to say of Sir Percy Scott that it was he and he alone who made the first start of the fleet's hitting the enemy and not missing him. Why hasn't he been made a viscount? But that is reserved for those in another sphere.

Why, I wonder, has he not been made a viscount? He did not pour hot water down anybody's back. He would not bend from his rigid and conscientious integrity of character to subscribe to something for the British Navy that was wanted by the ministers and the armor-plate contractors who were ruling and dictating where those great honors and those titles should go.

Mr. President, it is hard to account for statements concerning Admiral Scott's standing in Great Britain so at variance from the truth as those made by witnesses before the Senate Naval Affairs Committee, but it is not hard to explain the state of mind which gives rise to those statements.

In a letter recently published in the London Evening Standard Admiral Scott himself gave the true explanation for the attitude of many high ranking officials of the Army and Navy when

It is not to be expected that naval officers would oppose the building of battleships, because if they did they would commit professional suicide.

Let us now return to a consideration of the question of the relative strength of capital ships, submarines, and aircraft. Lord Fisher, as I have stated, was the father of the modern dreadnaught. Writing in September, 1919, when the war was over, Lord Fisher said:

Flying dominates future war, both by land and sea. It is not my business to discuss the land, but at sea the only way to avoid the air is to get under the water.

Are we building any craft under the 1916 plan of battleships that can get under the water to secure protection from attack from the air?

Lord Fisher continues:

So you are driven to the internal-combustion engine and oil. That why I keep on emphasizing that the whole navy has to be scrapped.

When we vote for this bill, Senators, we are voting the money of our constituents to build types that as soon as built have got to be scrapped.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. King], in his admirable minority report from the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs made upon the bill at the last session-and the pending measure is substantially the same bill and the report applies in every detail-quotes Admiral von Scheer, who commanded the German fleet at the Battle of Jutland, and whose views, the Senator from Utah remarks, "weaken the position of the General Board and call for a revision of their action and of the policy announced in the report of the committee."

The Senator from Utah quotes Admiral von Scheer as saying that, while the cost of surface ships is enormous, "they are very vulnerable"; that a great surface fleet can no longer protect a coast or overseas commerce; that only a few nations in the past could afford great ships, and this resulted in their ruling the sea, but that the submarine has "knocked all of this into a cocked hat, and fear of the British fleet as a fighting weapon has '; that "submarines can best defend or attack a coast and can best protect or destroy commerce."

Do not for a moment think that the opinion of this German. admiral is discounted by the result of the war. It is simply confirmed by it when you take into account the actual conditions that prevailed as to the number of submarines which the German Government possessed and as to the conditions that prevailed overseas.

The minority report also quotes Capt. Hart, who has made a special study of the operation of the German submarines, and states that not more than 10,000 officers and men were employed during the entire war in the submarine fleet of the German Government, and that, as a rule, not more than 30 submarines were at sea at one time, manned by approximately 1,500 men.

The report of Capt. Hart, an American officer, prepared after investigation and after a special study of the operation of the German submarines in the recent war, should carry with it a lesson for us at this time. The report continues:

As opposed to the small force and the impounded German high fleet were more than 1,000,000 men of the allied navel force, together with the fleets of the allied nations, including between 4,000 and 5,000 small craft, whose activities were of the highest importance.

Notwithstanding this great disproportion in forces, Germany nearly won the war, and if it had not been for the intervention of the United States, would have triumphed. * * The capital ship was safe only when locked in protected harbors. Can there be any doubt but that Germany would have won the war if her submarine fleet had numbered 200 instead of 40 when the war began?

Let the the duty of the American Congress to weigh these

Is it not the duty of the American Congress to weigh these facts ascertained in the recent war before loading upon the overburdened people of this country the enormous taxes required in order to build an old, ramshackle, out-of-date, and obsolete American Navy? Shall we discount and shut our eyes and our minds to all the lessons of the late war?

ADMIRAL SIMS BRANDS GENERAL BOARD'S REPORT AS " MISTAKEN,"

Mr. President, this brings me to what I regard as the most enlightening evidence presented to the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs. On February 5, 1921, Admiral W. S. Sims was called before the committee. Admiral Sims was referred to the report of the General Board defending the capital ship and discounting the relative importance of submarines and aircraft, He stated that he "was not present at the General Board when they drew up the report," although he is a member of the board and was the one man in all our Navy who had experience of the very highest and most important character in the recent war. Asked by one of the members of the committee to state his opinion of the report, Admiral Sims replied:

I think the report is very largely mistaken. It looks to me very much like a report the arguments of which are drawn up to prove what they originally believed.

Admiral Sims continues:

It looks to me like a document of that kind. As I stated informally, a little while ago, so conservative are military people in their attitude toward new incidents that that is the first development we always have.

Members of the committee made it plain by their questions that they viewed with impatience any suggestion that the 1916 program should be discontinued.

When Admiral Sims indicated that he did not think this report was built up with a view of expressing what had been arrived at as the result of an investigation but rather with the view of proving something that the General Board proposed to prove when it started out to write the report, from the moment he testified in that way before the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs he was treated to a cold bath, apparently. Anybody can read his testimony, and any lawyer who has ever reviewed a record will not read through a dozen pages before he knows that from the moment it became known that he did not stand with the General Board he was being examined by members of a committee that were hostile to that attitude of mind of this man who had seen more of the war than all the other members of the General Board combined.

The following passages show that Admiral Sims can not be fairly quoted as an advocate of carrying out the 1916 program. Now, there will be read one little scrap of testimony, a few words, from Admiral Sims as an indorsement of this program; but you have got to read all of a witness's testimony to determine what he really testified to. I say that he can not be fairly quoted as in favor of continuing the building of the capital ships now under contract. I read from the hearings:

Q. Therefore, to sum up your opinion, it is that we should continue to carry out the program of 1916?

Admiral Sims. I should think so. Of course that depends a good deal on the policy of the Government. If the policy of the Government as it has been enunciated by the General Board repeatedly is to be followed, that you want to have a Navy as strong as that of any other Government, you have got to keep on building those vessels.

Mr. President, I am at a loss to understand how Senators can rise on this floor and assert that Admiral Sims "strongly urges." the completion of the 1916 program in the face of the testimony I have just quoted. Admiral Sims brands the report of the General Board as "very largely mistaken." If the Government is to accept that "mistaken" report and make it the basis of our naval policy, then Admiral Sims admits, after being pressed by the members of the committee, that we may as well finish the 1916 program.

AIRPLANE DEVELOPMENT MAKES DEFENSE EASY.

I come now to a statement made by Admiral Sims before the committee which, it seems to me, goes to the heart of this whole controversy.

Speaking of the effect upon modern warfare of recent airplane development, Admiral Sims said-and I read from page 32 of his testimony:

Incidentally the importance of the airplane development is so great that it means this: It enormously adds to the ability of a country to defend itself. Because of this discussion on the other side it has brought about a unanimity of opinion on this side. No battleship fleet can operate against the coast of an enemy within the range of the enemy's airplanes, for this reason: A fleet that goes over there, whether it has 6 or 8 or 10 airplanes, suppose it has 10, that will be nearly a thousand planes. With 30 planes each it would be 300 airplanes, coming up against the coast where we are operating from the beach and we have 2,000 airplanes. It simply means that you are controlling the air absolutely, and you will wipe out all of the air force and you will be perfectly free to attack that fleet.

On the other hand, while it enormously increases the power of defending the country, it correspondingly decreases the power of offense against another country.

I continue reading from his testimony:

I continue reading from his testimony:

Take an actual example. Suppose you had determined to carry out a certain governmental policy across the ocean, whether it is the "open door" in China, or whatever it may be, or some aggression against Japanese commerce in those waters. The only way you could do that is by millitary force. If the Japanese develop an adequate air service—and it does not take a very big one to be greater than we can take care of on our ships on the sea—then that restricts us to operating against her as well as we can from a distance so far that she can not attack us with airplanes. Distance is such an obstacle in warfare that Great Britain, with all of her force, could not attack this coast here without a base on this side to operate from. She has not a single ship that can come across the ocean and get back again, let alone staying here without assistance.

Mr. President I invite the attention of the Senate to the

Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senate to the significance of that statement. It simply means that by building a reasonable number of airplanes—and it is admitted that the money expended for one battleship would pay for a thousand airplanes-we can defend our coasts from attack by any fleet in the world, assuming that our own Navy takes no part in the engagement. Admiral Sims makes it plain, also, that with the advent of aviation every country gains in the power to defend itself, while the ability to wage offensive warfare is correspondingly lessened; and I thank God for that.

Admiral Sims referred in his testimony to the great advantage enjoyed by this country through its geographical location. He said:

Their situation on the other side is almost totally different from ours. We are so far away from European and other enemies that there is no real danger of their sending airplanes from their own bases. To attack us they would have to come across the ocean; but those people in England are within easy bombing range of their possible complete. sible enemies.

Now, it just occurs to me that that carries a pertinent suggestion which does not seem to have penetrated the minds of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate or the General Board, and that is that we are not called upon to build every type of vessel that Great Britain builds. She may have need, because of her geographical position, for a very different sort of navy than the navy that would be needed by the American Government and the American people, planted here between two oceans.

Great Britain, surrounded as she is, may still continue to build and to moor her floating fortresses. But all the experience and all the lessons of this late war point the American people to another course, a simple course, one which ministers to our security and at the same time insures our not meddling in the affairs of the world which do not concern us.

In his testimony Admiral Sims said:

The only aggression that can be made against this country in the air is by airplanes that have been carried over on ships, which can only carry a very few.

Admiral Sims was asked if battleships and battle cruisers could not defend themselves against aircraft by special type antiaircraft guns, and he replied with a vigorous negative.

In demonstrating the utter futility of protecting capital ships against aircraft he said:

I have been engaged in the business of shooting pretty much all my career in the Navy, and I can tell you this: The only reason we are able to hit an enemy at a long distance away, 3, 4, 5, 6, or 7 miles, is because the enemy is on a level plane with us. He is on the water, and if we do not hit him we know why and how much we miss him. We see the splash, and we can adjust the sight accordingly. But the fellow up in the air 1,000 feet, there is no means of telling how your shots are doing; you do not see what you have done. You only know by speculation where your shot has gone. If the airplane is in the air 1,000 feet, you do not know whether your shot goes above him or below him.

As a gunnery officer all my life, I see no means whatever by which a surface ship alone can successfully defend itself against bomb or torpedo attack.

Reading still further from the testimony of Admiral Sims, I quote as follows, reading first a question by a member of the committee:

Q. If the battleship should prove not to be able to stand up against airplane attack, how could the battle cruiser?

Admiral Sims. The battle cruiser would not any more than the battleship, except she is a dangerous boat and has a speed dangerously close to that of the airplane carrier.

Q. She is the best opponent of the carrier?

Admiral Sims. She is the best opponent of the carrier.

Q. But if your planes work, your airplane attack worked, you would be able to destroy the battle cruiser before she got up to the carrier?

Admiral Sims. Yes, sir.

Mr. President, in my opinion, the statements made by Admiral Sims before the Senate committee are unanswerable. find no answer to them, at least in the testimony of other officers before the committee, nor do I find an answer in the majority report of the committee, which merely adopted the report of the General Board of the Navy. I believe the country is entitled to know that we are safe from attack. I believe the people should be informed that the great battleships now under construction at a cost exceeding $40,000,000 each offer little protection, and that our true safety lies in the laying of mines, the strengthening of our coast defenses, and the building of a reasonable number of submarines and aircraft. I will venture to say that we could take the first steps necessary in carrying out such a sane program at an expenditure not in excess of the cost of one of the 17 capital ships now under construction.

Mr. President, I have no doubt that the natural reluctance of naval officers to commit what Admiral Scott calls "professional suicide" has a great deal to do with their insistence upon the construction of the capital ships in the face of the opinions I have quoted. But I see another reason why this unceasing demand for enormous appropriations for the construction of capital ships is made, and before I take that up, as it invites me to a field of investigation touching what I regard as the improper and corrupting influences back of this type of legislation, as it will take me some time to lay the facts I have gathered bearing upon that issue before the Senate, and as I have now spoken for nearly two hours, I shall at this convenient point in my argument surrender the floor for the day.

Monday, May 23, 1921.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, when I concluded the observations upon the pending bill which I submitted to the Senate some days ago, I had quoted the opinion of Admiral Sims regarding the importance of the development of the airplane as a weapon of war and the weakness of the battleship as an instrument of modern warfare. I have just come across a later expression of opinion from Sir Percy Scott, whom I have quoted two or three times in the course of my observations upon this bill. It is a part of a discussion which was conducted in the London Times from November, 1920, down to February, 1921, and I offer it as a rather fresh contribution in its bearing upon the important features of the pending measure.

We are proposing here to invest a vast amount of money in the construction of battleships. I contend that we are doing that in the face of the best naval judgment of the world that the battleship is practically an obsolete weapon. I purpose to show in the course of my remarks to-day that there are powerful influences at work which profit out of the construction of battleships and which, through their connections, are able so to influence newspaper articles and public opinion and in that way react upon the Congress of the United States—as upon the legislative bodies of the other great countries of the worldthat they succeed in perpetuating in our various naval appropriation bills and in those of the other nations of the world vast expenditures of money, at the expense of the people, that constitute an absolute waste.

Mr. President, it seems to me that Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives, dispensing in appropriations the trust fund which we collect in taxes from the people, ought to be controlled by as fine ethical and business considerations as would control them in the expenditure of an individual trust fund for which they were responsible.

Sir, in the face of the judgment of men who were best able to interpret the meaning of the last war, men of the character of Admiral Sims, of the American Navy, and Sir Percy Scott, Members of Congress would not for one moment consider putting their own money into a project which could be put under even a tithe of suspicion on such authority as I have heretofore presented to the Senate.

In a very recent letter to the London Times of March 15, commenting on the future of the battleship, Sir Percy Scott

You must admit that in the war we were nearly forced to submission by starvation.

You must admit that the German battleship played no part in reducing us to a state of starvation.

You must admit that if our battleship superiority had been double what it was, they could not have protected us from starvation.

You must admit that the dominant arm of the war was the submarine.

Strange as it may appear, I believe that this blunder of building the wrong weapons to combat the submarine won the war for us.

Looking over some German correspondence of 1914 which has reference to my letter in your paper proclaiming that the battleship was dead, I believe that the Germans, with their skewed minds, thought that I was not sincere. * * * So they went on with their program and did not build submarines.

The Flag Officer reminds are of the fact that believe the adventee.

The Flag Officer reminds us of the fact that before the advent of the submarine the battleship did not feel very comfortable by night, owing to the possibility of attack by torpedoes, but when the submarine came on the scene she did not feel comfortable either by night or by day. The new weapons have entirely revolutionized naval warfare, and up to the present they have favored defense much more than they have favored offense. They have given power to a weak country, and have taken it away from the strong. * * * The rulers of our navy must call in a doctor and get some medicine that will cure them of that terrible complaint, pig-headness.

The submarine has adopted the tactics of all birds and animals. The brain of these creatures, I suppose, tells them that the greatest security against attack is not to be seen. I venture to think that it is not a bad idea. By experience I have often found that the animal very often imposes his will of not wishing to be dead on the sportsman, who wishes him to be dead. How clever the animals are. I wish they could speak, for they might be able to tell me what the use of the battleship is.

Again, he says:

Again, he says:

Again, he says:

The building of battleships will be supported by all the battleship builders of the world, because it is the bread whereby they live. Look what a paying concern it is; would not any one of your readers like to get a nice, fat contract for, say, only five battleships at 35,000,000 of golden sovereigns? In these circumstances we must expect the construction of battleships to be backed by many people possessing strong political interest, commercial interest, and the support of capital. We must also expect the necessity of battleships to be supported by all the navies of the world, for naval men do not commit suicide, and battleships are vital to their profession and vital to their comfort. To be captain of a battleship is the ambition of every naval officer. Who else in the world travels about with the same comfort as the captain of a battleship? He has a large drawing room, a dining room in which he can seat 25 or 30 guests, a commodious bedroom with bathroom attached, and spare bedrooms.

All these points will naturally be taken into consideration, or at any rate they will flit through the mind of every naval officer before he decides to vote for "not building battleships."

I undertake to say, sirs, that the Committee on Naval Affairs

I undertake to say, sirs, that the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate are following with their eyes shut the recommendations of the General Naval Board, composed of men of the Circ Board, Composed of Mariel the very class of which Sir Percy Scott is speaking. Admiral Scott continues:

These points will also have to be taken into consideration by the tax-payer when he is asked to put his hand in his pocket to pay for the superbattleships, their nurses, and other accessories.

The other accessories must not be ignored, for they mean a lot of golden sovereigns from the taxpayer. Obviously, we must have a safe harbor to put our battleships in; they must be immune from underwater attack and from air attack. The superbattleships will necessitate all our docks being enlarged, and a multitude of other expenses, running, I should think, into the hundreds of millions.

Mr. President, the Senate a few moments ago voted down the appropriation for Alameda, Calif. That is rather a favorable indication. That evidences the fact that it is still possible to make an impression upon the Senate. Some of us despair of it from time to time. Many years ago on this floor, with a little group of Progressives, we attacked the naval appropriation bill because we felt sure, on the authority of the highest naval expert testimony, that a vast amount of money was being wasted; that appropriations were being made in various States through the influence of members of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate who had dry docks and who had naval bases and navy yards located in their States to secure appropriations for, and who were just as human as the officers of the Navy are when they furnish testimony before our committees for the perpetuation of the battleship.

SPECIAL INTERESTS INFLUENCE APPROPRIATIONS.

You will find always and everywhere, whether it be among the officers of the Navy or the officers of the Army, or the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate or the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, that if there are large expenditures to be made at the public expense, men vote those appropriations subject to the selfish influences which control all our actions.

So with these battleships Sir Percy Scott, after having spent a lifetime in the navy, concludes his statement with this:

This, sir, is the last time I shall trespass on your space, because I know that no one can answer my question of What is the use of the battleship?

Yet all around me are Senators who, against the authority of this "best brain" in the English Navy, against the advice of Admiral Sims, who has had wider opportunity to study the man who serves under the American flag, will continue to vote the public money for the building of battleships at forty to forty-four million dollars apiece, at a time when we are warned by every public official responsible for the revenues of the Government that we must cut the expenditures; when we know, from the evidence already before the Senate, that the men to whom we are under the highest obligations that a Government can owe to any of its citizens, the men who served it in time of war, are being neglected, not properly provided for, hospital accommodations denied them. That evidence has already been laid before the Senate.

The Senate is now preparing to vote away half a billion dollars on the testimony furnished by the General Board of the Navy

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bursum in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield. Mr. KENYON. I am interested in that statement of the Senator, and I am wondering if he really thinks the votes are taken after a consideration of the testimony. I notice whenever a vote is taken, Senators rush in and ask, "What is our vote?" Does the Senator really think there is very much testimony considered one way or the other?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I do not.
Mr. KENYON. What does the expression "our vote" mean?
Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think that as a rule Senators vote the way the committee votes, and the committee votes the way the General Board votes. Therefore, the Senate blindly follows the lead of the men who are very much interested in perpetuating the system, against the advice and against the counsel of the best naval experts, and against the unanswerable testimony that we are squandering the money of the people. We can not get Members of the Senate to give any heed to this testimony, and this testimony is discounted in the report. So, Mr. President, we blunder blindly along in the same old way, betraying-I count my words when I say it-betraying the interests of our constituents, stultifying our responsibility to them in the votes we cast in appropriating the money which is raised by taxing them, squandering it, beyond any question. There can be no doubt about it.

PEOPLE ENTITLED TO KNOW THE COUNTRY IS SAFE FROM ATTACK.

I believe the country is entitled to know that we are safe from attack, and I will say to the Senators who are here that they are going to know that fact, they are going to know it before another election takes place, they are going to know it upon the highest military authority of this country. We are in an impregnable position, so far as attack is concerned.

I believe the people should be informed that the great battleships now under construction, at a cost exceeding forty million each, offer little or no protection, and that our true safety lies, even if we are to be attacked, which is an impossibility for years to come, in the laying of mines, the strengthening of the coast defenses, and the building of a reasonable number of submarines and aircraft.

Mr. McLEAN, Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.
Mr. McLEAN. I am interested in the Senator's remarks, and particularly in the one he has just made to the Senate. It does seem to me that if we are to act in the interest of economy, we ought to consider very carefully that arm of the Navy which will bring us the most for our money.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; that is true.

Mr. McLEAN. It seems to me to be the opinion of many of the experts whose statements I have been able to read that just now the submarine and the aircraft are the two arms which we should consider with the greatest care. I suppose the pending bill is a compromise in the interest of economy; but, Mr. President, a foe that can remain invisible until he strikes a death blow to his enemy seems to me to have a great advantage over an enemy that is visible.

Mr. BORAH. I was interested in one statement which the Senator made, that the bill was a compromise in the interest of economy.

It is alleged to be.

Mr. McLEAN. It is alleged t Mr. BORAH. That is better. Mr. McLEAN. I assume that I assume that is the fact. I think that any committee which has this matter in charge will find that, no matter how sure and certain its purpose may be to act in the warfare of to-day and on the waters of the seven seas than any | interest of economy, it is very difficult to get testimony that is harmonious and reliable; there is such a difference of opinion among the experts as to the comparative value of the different arms. So far as my investigation goes, disinterested witnesses, for instance, Admiral Fiske and foreign writers on the subject to-day, all insist that the submarine is the arm that will give the greatest degree of protection for the amount of money invested. It so happens that the committee have cut out entirely all appropriation for the construction of submarines. According to the testimony of Admiral Coontz we have only three under construction. While 12 are authorized in the 1916 program, there are only 3 in the making. Japan, I think, has under construction something like 36, and Great Britain over 52.

I have offered an amendment which will permit the committee of conference to consider the question of submarines. It does seem to me that it was not given the attention which it should have had, and I am pleased that the Senator takes that view of it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Connecticut has just stated that the committee cut out any appropriation for the new construction of submarines. I will say for the information of the Senator that the bill as passed by the House provides that no construction shall be commenced on any ship that has not already been started. The Senate committee did nothing in regard to that whatever.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senate committee concurred in the House provision.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; the House blundered and the Senate committee proceeded to blunder after it.

Mr. McLEAN. It does not seem to me that the attitude of the Senator from Maine is very convincing.

Mr. HALE. I was endeavoring to correct the Senator in that he stated that the Senate Committee had struck out all provision for the construction of submarines. The Senate committee simply left the bill in that respect as it was sent over from the House.

Mr. McLEAN. I accept the correction, but the argument of the Senator from Maine does not appeal to me. I think both Houses are equally to blame. The battleships cost immense sums to build. I understand that a complete submarine can be constructed for $2,000,000, and we have only three of them under construction. If that is so, when you compare the service we would get from a battleship, the submarine has every advantage in cost. It seems to me if we should ever have any trouble, for instance with Japan, the fact that we had 20 submarines of the latest type in the Pacific would cause Japan to hesitate and hesitate and conclude to continue to hesitate much longer than she would if we had but one battleship in the Pacific.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am gratified indeed at the manifestation of interest on the part of the Senator from Connecticut. I think exactly as he does with reference to what the Senate committee has done and what the bill proposes to do with respect to submarines and with regard to airplanes. Backed by the highest naval authority and military authority of the world, I think I shall be able to demonstrate that the great bulk of the appropriation under this bill is an absolute—a criminal—waste of the people's money; that by the expenditure of a much less sum we can prepare against all the world by putting our appropriations into the construction of those appliances of war which have been demonstrated in the last five years to be the instruments which will determine any future warfare, if that calamity shall again befall the human race.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska. Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin, and through him to the Senator from Connecticut, that the proposed amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, as I understand it, only does one-half of a very desirable thing. It is not sufficient, when we concede the trend of the argument of the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Connecticut that the money expended for battleships is wasted, to say that in addition to that waste of money we shall do something else that is conceded to be good, by the building of aircraft or submarines. To be effective and to hit the mark the amendment ought to provide for the striking out of some of these useless expenditures and inserting some of the necessary expenditures rather than permit the useless expenditures to remain and to be added to the necessary ones. It still leaves a bad bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I grant that the observations and criticism of the Senator from Nebraska are absolutely sound. It is not possible to make a proper naval appropriation bill on the floor of the Senate. The bill ought to go back to the committee. There is no doubt about that at all. The argument against its passage is unanswerable. No man can defend against it, and yet every man in the Senate will have to defend against it. These expenditures are not going to be submitted to. These useless, wasteful, wanton expenditures are not going to be tolerated by the American people. Every man on this floor will confront the diagram that now hangs on the wall of this Chamber. Every voter in this land will have in his possession a copy of that diagram before another election occurs.

Disabuse your minds of any conception that you can put this bill through and put this subject to sleep. You can not do it. Neither, in the course of debate upon the floor, can we construct a proper bill. The bill should go back to the committee and should go back by such a decisive vote that Senators will understand that these useless, wanton, criminal expenditures that are wasteful of the public money must be cut out and that the money which the people pay for defense shall be made to serve defense.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President—
Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Pardon me just a moment and I will yield to the Senator. When you know that Germany, coming perhaps within an ace or within a hair's breadth, as Sir Percy Scott said, of starving out England and the Allies with submarines, had only 30 of them, we are reminded that Germany did not take the judgment of Sir Percy Scott in 1914 or 1915, when he said that the submarine was the controlling thing; that she thought it was advice put forward by the British Admiralty for the purpose of misleading Germany, and she did not seize upon it. Had she constructed and put into the waters of the Atlantic, and possibly the Pacific as well, 200 or 300 submarines instead of 30 or 40—the greatest number she had in the water at one time—there would have been a different story.

I yield now with great pleasure to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McLEAN. If the Senator will pardon me for another interruption, the statement of the Senator recalls to my mind very vividly the history of the Monitor. Senators will remember that Mr. Cornelius Bushnell, of New Haven, had a contract for constructing the armor for the Galena, I think a man-of-war. He was not certain that the specifications would sustain contact with a 6-inch shot, and he was advised to go and consult John Ericsson, who was then the leading naval inventor of the country.

Ericsson looked over his plans and replied that he thought the armor would withstand a 6-inch shot at a respectable distance; but he said, "I have something in my drawer that will beat a dozen Galenas." He brought out the plans for the Monitor. He had given copies to Napoleon III. They had been accepted by France and Napoleon had sent Ericsson a very beautiful medal. France was contemplating war against Russia, and Ericsson was a Swede and did not like Russia.

Bushnell was intensely interested in the plans of the Monitor and he took them to Gideon Welles, another Connecticut man, who was at that time Secretary of the Navy. Welles arranged an interview with Admiral Smith, who was then at the head of the naval board; he and Admiral Paulding and Capt. Davis were the three members of the board. Bushnell presented his plans and the board wrangled over them for some time. Finally the deciding voice was left to Capt. Davis. He told Bushnell to go back to New Haven with them and worship them; that he would not be guilty of idolatry, because they did did not represent anything in the heavens above or the earth beneath or the waters that covered the earth.

Bushnell was not discouraged, and he reported results to Secretary Welles. Welles said, "Get Ericsson to come down to Washington." Bushnell said, "He will not come. He has been so mistreated and insulted by the Naval Board in Washington that he will not come to Washington." Ericsson had done some work on the Indiana, I think; one of the guns had burst and the Government would not pay him for his service. Welles said, "You get Ericsson and I will arrange for a meeting for him."

So Bushnell told Ericsson that he thought his plans would be accepted all right, but there was some little detail the naval board wanted to as! him about. This appealed to Ericsson's vanity and he came to Washington. Meantime Welles arranged with President Lincoln that Ericsson should have an interview with the naval board. President Lincoln was present. After they had debated the merits and demerits of the invention for an hour or two they asked President Lincoln's opinion. He said:

Gentlemen, I must remark, as the western girl did when she first put her foot in a long stocking, "it appears to me there is something in it."

That remark tipped the balance in favor of the Monitor.

It seems to me there is something in the submarine, a great deal in them, and with all due respect to the committee, it does not appear to me that they came to the conclusion that there was anything at all of value in them when we stop to consider that we have only three under construction at this time.

I ask the Senator's pardon for interpolating that story, but it seemed to me it was apropos.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am very glad the Senator related the story. I am sure the Senate and the public will appreciate it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield with pleasure, Mr. President. Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me that the story which has been told by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean] ought to be continued just a little bit further, if the Senator from Wisconsin will permit?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I, of course, have no personal knowledge of what I am about to relate, but I secured the information from one of the leading men of Connecticut, who served in the House of Representatives for a great many years, and who was one of the bondsmen and who stood to lose everything he had on earth under the bond to which I wish to refer.

It seems that after the conference about which the Senator from Connecticut has spoken the Government was still afraid to use its money in the construction of the Monitor, and it required a bond, conditioned on the payment to the Government of the money it should lose if, after the construction of the Monitor, it turned out to be a failure.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator from Nebraska is quite correct in that statement,

Mr. NORRIS. The bond was duly given, and the man who gave me the information-

Mr. McLEAN. Representative Sperry was one of the sureties

Mr. NORRIS. Representative Sperry was one of the sure-ties, and he told me that had the Monitor failed he was liable on the bond for a great deal more than he was worth.

Mr. McLEAN. I do not know about that. Mr. NORRIS. He also stated that after the Monitor did its work so well, he came to Washington and took the matter up with the officials of the department. He said to them, "I presume you are agreed that we are not liable on the bond now that the Monitor has made good?" They assured him that such was the case. He then said, "I suppose, representing these bondsmen, I am entitled to have the return of our bond"; and they agreed to that. However, upon a search being madeindeed, a great many searches being made—they never were able to resurrect the bond, and, as a matter of fact, it was never returned. The bondsmen always believed, of course, that the Government officials felt so humiliated at having required the bond that in some way it had accidentally been lost and they were unable to find it.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska is quite correct in his statement. Before the Government officials would agree to give the contract for the construction of the Monitor the late Representatives Sperry and Bushnell and others had to give a bond absolutely guaranteeing the Government that in the event the Monitor did not do as promised the entire cost of its construction should be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Nebraska for this historical contribution to the discussion, because it bears directly upon and supports my argument.

Mr. McLEAN. If the Senator from Wisconsin will pardon me, I wish also to state that there is a long list of arms that have been submitted to our experts and been discarded and rejected by them which, however, have afterwards become the most effective weapons in modern warfare.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. All this, Mr. President, strongly supports the contention that I am making, that we have passed into a new era with regard to war and preparation for war, and that we are unfortunately proceeding with the pending bill just as though the world had not had the experience that came to it between the years 1914 and November, 1918. In the face of all the facts, and against all reason, these old prewar contracts, which the Government has the right to cancel, are being forced through the Congress.

THE POWER BEHIND EXCESSIVE NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. President, what is the mysterious influence that drives us ahead blindly along this old course of naval construction, based upon the obsolete prewar plans?

The execution of great naval programs, necessitating the building of great armored battleships, vitally interests immense business organizations, and such great business organizations come to exert a tremendous influence upon legislation, without, perhaps, the members of the respective committees of the two Houses of Congress being conscious of the fact that they are subjected to such influence.

I have no doubt that the natural reluctance of naval officers to do what Admiral Scott says they must do if they stand against the battleship, that is to commit professional suicide, has a great deal to do with their insistence that the construction of capital ships, in the face of the opinion I have quoted here, is still essential to the interests of the country.

But I see another influence behind this persistent demand for enormous appropriations for the construction of capital ships. It is a sinister influence, and if that influence is allowed to direct the naval policy of this country it will in the end give us a Navy that is obsolete, a Navy which will be condemned and scrapped as soon as built and its obsolence made an excuse for further and more wanton expenditures of like character. Sir, ultimately the American people will come to understand the significance of all of this vast expenditure with no result; they will come to a full understanding of what this means; and when they do their wrath will be let loose against those who have in any manner contributed to the great wrong.

The influence which I have been speaking of is hinted at, unconsciously, I think, in the testimony given before the Senate committee by Admiral Coontz. The admiral was asked what the cost would be if the construction of the 1916 program was suspended. He replied—and I should like Senators to fix the reply of the admiral in their minds:

Well, I will have to figure on that; but the contracts have been let and some of the big concerns throughout the country are going ahead, and the stuff is pouring in, and the greatest loss would be in holding up the contracts. That would have a very great effect. I understand that a number of our biggest concerns are practically depending upon to tide them over until they get more work. But that would be probably the principal effect of it.

Oh, Mr. President, consider that answer of this representative of the Navy Department, Admiral Coontz. He was asked what the cost would be if "the construction of the 1916 program was suspended." And his answer was that "a number of our biggest concerns are practically depending upon these "—that is, the old contracts of 1916—"to tide them over until they get more work. That would be the principal effect of it."

That is the kind of testimony upon which the bill is constructed, the testimony of an admiral in the Navy Department of this Government into whose mind comes at once as the chief objection to suspending work upon these old contracts the in-convenience and the loss of profit that it will entail to our "big concerns." He did not appear to be interested in the saving to the Government, or in the better and more modern construction that could be built for a small fraction of the enormous cost of these $40,000,000 battleships; but he considers only "the effect upon our biggest concerns"—the armor That was the thing that was in the front of his mind.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I think the Senator has entirely misinterpreted the testimony given by Admiral Coontz. I do not think in any way he was trying to protect or help out any business concern. I think, from what the Senator has stated there, the admiral simply meant that if they had to close down on the building of this 1916 program it would interrupt all of their overhead expenses and interrupt their course of business so that they might have to shut down altogether, and then we would have nothing built.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, yes, Mr. President; here you have it. Here is a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and he shows on the floor here the same great concern for these big business institutions that have made enormous war profits. Why, they could suspend business for months, Mr. President, and not suffer in their capital investments. They could suspend business for two or three years. Do not be so anxious about them, and do not be so quick and keen to come to the defense of this admiral of the Navy, who showed that his first consideration with record to the sideration with regard to the suspending of operations under these contracts was the effect it was going to have upon these big concerns.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator is questioning my motives, I think I can stand it. It does not bother me.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, no; I am just questioning the Senator's understanding, not his motives. I do not question anybody's motives.

Mr. HALE. As far as the action of the committee is concerned, I will say that in my State we build destroyers. Bath Iron Works have built the best destroyers, I think, that have been built in this country. The Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate, of which I am a member, voted to take away the authorization to complete 12 of these that were carried in the 1916 program. If the Senator thinks that shows an undue interest in this shipbuilding concern, he is welcome to his opinion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think you did not go far enough. I am glad you made a start.

THE ARMOR RING-BETHLEHEM, MIDVALE, AND CARNEGIE.

Mr. President, there are three concerns that make up the naval armor ring of this country, and they have a history, and I am going into it now. These three concerns manufacture all the armor plate that will be used on the 17 capital ships under construction, with the exception of about 7 per cent of the plate, which is being manufactured at the naval ordnance plant of the Government at South Charleston, W. Va. We have succeeded in building up, under the war conditions of the last six or seven years, a sentiment against the Government having anything to do with producing the things that the Government uses, leaving them all to these fellows who make, as I shall show, enormous profits out of the jobs that they have with the Government. There will come a reaction from that sort of thing. You will pay for your loyalty to private business before you get through with it. You can not fool the public forever, You could put on the clamps during the war, and you could stop discussion of the subject in many places, but we are going to discuss these things now before the public everywhere. will have to come forward with all the defenses you have.

I have here the figures, obtained from the Navy Department, which show the amounts of the contracts made for armor plate alone with these three concerns:

Bethlehem Steel Co., $16,866,211. Midvale Steel Co., $16,866,211. Carnegie Steel Co. (United

Then there comes the little naval ordnance plant of this Government, approximately $5,500,000. But observe, sir, how closely the other three contracts run in dollars and cents. If you were making a private contract with three corporations and found it necessary under the conditions that existed to divide up your business in that way, it would be a little bit suggestive of the fact that you were up against a combination.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I did not quite understand apiece?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And over what period of time? Mr. LA FOLLETTE. This has application to the 1916 pro-

Mr. HITCHCOCK. For the current year?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It begins in 1916. I am not certain whether it comes within the current year or not, but I think not, from the table that has been worked out for me.

In addition to armor plate, these capital ships and the auxiliary craft require armaments and ammunition aggregating enor-Two of the three concerns listed above, the Midvale Steel & Ordnance Co. and the Bethlehem Steel Co., manufacture the largest guns and furnish much of the ammunition. In building the 16 capital ships of the 1916 building program, excluding the 1 additional battleship, the California, the following amounts have already been appropriated by Congress:
Armor and armaments, $169,533,288.

Ammunition, $51,013,543.

The Navy Department now estimates that the following additional amounts must be appropriated for the same purpose to complete the 1916 program:

Armor and armaments, $87,850,707.

Ammunition, $14,768,294.

It must be borne in mind, of course, that the above estimates were made with a view of minimizing the cost of completing the program, and that, following the invariable custom and invariable precedent, the estimates will be increased by from 50 to 100 per cent when the actual expenditures are made; but, taking the estimates as they appear on their face, we have the following total as the amounts expended or to be expended for armor and armaments and ammunition:

Armor and armaments, $257,385,995.

Ammunition, $65,781,837. Total, $323,167,832.

Mr. President, these figures-which will undoubtedly be increased by fifty to one hundred million dollars-show that there are involved in the construction of these ships for armor and armament and ammunition alone approximately one-third of a billion dollars.

The Carnegie Steel Co. is a subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation. The Midvale and Bethlehem companies are organized as separate corporations, but all three concerns are closely allied through a system of interlocking directorates which connects them with the great banks of New York City.

As an indication of the enormous profits which these concerns have been able to make during the war, before and after the United States entered the conflict, I introduce at this point tables showing the net income available for dividends of the Bethlehem Steel Co. and the United States Steel Corporation from 1912 to date, and the Midvale Steel & Ordnance Co. from 1916, when it was organized in a merger, to date.

The net incomes shown in these tables are the actual profits which remain after all taxes have been paid, interest met on loans, and all other ordinary items of a going concern provided for. The net income shown in these tables was actually paid out in dividends or diverted into the enormous surpluses which these companies are piling up.

These figures are compiled by the Standard Statistics Co. in a business manual relied upon by investors and business men. ask that these figures be printed in the RECORD, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has the Senator made any examination to ascertain when these contracts were made by the Government which are now supposed to be in operation, and not desirable to cancel? When were they made? What was the date upon which the prices were fixed? Were they upon the present basis of prices and wages?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No, Mr. President; as I understand, they were based upon the prices that prevailed shortly after 1916, when they were authorized by the 1916 legislation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In other words, is the Government now paying maximum prices for this steel, when private purchasers have already secured a reduction? Is it paying the prices based on the maximum wages?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have not been able to find any testimony which would enlighten me upon that point, I have taken the figures exactly as I found them, and am laying them before the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am curious to know, for instance, whether the reduction of wages has been of any benefit to the Government.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator can address himself to the members of the committee, who have opportunities to ascertain the facts beyond those of us on the outside.

I wish to introduce here two tables based upon Moody and other standard financial journals, showing the net profits and percentage earned on capital stock from 1912 to 1918, inclusive, of the United States Steel Corporation, the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, and the Midvale Steel & Ordnance Co. These tables also show comparative statistics for 19 lesser steel companies, nearly all of them having large interests in the contracts made for armament and munitions in connection with the building of the 16 capital ships under the 1916 program.

The tables are as follows:

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. These tables bring out some very interesting facts. For the three-year period from 1912 to 1914, inclusive, the average net income per year of the United States Steel Corporation was approximately $53,000,000. For the threeyear period from 1916 to 1918, inclusive, after the European war had begun, and including our 19 months' participation in the conflict, the average net income per year of that concern was in excess of $211,000,000—that is, for the three-year period from 1912 to 1914, inclusive, it was $53,000,000; for the three-year period from 1916 to 1918, inclusive, it was $211,000,000.

During the three peace years, from 1912 to 1914, inclusive, the percentage earned on capital stock was 6.1 per cent per year, while during the three war years, from 1916 to 1918, inclusive, the percentage was 24.3 per cent per year.

The Midvale Steel Co. was not organized until 1916, but for the three war years, 1916 to 1918, inclusive, it made net profits available for dividends of $30,683,273, or 30.7 per cent per year upon its capital stock. The Bethlehem Steel Co., which is one of the principal armorplate concerns, did better than any of its competitors. From 1912 to 1914, in time of peace, it made a net income of $4,258,788. During the three war years, from 1916 to 1918, inclusive, its net profits per year averaged $28,948,365. That is, it rose from four and a quarter williance in reproductive to $290,000,000 in the and a quarter millions, in round numbers, to $29,000,000 in the three war years.

Mr. NORRIS. What percentage is that?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The percentage earned on its capital stock for the three peace years, from 1912 to 1914, inclusive, was 14.3 per cent. In 1917 the Bethlehem Steel Corporation increased its capital stock from $29,000,000 to $74,000,000. That has to be taken into account. But, in spite of this enormous increase, the net income during the three war years, 1916 to 1918, inclusive, was so gigantic that the percentage earned on capital stock during the three years averaged 48.8 per cent per year.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, are these the big concerns the admiral was worried about?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; these were the concerns the admiral was afraid were going to be embarrassed if we suspended these contracts. He said they sort of needed these Government contracts "to tide them over."

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator think it would be a hardship on those men, who have been living in this style, in a business way, to get down to 8 or 10 per cent? Does not the Senator believe that we ought not compel them to make such a sudden change as that, coming from 40 per cent down to a reasonable amount, but that we ought to ease them off a little?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think that as the facts I submit enter the minds of Senators, some of them will conclude that they ought to be "eased off" from the end of a plank. These concerns have been stealing from the Government and from the public. Instead of being in their palatial offices getting, in peace times, 14 per cent, and in war times, 40 to 50 per cent, they ought to be in the penitentiary, wearing stripes. They are responsible for the conditions which are upon this country at the present time. They are responsible for their share of the fact that 5,000,000 men are out of employment. It is their policy and their influence, and the influence of their ilk upon government, that is productive of all the radical, extreme, irrational opinions that find expression in this country. If there is anybody who is a menace to the future perpetuity of this Government as a constitutional government, it is men of this type.

In the table which I have inserted in the RECORD, taking the 19 iron and steel works shown in the table, in the aggregate it will be seen that the average net income per year of approximately $75,000,000 during the three peace years, from 1912 to 1914, inclusive, leaped to $367,747.129 per year during the three years from 1916 to 1918. Before I leave this subject I wish to introduce into the Record extracts from a letter sent by John Skelton Williams, Comptroller of the Treasury, to Judge Gary, chairman of the board of the United States Steel Corporation, under date of February 15, 1921, and also extracts from a memorandum on alleged excessive prices for steel and iron products, prepared by him in 1919 for the Director General of Railroads, and not published until February 15, 1921, and then not very widely published.

I ask leave to print all or any portion of that matter in connection with my remarks, without taking the time of the Senate now to read it.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It may interest Senators who are in attendance here to hear these paragraphs taken from the letter of Mr. Williams to Judge Gary, and I will read the extracts from Mr. Williams's letter:

The company's reports show that the United States Steel Corporation in the year 1918 could have afforded to reduce by $30 per ton the price of every ton of the 14,124,986 tons of rolled steel and other finished products sold at home and abroad in the year 1918, or, say, by $423,749,000; and, further, to have reduced by about 50 per cent the prices it received from its iron, ore, coal, coke, pig iron, cement, etc.; and even then its net earnings for the year would have amounted to about $101,000,000, or enough to pay 7 per cent dividends on the steel company's common and preferred stock after providing for interest and sinking fund and other charges.

Another paragraph:

Another paragraph:

The swollen and unconscionable profits of the Steel Co. are reflected all through its annual report. Its balance sheet shows an excess of current quick assets over current liabilities of $792,000,000, before deducting estimated Federal taxes of $288,000,000.

If the United States Steel Corporation had held prices to a moderate basis during the war, the Government, our allies, and the public would have been saved exactions amounting, directly and indirectly, to many times the $288,000,000 to be paid by it in Federal income taxes.

The United States Steel Corporation at this time, with its plethoric treasury, could richly afford to say to the Government that for the remainder of this year it will sell its products at net cost, having made in the past two years more than $1,000,000,000 of profits, the exaction of which had a most disturbing and injurious effect not only upon our allies but upon our country in the midst of war, even though part of it was afterwards paid back in taxes.

The company's report states that its inventory was arbitrarily reduced by more than $50,000,000 December 31, 1918, by marking down stock on hand from "actual cost or market value" to "normal prices," but it does not say what those prices were which they regard as "normal."

My conclusion from the foregoing figures is that the United States Steel Corporation should make a radical and sharp reduction from the prices recommended by the "Redfield committee"; and I am convinced that they would be forced to do so by an aroused public opinion if all the facts of the case should be submitted to the discriminating judgment of the American people.

Again:

Again:

We are calling on the working people to accept reductions of wages. Every day we urge manufacturers and wholesale and retail merchants to trim their margins of profit to the thinnest possible with safety, and the farmers to be content without profit, or to accept losses.

And again:

We are calling on the working people to accept reductions of wages. Every day we urge manufacturers and wholesale and retail merchants to trim their margins of profit to the thinnest possible with safety, and the farmers to be content without profits or to accept losses. In my office I apply every proper influence to urge the national banks and the Federal reserve banks to be content with smaller returns, to encourage enterprise, and stimulate legitimate business. Evidence that the United States Steel Corporation is selling its products at reasonable prices and accepting smaller profits would be an example and inspiration to all these classes, an impetus of immeasurable power to the process of hastening healthy readjustment by mutual and general concessions.

On May 5, 1919, in view of my experience as director of purchases of the United States Railroad Administration, I prepared and submitted to the Director General of Railroads an analysis of the annual report of the United States Steel Corporation for 1918. The general conclusion after recital of the figures was that the profits of the corporation were "swollen and unconscionable"; that the corporation could well afford to sell its products to the Government and to all other consumers through the remainder of the year at net cost; that the corporation could in the year 1918 have doubled the wages and salaries of all its 268,710 employees and yet paid dividends on its preferred and common stock with due provision for its sinking fund, or could have reduced its prices on all finished steel products $30 per ton and yet paid dividends on both preferred and common stock after providing for interest, sinking fund, and necessary deterioration.

These assertions of mine perhaps came under your observation. They stand uncontradicted and unchallenged after 22 months.

In my recently published annual report I asserted that one of the most important iron and steel companies in the country, meaning yours, showed that in the last year of the war—calendar year 1918—it could have doubled wages or could have reduced prices of steel $25 per ton and at the same time could have paid dividends on its preferred and common shares. You do not controvert or deny this.

I realize you desire as an executive to do the best possible for your stockholders. I contend, however, that profits for them such as you gathered in during the war years were not "reasonable," and in the present condition of the country that your prices are excessive and unjustifiable. I ask you to consider, looking to the permanent welfare of the corporation and its stockholders, whether the public good will you would gain by such reduction of prices as the figures I have and the undisputed calculations and conclusions I get from them would justify, would not be an asset far outweighing the immediate loss in profits. I ask you also to consider whether the public and general hostility your corporation would incur by insisting on a policy of extortion while other interests and individuals are being exhorted to a policy of reduction and by refusing to come to the help of the country and the world at their time of need will not become a heavy and an increasing liability.

ARMOR RING HAS A SUBSTANTIAL INTEREST IN 1916 BUILDING PROGRAM.

ARMOR RING HAS A SUBSTANTIAL INTEREST IN 1916 BUILDING PROGRAM.

Mr. President, it can not be denied that the Midvale Steel & Ordnance Co., the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, and the Carnegie Steel Co., which make all of the armor plate and most of the largest guns for the 16 capital ships under construction, have a substantial interest in the completion of the 1916 build-Those great corporations for the past five years ing program. have enjoyed profits without precedent in the history of American business. They have invested millions of those profits in enlarging their plants and installing machinery for the manufacture of armor plate, armaments, and projectiles. With the return of peace these concerns see their profits shrinking to a normal level. Unless the world can be plunged into another sanguinary war within the next decade, the ammunition makers will have to be content with profits which can be made out of legitimate peace-time operations.

The munition makers have one method open to them by which they can maintain their profits at the war level of former years. If Congress can be induced in a time of profound peace to embark this country upon a new preparedness campaign, entering into a race of armament with our recent allies, Great Britain and Japan, the munition makers can rest secure in their dividends for years to come, with a certainty that the ruinous policy upon which we are about to enter will lead shortly to another war and another harvest of war profits.

Some Senators may scoff at the idea that the profits of munition makers can have any possible influence upon the ultimate decision of Congress upon this question. It was not difficult to find in this body during the late war Senators who believed that the Krupps of Germany were a potent factor in determining the military and naval policy of the German Empire. But, sir, the Krupps of Germany in all their history never made profits comparable to the earnings which have been made in the last few years by the munition plants of this I am willing to go further than that and to assert that the $323,000,000 which will be spent under the 1916 program for armor, armament, and munitions alone offers a richer opportunity for profit than was ever realized by the Krupps. I say that these great corporations not only have enormous profits at stake, giving them a substantial interest in the completion of the 1916 program, but I assert that they are bringing every ounce of influence to bear to induce Congress to continue this program, and I am prepared to prove that statement.

To find a guide for our policy in normal times after the war, it is logical to inquire briefly into the conditions which obtained before the war. In 1915, as at present, the Bethlehem Steel Co., the Midvale Steel Co., and the Carnegie Steel Co. were the great beneficiaries of contracts let by the Navy Department. They had a controlling grip upon the manufacture of armor plate, ammunition, and armaments. From 1887 down to 1915 these three companies had received from the Navy Department, for the single item of armor plate, contracts aggregating $95,-628,912, divided as follows: Bethlehem, $42,321,237; Carnegie, $32,954,377; Midvale, $20,353,298.

It has been proven repeatedly that the Government was being cheated by the munition makers on prices paid for almost every variety of equipment for the Navy. Nine official estimates were made of the actual cost of a ton of armor plate, and the average estimate arrived at shows a cost of $247.17 per ton for armor plate, and yet from 1887 down to 1915 the Government purchased 217,379 tons of armor plate at $440.04 per ton.

WHAT SECRETARY DANIELS SAID OF ARMOR PLATE TRUST,

There appears to have been no competition between the armor manufacturers of the world. Secretary Daniels, in 1914, on page 621 of the naval hearings, referred in the following language to an advertisement for bids for armor plate for the dreadnaught Pennsylvania. I quote from that report, as follows:

When we came to the armor we rejected all the bids and were then absolutely in a situation from which it appeared there was no relief. Though you can not establish it in black and white, there is no doubt of an Armor Plate Trust all over the world. That is to say, the people abroad who make armor plate will not come here and submit bids, because they know if they do our manufacturers will go there and submit bids. They have divided the world, like Gaul, into three parts.

In 1901 there was formed in this country an organization known as the Navy League of America. This league began a vigorous propaganda for a great Navy, which has continued to this date. In 1915 this organization was composed of and shown to be controlled by the great financial interests of the country which have large investments abroad and control the stock of the steel companies which supply the Navy with armon plate, armament, and ammunition. In 1915 the Navy League was advocating a bond issue of $500,000,000—a sum about half as large as the estimate made by the Navy Department as the actual cost of the 1916 program—for building new vessels at that time. The Navy League Journal was the official organ of the Navy League. In the first issue of the Journal, July, 1903, it paid the following tribute to the Navy League of Germany:

To-day Germany, thanks to enlightened statesmanship and the support of the public, but most of all on account of the efforts of Flotten Verein, or Navy League, whose astounding results we shall emulate in this country, may be looked upon as the fourth sea power in the world.

Mr. President, I think that bald statement-from an organization which still maintains offices in Washington-of its purpose to emulate the organization of militarists which brought Germany to ruin will be accepted as pretty fair evidence that the "enlightened statesmanship" of this country will not be free from the attempts to mold its policy which have been made in every other country in the world. In its issue of December, 1903, the Navy League Journal again paid tribute to the German Navy League, referring to the attempts which were made to influence the German Reichstag, in the following language:

Without exaggeration it may be asserted that to the German Navy League, more than to every other influence besides, is due the vast and wholesome growth of the German Navy.

Mr. President, I would have no fault to find with an organization composed of citizens who were agitating for the greatest navy in the world through sheer conviction that this country required such a navy; I concede the right of men who believe in a great navy to press their views upon Congress; but in 1915 an exposure was made of the Navy League which revealed that organization as the instrument of great financial interests and manufacturers which make money out of the contracts let by the Navy Department.

I ask leave, in the first place, to insert in the RECORD a list showing how the manufacturers of war materials controlled the Navy League and directed its propaganda for a big naval program. The following are the steel companies which had representatives in the Navy League before the recent World War:

STEEL.

1. United States Steel Corporation, represented through J. P. Morgan, director of Navy League and United States Steel; Robert Bacon, director of Navy League and United States Steel; Elbert H. Gary, contributor to Navy League and chairman of the board of directors, and chairman finance committee, United States Steel; Henry C. Frick, honorary vice president Navy League and director United States Steel; George F. Baker, jr., contributor to Navy League and son of director of United States Steel. The late J. P. Morgan was a founder, contributor, and director of the Navy League, and the organizer and a director of United States Steel. Charles M. Schwab, who is shown in Moody's Manual for 1903 as then president of the United States Steel Co., is shown by the efficial journal of the Navy League for 1903 to have been one of the founders of the league in July of the same year.

2. Bethlehem Steel Corporation, represented through Charles M. Schwab, one' of the founders of the Navy League and president of Bethlehem Steel Corporation, which controls the San Francisco Drydock Co., the Union Iron Works Drydock Co., of San Francisco, the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., Harlan-Hellingsworth Corporation, and the Titusville Forge Co. Bethlehem is also represented in the Navy League and director of Bethlehem; George R. Sheldon, honorary vice president of the Navy League and director of Bethlehem; George R. Sheldon, honorary vice president of Bethlehem.

The above held stock in Bethlehem on Sentember 27, 1915, as follows:

former honorary vice president of the Navy League and stockholder of Bethlehem.

The above held stock in Bethlehem on September 27, 1915, as follows:
Charles M. Schwab, 38 451 shares: Allan A. Ryan & Co., 13,910 shares: Charles F. Brooker, 474 shares, on April 10, 1915.

Robert H. Sayre, a former general manager of Bethlehem, was a life member of the Navy League, and Lieut. J. F. Meigs, resigned, an employee of Bethlehem, was a life member.

(3) Carnegie Steel Co., represented through those connected with the United States Steel Corporation, of which it is an underlying company. It was also represented before its connection with the United States Steel through ex-Secretary of the Navy Benjamin F. Tracy, attorney for the Carnegie Co., and one of the founders of the Navy League, and indirectly through Albert B. Boardman and James R. Soley, who were associated with Mr. Tracy.

Mr. President, I ask leave to incorporate in the RECORD without reading some data with respect to the connection between the Navy League and various business organizations which have in the past been contracting with the Government for Navy and Army supplies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The matter referred to is as follows:

4. Harvey Steel Co., represented through S. S. Palmer, one of the founders of the Navy League and president of the Harvey Co., and through ex-Secretary Tracy, who was also the attorney for Harvey Co. The Harvey Co. was therefore also indirectly represented through Mr. Boerdman and Mr. Soley.

5. Lackawanna Steel Co., represented through Beekman Winthrop, director of Lackawanna and director of the Navy League, and through Ogden L. Mills, contributor to the Navy League and director of Lackawanna.

6. Cambria Steel Co., represented until recently by E. T. Stotesbury, of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. Mr. Stotesbury was a director of Cambria and honorary vice president of the Navy League.

7. Midvale Steel Co., one of the founders of the Navy League.

8. Eastern Steel Co., represented through Harry Payne Whitney, one of the founders of the Navy League and director of Eastern Steel.

9. Pennsylvania Steel Co., represented through E. T. Stotesbury, member of firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., honorary vice president of the Navy League, and director of Pennsylvania Steel.

10. Pacific Hardware & Steel Co., represented through D. H. Kane, life member of Navy League and formerly director of Pacific Hardware & Steel Co.

11. Federal Steel Co., represented through E. H. Gary, contributor to Navy League and president and director of Federal Steel.

12. United States Steel Co., represented through E. H. Gary, contributor to Navy League and director of Hilmois Steel.

13. Minnesota Steel Co., represented through E. H. Gary, contributor to Navy League and director of Minnesota Steel.

14. Union Steel Co., represented through E. H. Gary, contributor to Navy League and director of Union Steel.

15. American Steel & Wire Co., New Jersey, underlying property of United States Steel Corporation. (See United States Steel.)

NICKEL.

Seward Prosser, contributor to Navy League: Director International Nickel Co.

Robert M. Thompson, president Navy League, 1915; founder, honorary vice president, 1903-1909; director, 1904-1914: Chairman board International Nickel Co.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On page 32 of the February, 1904, issue of the Navy League Journal, the "official organ of the Navy League," 19 names are published as being those of the "founders" of the league. The names listed are as follows:

Herbert L. Satterlee, J. W. Miller, J. Pierpont Morgan, Benjamin F. Tracy, Seth Low, Clement A. Griscom, Thomas Lowry, Timothy L. Woodruff, Midvale Steel Co., Anson Phelps Stokes, George Westinghouse, R. S. Sloan, John J. Aster, R. M. Thompson, Charles M. Schwab, John J. McCook, Harry Payne Whitney, Course, P. Satterlee, and S. S. Palmer. George B. Satterlee, and S. S. Palmer.

The activities of one of the founders of the Navy League,

Charles M. Schwab, are described at length in a Government document stored away in the archives of Congress which I have unearthed. It is entitled "Violation of armor-plate contracts," and is recorded as House of Representatives Report No. 468, Fifty-third Congress, second session.

WHAT THE CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATION OF AEMOR-PLATE FRAUDS REVEALED.

The report was made after an investigation in 1894 by the House Committee on Naval Affairs of charges against the Carnegie Steel Co., then known as Carnegie, Phipps & Co. The testimony showed that armor plates containing "blowholes" were sold to the Government and later used on battleships of the American Navy; that these cavities were secretly "plugged" and the plugging "concealed" from the Government inspectors.

Mr. Schwab, one of the founders of the Navy League, and principal owner in the Bethlehem Co., the chief beneficiary under the contracts of 1916, so far as armor manufacture is concerned, was general superintendent of the Carnegie Co. when this fraudulent work was done. When questioned concerning the plugging of blowholes, Mr. Schwab said (p. 647):

Q. Do you know whether the company did really conceal the fact of blowholes in the plates?

A. I think likely that was done.

Asked if he gave orders that these defects in the plates be concealed from the Government inspectors, Mr. Schwab replied that he did not give orders that the defects be concealed, but I certainly gave orders that blowholes should not reject the plate. Again (p. 649), Mr. Schwab testified:

Q. Do you know of any case where they were plugged and filled without the knowledge of the Government inspector?—A. I do not; but I believe it was done.

William E. Corey, now president of the Midvale Steel & Ord-nance Co., upon whose integrity we must depend for carrying out contracts which may be entered into in connection with the building program of 1916, and a director of Col. Thompson's International Nickel Co., of which Senators have some knowledge derived from the debates which we have had here during tariff and other discussions, was in charge of the armor plant in which the frauds were committed. He was superintendent, and when Superintendent Corey was testifying he was asked (p. 559 of this testimony):

Q. Did anybody above you—did any superior officer—know that you were doing this thing?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Who was it?—A. Mr. Schwab knew about it in a general way.
Q. Did anybody else?—A. No, sir.

In making its report of the investigation the House Committee on Naval Affairs stated-and I quote the words-that-

The fraud has been traced home to their general superintendent, himself a stockholder in the company.

The general superintendent was Charles M. Schwab.

The report then proceeds as follows, commenting on the activities of those responsible for the fraud:

If the criminality of a wrongful act is to be measured by the deliberation with which it is committed, the magnitude of the evils likely to result from its perpetration, and the want of proyocation with which it is done, the frauds which your committee have found are worthy to be called crimes.

We are dealing now with the bigger concerns about which Admiral Coontz was very much exercised if these contracts were to be canceled—the contracts of 1916 for building these old, obsolete vessels. He was apprehensive, was Admiral Coontz, that the gentlemen at the head of these great concerns might not be tided over if work was suspended upon those contracts to a season when they could continue their enormous profits.

I read further from the report:

The servants of the Carnegie Steel Co. (whether with or without the knowledge of the company), to increase their gains deliberately continued for many months to commit acts whose natural and probable consequence would be the sacrifice of the lives of our seamen in time of war, and with them, perhaps, the dearest interests of the Nation.

Still reading from the report of the congressional committee that investigated these companies with which we are contracting now to continue under the plan of 1916:

now to continue under the plan of 1916:

The company were hired to make the best possible armor plate and paid an enormous price for so doing. They were hired to make an armor that would stand the shots of an enemy and upon which the Nation might rely in time of need. They were paid between five hundred and seven hundred dollars a ton and thousands of dollars a plate for so doing. Resting under these obligations, the company or its servants have perpetrated manifold frauds, the natural tendency of which was to palm off upon the Government an inferior armor, whose inferiority might, perchance, appear only in the shock of battle and with incalculable damage to the country. No fine or mere money compensation is an adequate atonement for such wrongs. The commission of such frauds is a moral crime of the gravest character. Your committee do not consider it as within their province to draft a criminal statute, but they do feel under obligations to call the attention of the House to the importance of protecting in the future the interests of the Treasury, the lives of our seamen, and the safety of the Nation by appropriate legislation, denouncing as crimes all such acts of fraud and deception practiced upon the Government in connection with armor plate and other material of war, and making such acts severally punishable in all persons who commit them or aid and abet their commission.

President Cleveland assessed damages of $140,000 against the Carnegie Co., which were immediately paid. The fact that the Carnegie Co. defrauded the Government did not appear to impair its standing with the Navy Department.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator to give again-as I think he has already given, but I want to be sure of it-the number of that House document and the date. I want to say to the Senator that some time ago I saw what was alleged to be an extract from it in a newspaper, and I undertook to get the document itself, and I was unable to do so. Has the Senator the document?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have it before me. Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has, I judge from what I see there, one of the two copies that are kept. Is it where Members of Congress can secure copies of it now?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Is it not out of print, or has not the supply been exhausted?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not think it can be obtained from the committee. I think it is necessary to go to the Library to We have bound volumes of all our reports in the Library.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I understand that; but there are no copies of that document available for Members of the Senate now, are there?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, no; not at this time, and I think perhaps a reprint of the report would be very desirable.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator very kindly yielded to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brandegee] a little while ago to have some exhausted House reports reprinted. I am going to ask him if he will yield now in order to let me ask unanimous consent to have that document printed as a Senate document.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will; and in order that the Senator may have before him the number and the title of the docu-

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask, before I make the formal request, whether the testimony that the Senator has quoted was taken from the report?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. So that would be included in the document if it is reprinted.

I ask unanimous consent that the report in question be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The number of it the Senator will find in the title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I should like to ask what the book is that is to be printed as a public document.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is not a book. Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is it the large book the Senator has in his hand?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, no; it is just the report found in this volume, with a number of other reports.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator gave the title of the report in his remarks, but I have forgotten just what it was.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will give it.
Mr. NORRIS. The Senator will be able to supply the Clerk with the proper designation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is entitled:

[Fifty-third Congress, second session, Report No. 1468.] VIOLATION OF ARMOR CONTRACTS.

REPORT AND EVIDENCE SUBMITTED BY THE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS (HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES) ON INVESTIGATION OF ARMOR-PLATE CONTRACTS MADE BY THE GOVERNMENT WITH THE CARNEGIE STEEL CO. Subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs appointed to con-

Suncommittee of the Committee of duct the investigation: Hon. Amos J. Cummings, chairman. Hon. H. D. Money. Hon. J. P. Dolliver. Hon. J. F. C. Talbott, Hon. James W. Wadsworth.

And then follow the members of the committee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have no objection to the printing of that report as a public document. I wanted to say, however, that I think we should exercise some caution in the printing of public documents, so that we shall not have very lengthy matters printed as public documents, for this reason:

I am a member of a subcommittee which had hearings on a bill on two afternoons, and expected to have the hearings printed for the use of the entire committee. We had an estimate made of the cost, and found that it would cost $1,200 to print the two afternoons' hearings. I simply wanted to have that brought to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not anxious to have all the evidence printed, but I know a little about this myself, and in the documents I think will be found quotations from the evidence. It will probably not be larger than the document I hold in my hand, as I remember it. But it is something of very great importance, connected directly with the Government, and with the Navy particularly, and I was unable, although extremely anxious, to locate it several months ago.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. As I said, Mr. President, my remark is not at all in connection with the request to print this document, to which I have no objection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think that the purpose sought to be accomplished by the Senator from Nebraska in his request will be secured by reprinting this report of the com-

Mr. NORRIS.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I want. Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Without the accompanying documents. Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, my request is to reprint the report of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARAWAY in the chair). there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I just read two or three paragraphs from this report, giving the estimate of the committee on Mr. Schwab and Mr. William E. Corey, and to-day Mr. Schwab is the real head of the Bethlehem Steel Co. and Mr. Corey is the president of the Midvale Steel & Ordnance Co. Thus, two of the three concerns which manufacture all the armor plate used in our naval vessels are controlled and directed by the men impeached in this record, the men who, upon their own admissions, were justly discredited and impeached by the committee. The report has this further to say about Mr. Schwab and Mr. Corey:

It has been conclusively shown that the inspectors have been satisfied and the armor plates passed by the most notorious frauds. The efforts of the company and its superintendents, Cline, Corey, and Schwab, have been to satisfy your committee that the armor is up to the requirements of the contract, notwithstanding the false reports to the inspectors, doctoring of specimens, plugging of plates, fraudulent re-treating of test plates, and jockeying of the testing machines. The unblushing character of the frauds to which these men have been parties, and the disregard of truth and honesty which they have shown in testifying before your committee, render them unworthy of credence.

Go ahead, gentlemen. Put through your naval appropriation bills, with your hundreds of millions of dollars of taxation upon the people of this country, to carry out contracts with Schwab and Corey, the very men a committee of the Congress of the United States has denounced as unworthy of credence on their own testimony.

It may be, Mr. President, that that sort of thing can be made to carry on for a while, but there will be an end of it, and there will be an end of the representatives of any party or any political organization that backs up that sort of legislation.

Mr. President, no man can read the list of names of those who were prominent in the Navy League, during the days when preparedness was being agitated, in 1915, and deny that behind that organization were selfish interests, plotting by every possible means to gain advantage to themselves at the expense of the taxpayers of this country.

In the winter of 1918, during the third session of the Sixtyfifth Congress, a House committee, under House resolution 469, investigated the National Security League, which had made an effort to defeat Members of the House who had not been favorable to the large appropriations for the Army and Navy, conscription, and similar measures. It was found that the organization was influenced and controlled by the same interests that were behind the Navy League. The investigation revealed that the following were some of the contributors to a secret fund, upon which the Security League had conducted its activities;

J. Pierpont Morgan, head of J. P. Morgan & Co_____ John D. Rockefeller, head of the Standard Oll Co_____ T. Coleman Du Pont, head of the Powder Trust (amount un-$2,300 35,000

5,000

John D. Rockefeller, head of the Statuary O.

T. Coleman Du Pont, head of the Powder Trust (amount unknown).

Henry C. Frick, late a director in the United States Steel Corporation and multimillionaire steel magnate.

Arthur Curtis James, one of the heads of the American Smelting & Refining Co., a chief beneficiary of the war.

Robert Bacon, late a director of the United States Steel Corporation and former member of J. P. Morgan & Co.

William K. Vanderbilt, one of the owners of the New York Central Lines and allied railroad interests (amount unknown).

T. De Witt Cuyler, chairman Railway Executives' Association. 40,000

In this report, after this investigation-and, Mr. President. I remind you that this is rather recent information—the House committee made the following statement:

The testimony discloses that Mr. S. Stanwood Menken is the one who conceived the idea of forming the National Security League. This was done, he says, while listening to certain debates in the House of Commons in England on August 5, 1914.

I am coming shortly to take up the situation over on the other side. It is quite informing. The report of the committee continues:

Mr. Menken, who sat in the House of Commons in England and conceived the idea of forming the National Security League in America, stated in his testimony before your committee that he wished to see the income tax lessened at the upper end and enlarged at the lower end. He even went so far as to say that he thought an income tax should be imposed upon every man's income, even down to the one who worked for a dollar a day.

It will be impracticable in a report of the length to which, of necessity, this must be confined to take up all of the "foreign entanglements" of the originators of the National Security League. However, sight must not be lost of the fact that it was conceived in London by an attorney representing sugar, steel, and other large interests both in this country and abroad, and that its very inception in New York others representing like interests are found among those who became the most active in its organization; and next, when the organization had thrown aside its pretense of being engaged only in "preparedness," and had reached the real purpose of its undertaking, Mr. Charles D. Orth was selected to take charge of its real activities, which unquestionably were political in nature, as will be shown later in this report.

The report further states, at page 8, the third paragraph:

The league's "congressional chart" was made up of eight measures which had been before Congress. The first related to the McLemore resolution; the second to the Kahn amendment to the Hay Army bill; the third to the Brandegee amendment to the Hay-Chamberlain Army bill; the fourth to section 56, providing for a volunteer reserve Army wholly under Federal control; the fifth to a motion to recommit the naval appropriation bill; the sixth to the Cooper amendment; the seventh to the declaration of war with Germany; the eighth to the Kahn amendment to the conscription act.

Those were tests which this organization applied as to the fitness of Members to be reelected to the House of Representatives.

Mr. Orth testified that the league selected 169 congressional districts in the United States in which to be active and 47 districts in which to be intensively active. Yet each and every one of the officers of the league swore positively and repeatedly that the league did not enter politics. They qualified the statement by saying they were not in partisan politics, * * * In other words, they were neither for nor against a candidate because he was a Democrat, neither were they for or against a man because he was a Republican. As a matter of fact, the league cared nothing whatever for a candidate's party affiliation. What chiefly concerned them was how his attitude would affect a certain interest that would be the subject of legislation by Congress during the reconstruction period. The active agencies of the league were not concerned about the policies of the party in power so long as they felt the interests would be protected. What they wanted is disclosed both by the questionnaire that they sent out to candidates for Congress and by the business interests of those who furnished the money with which they operated.

I believe, sir, that it will not be amiss to refer here to the experience of Great Britain with professional militarists. seems to be admitted that Germany finally succumbed to the influence of the Navy League and other militarist organizations.

Mr. President, I believe the Senate should order an investigation of the various armor and munition companies that have these large contracts with our Government, with a view to determine who owns the stock in these "big concerns," the character of their contracts, the magnitude of their profits, what combinations, if any, exist between such contractors, and, indeed, everything pertaining to the business which is of public concern.

Unofficial investigations by reliable publicists in other countries have revealed connections between munition contractors and public officials, very offensive to any decent conception of business and official integrity.

Such an investigation resulted in the most shocking dis-closures, involving members of the British Parliament, officers of the navy, and officials connected with the Admiralty.

I hold in my hand an English publication entitled "The War Traders," by George Herbert Perris, author of "An Industrial History of Modern England" and other publications.

Mr. Perris's book, from which I shall read a few pages, was published in England in 1914. He says:

published in England in 1914. He says:

I have not attempted the long task of making a thorough examination of the companies' share lists. A rapid reference to three or four of them suffice to confirm and deepen the impression created by the analyses of several lists published by the Investors' Review five years ago—before the recent large expansions of capital—when it was found that Armstrong-Whitworth lists alone contained the names of 60 noblemen, their wives, sons, or daughters, 15 baronets, 20 knights, 8 M. P.'s, 20 military and naval officers, and 8 journalists. There is now a marked connection, also, between armaments shareholding and active membership of bodies like the National Service League and the Navy League. A considerable number of members of Parliament, including several members of the present and recent ministries, are to be found among the directors and shareholders of these companies whose profits depend immediately upon cabinet decisions and votes of the House of Commons.

But it appears to me an even graver matter that officers high in the two services, and responsible officials of the connected administrative departments, men of influence corresponding with their peculiar knowledge and experience, are with increasing frequency transferring themselves from the service of the State to the service of these profiteering firms.

The following instances will serve to illustrate the process:

The following instances will serve to illustrate the process:
Armstrong Whitworth & Co.: The chairman, Sir Andrew Noble, Bart, K. C. B., FR. S., late captain of the Royal Artillery, was member of the first committee of explosives and is a member of the present board of research. He has many foreign decorations, and is a conservative and tariff reformer.

To balance matters a little, the vice chairman was, until his death recently, the Right Hom. Lord Reudel, formerly friend and host of William Ewart Gladstone, the father-in-law of Henry Neville Gladstone, who is also a member of the Armstrong board.

Other directors are Sir George H. Murray, who was private secretary, successively, to W. E. Gladstone and Lord Rosebery, and was permanent secretary of the treasury from 1902 to 1911; Col. Sir Percy Girouard, a Canadian by birth and an officer of the Royal Engineers, who was governor of northern Nigeria until 1909, and governor and commander in chief of British East Africa thence until 1912; Rear Admiral Sir Charles Ottley, formerly British naval attaché in the United States, Japan, Italy, Russia, and France, naval assistant of the defense committee in 1904, from 1905 to 1907 director of naval intelligence, and thereafter secretary of the supreme war board of the Empire, the committee of imperial defense. At the annual meeting of the company in 1913 Sir Andrew Noble spoke gratefully of the "most valuable assistance" of these gentlemen; and, indeed, "most valuable" it must be, for there could hardly be found three men carrying with them a completer knowledge of the inner working of the British Government, to say nothing of their personal influence and capacity.

Among the directors are also Sir William Edward Smith, C. B., lately superintendent of construction accounts and contract work to the admiralty, naval construction; and Mr. Henry Whitehead, chairman of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Bank and director of the Whitehead Torpedo Works (Weymouth) (Ltd.). Among the trustees for the debenture holders of Armstrong's stand Earl Grey, formerly governor general of Canada; and another, until his recent death, was the Hon. Alfred Lyttelton, K. C., formerly colonial secretary and active member of front opposition bench.

This is just one company. Here is another:

The Vickers-Beardmore group. The vice chairman and joint managing director of Vickers (Ltd.) (director also to several subordinate companies), is Lieut. Sir Arthur Trevor Dawson. This distinguished officer is a lieutenant in the navy, was experimental officer at Woolwich to 1892, and became superintendent of ordnance to Vickers in 1896, and was knighted in 1909.

One of his colleagues on the board is Sir Vincent Caillard, the great financier, who has often been engaged in special political duties for the British Government, especially in the Near East, and was president of the Ottoman debt council and financial representative of England, Holland, and Belgium at Constantinople from 1893 to 1898. He is or was chairman of Mr. Chamberlain's famous tariff commission, and is the author, among other things, of a musical setting of Blake's "Songs of Innocence."

Lord Sandhurst, G. C. I. E., twice undersecretary for war and new lord chamberlain, is or was a dehenture trustee of Vickers; and the Rt. Hon. Lewis Harcourt, M. P., secretary of state for the colonies, is a substantial shareholder.

The Marquis of Graham, C. B., C. V. O., and Col. J. Smith Parke, M. V. O., V. D., member of several war office committees and an advocate of compulsory military training, are directors of Beardmore's. Lord Balfour of Burleigh is a debenture trustee of this company and of the Coventry Ordnance Co.

We have mentioned the association of representatives of Armstrong and Vickers on the board of the Whitehead Tornede Works.

We have mentioned the association of representatives of Armstrong and Vickers on the board of the Whitehead Torpedo Works. The Hon. T. F. Fremantle, A. D. C. to the commander in chief of the British Army (Lord Wolseley), from 1895 to 1900, and for the next four years assistant secretary to the then secretary of state for war, Lord Midleton, of whom he is a connection by marriage, is a director of this company, as are also the Hon. Laurence Alan Brodrick, brother of Lord Midleton, Capt. Edgar Lees, R. N., and Mr. Henry Whitehead, M. V. O.

That is the second of the big armor companies. Here is another one, pretty closely connected up in an official way with Parliament and with the ministry:

THE CAMMELL-BROWN-FAIRFIELD-COVENTRY-FIRTH GROUP.

We have seen that Lord Aberconway, a prominent liberal peer, is chairman of John Brown & Co. and director of Palmer's and Firth's, while his son, the Hon. H. D. McLaren, a member of Parliament, sits upon the boards of Palmer's and the great Middesbrough Ironmasters; that Lord Pirrie, the chairman of Harland & Wolff, is also associated with John Brown & Co., Firth's, and the Coventry Ordnance Works. Mr. Samuel Roberts, conservative member of Parliament for the Ecteshall division of Sheffield, who has made no disguise of his opinion morey should be spent on the navy, is a director of Cammell, Laird & Co., of which Col. W. Sidebottom is deputy chairman. Mr. Alexander Gracie, M. V. O., is chairman of the Fairfield Co. and a director of Cammell's.

Alexander Gracie, M. V. O., is chairman of the Fairfield Co. and a director of Cammell's.

These companies command an extraordinary array of talent lately in the service of the State.

Capt. T. J. Tressider, late of the Royal Engineers and Malta, is a director of Brown's and the Coventry Co. Lieut. Col. J. G. S. Davies, late of the Royal Engineers, sits on the boards of Brown and Bolckow-Vaughan. Col. O. C. Armstrong, D. S. O., late of the Indian array, retired in 1909, and is now managing director of Beardmore's. Maj. Handley is connected with Cammell's and the Workington Steel Co.; Maj. Strange with the Cotton Powder Co. and Thos. Firth & Sons.

Mr. H. E. Deadman, C. B., member of council of the Institute of Naval Architects, now a director of the Cammell and Fairfield companies, has a long Admiralty record behind him. From 1867 to 1880 he was overseer of warships building in private yards and yard foreman at Devouport. He then became naval constructor successively at Bombay, Chatham, and Portsmouth. From 1902 to 1906 he was assistant director of naval construction at the Admiralty, and, as Who's Who records, "has several times received the thanks of the board of admiralty for services rendered."

Admiral Sir Archibald L. Douglas, G. C. V. O., G. C. B., who also has high French, Spanish, and Japanese decorations, was director of the Japanese Imperial Naval College in 1873 to 1875 and rose from one command to another to be commander in chief in East India in 1898 and 1899, when he became a lord of the Admiralty. He was A. D. C. to Queen Victoria during her jubilee, vice president of the ordnance committee 1896–1898, and commander in chief in East India in 1898 and 1899, when he became a lord of the Admiralty. He was A. D. C. to R. The Fairfield directorate includes Admiral Sir George Dighy Morant, K. C. B., who, after enjoying a number of commands in the navy, became successively superintendent of Pembroke Dockyards and admirat superintendent of Chatham Dockyard; Capt. Sir D. E. R. Brownrigg, Royal Navy, Bart., who was British naval attaché in Japan, 1910-1912; and Col. Paget P. Mosley.

Rear Admiral R. H. S. Bacon, C. V. O., first captain of H. M. S. Dreadnaught, naval assistant to the first sea lord, and from 1907 to 1909 director of naval ordnance and torpedoes, is managing director of the Coventry Ordnance Co.

Mr. President, I will as to print, without detaining the Senate to read into the RECORD, the names of the other members of Parliament and other officials, and the names of officers of high rank in or fermerly connected with the army and navy, who held upon the boards of directors of the great munitions ring of England important and controlling positions, and who are, therefore, in an official position to influence the character and extent of the contracts made by the Government with the companies with which they are identified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request will be granted.

Sir A. T. Hadfield, F. R. S., a Liberal and the inventor of manganese steel, has also given "most valuable assistance" as chairman of the Hadfield Steel Boundry, Sheffield, which is a considerable contractor with the Admiralty and War Office. Among the directors are Lord Claud Hamilton, Conservative, Member of Parliament for South Kensington since 1910; Maj. A. B. H. Clerke, late Royal Artillery; and, as noted above, Admiral Sir A. Douglas, Gem Brackenbury, K. C. B., K. C. S. I., formerly director of military intelligence and director of ordnance at the War Office, was on the board till his death recently, Maj. Gen. Stuart James Nicholson, C. Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, K. C. Lord Ribblesdale, formerly a major of the rifle brigade, is a director of the Nobel Dynamite Trust Co. Admiral Sir Cyprian Bridge, G. C. Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have taken the time of the Senate to present this matter in order that there may be upon our records here evidence of the fact that in Great Britain, where their standards are, I suppose, not very different from those which prevail in this country, there is shown to be this interweaving of the interests of the private financial organizations that are in a position to make enormous profits out of Government contracts with those having seats of power in Parliament and in the ministries, and with those having official connection with the Army or Navy, where their influence would be very potent in making contracts between the Government and these organizations.

Mr. President, I am not able to furnish at this particular moment the names of any officers of the Army and Navy of the United States who are tied up with and employed by the armorplate ring and the munition makers who are interested in con-tracts with the Government. That there have been officers of the Army and Navy under the pay of these big contractors, these big concerns, and at the same time drawing salaries from the Government of the United States is very certain. I do not be-lieve there is anybody here prepared to defend that practice. I have among my papers here the report of a committee of this body that has very strongly rebuked it. I will read from that report submitted by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs. The report was based upon a discovery of the existence at the time it was made of the fact that officers of the Army and Navy who were serving or seeking to serve two masters the public on the one hand and the armor ring and munition makers on the other. A committee of this body had this to say

About it:

No man can well serve two masters, and if contractors having large dealings with a department of the Government can take into their employ, with no limit to compensation, officials of that department and through them learn the secrets and purposes of the department and, moreover, insidiously influence its action, great injury may result to the public service. The fundamental principle upon which all legitimate business is transacted, that each side shall be represented solely by persons wholly devoted to its own interest, is viciously violated by a custom which allows one side to take into its pecuniary employment a representative of the other side.

An effort was made in the debate to draw a distinction between officers of the active list and officers of the retired list. The committee deny that any well-founded distinction exists which ought to influence the decision of the question. The retired officers of the Navy remain officers to all intents and purposes, with an important exception. Section 1462 of the Revised Statutes provides that:

"No officer on the retired list of the Navy shall be employed on active duty except in time of war—

They are liable, of course, to be called whenever there is a

They are liable, of course, to be called whenever there is a

But, notwithstanding this status exempts retired officers from all obligations to render any service for the liberal retired pay which they receive for life, amounting usually to three-fourths of their active duty pay, yet they remain part of the Navy of the United States, available in any emergency of war. They are entitled to wear their uniforms on public occasions, and are allowed free access to every bureau of the Navy Department, on the theory that they are still ready to serve the interests of the Government by fidelity, sound advice, and an earnest spirit of devotion to public duty. It is quite enough to allow such officers to enter into ordinary private employment for compensation; to permit them to take sides against the Government and to enter into the employ of contractors having dealings with the Government reaching to the millions of dollars will certainly, if the custom continues, become most pernicious and injurious to the public interest. Proclaim that such officers may be so employed by a repealing clause, which has now become a law, and a bold and wealthy contractor, willing to spend enough money to take into his employ a sufficient number of naval officers on the active and retired list, would be able thoroughly to weaken the department in its dealings with such contractor and to put the Government at his mercy in making bargains, which would be substantially entered into with the representatives on one side alone conducting all the negotiations.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator state what the

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator state what the report is from which he is reading? I am interested in the statement.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am reading from a report of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, made following its investigation from 1896 to 1897. The report was made to the Senate on February 7, 1897, and is entitled "Senate Report 1453, Fiftyfourth Congress, second session."

Mr. WILLIS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say to the Senator that this report, strong as its language is, did not stop the practice. It was continued down to, and I believe it is in existence at, the present time. I am endeavoring to ascertain the exact facts about it. I think it is true that Army officers, men connected with the Army and the Navy, have worked out inventions, that those inventions have been made the basis for contract relations with these very companies, that business arrangements have been entered into through which the inventors, the officers of the Army and Navy, have had a continuing interest in the contracts made for the use of the patented inventions, made with the companies that have become part owners of them with the officers who made the inventions, and the officers still continuing to hold their places with the Government and be parties on the other hand to the very contracts that brought those inventions into sale and delivery and use by the Government,

Mr. President, I may have occasion to quote further from Mr. Perris before this debate is concluded; but for the present content myself with what I have already presented to the Senate upon that subject.

[At this point Mr. LA FOLLETTE yielded the floor for the day.] Wednesday, May 25, 1921.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am still contending that the Senate will make a very serious mistake if it passes the pending bill. Senators here are urging adequate prepared-For what are we preparing and what is adequate preparedness? Manifestly the great program which the pending bill is to work out is preparation for another war-for the next war in which the United States shall be called upon to participate—and the only way in which we can test the adequateness of preparation for the next war is to determine as best we can the character of the next war and the methods which will be employed in fighting it, if there is to be another war.

Mr. Will Irwin is an able American writer on public questions. He has just written a book entitled "The Next War," published in 1921 by the E. P. Dutton Co. I have a copy of it in my hand. Mr. Irwin had probably a longer and more intimate acquaintance with the late war than any other American writer, and through his vivid pictures of the war, as he assembled them at the front and in the field and published them throughout the war, he earned the title of the "ace" of war correspondents.

This book is not merely a well-thought-out and well-presented assortment of the opinions of this great war correspondent; is, in addition to that, a compilation of the best thought and the most authoritative opinion among military and naval experts concerning the methods of warfare which will be employed when next the nations of the world come to grips, if the world is doomed to witness that awful catastrophe.

I shall read into the RECORD a few paragraphs from this book of Mr. Irwin, because I think it will present such a picture, such an array of facts, and such an assembling of the opinions of military and naval experts as will horrify the American people, and will result, when they have grasped the details and the possibilities of the "next war," in a demand upon their part that this shall in truth and in fact have been a war to end all wars, and that the American Government, leading all the Governments and all the nations of the world, as it may now from its strong position, shall set before the world an example which will in truth and fact make of this last war the end of all wars.

If there is any lesson to be learned from the awful experience through which the world passed from 1914 to 1918, an experience which set aside all the preconceived notions with regard to the conduct of war, it has become indubitably established that the next war, if there shall ever be another war, will be fought with weapons which presage the destruction of the human race.

I read from page 37 of Mr. Irwin's book and from the chapter entitled "The new warfare," as follows:

At the time of the armistice we were manufacturing for the campaign of 1919 our Lewisite gas. It was invisible; it was a sinking gas, which would search out the refugees of dugouts and cellars; if breathed, it killed at once—and it killed not only through the lungs. Wherever it settled on the skin it produced a poison which penetrated the system and brought almost certain death. It was limiteal to all cell life, animal or vegetable. Masks alone were of no use against it. Further, it had fifty-five times the "spread" of any poison gas hitherto used in the war—

This horrible weapon was our invention!-

An expert has said that a dozen Lewisite air bombs of the greatest size in use during 1918 might with a favorable wind have eliminated the population of Berlin. Possibly he exaggerated, but probably not greatly. The armistice came, but gas research went on. Now we have more than a hint of a gas beyond Lewisite. It can not be much more deadly, but, in proportion to the amount of chemical which generates it, the spread is far greater. A mere capsule of this gas in a small grenade can generate square rods and even acres of death in the absolute.

I read further from page 42 of Mr. Irwin's book, because I desire in so far as I am able to carry to the American people the real truth regarding the conditions that confront us in this scheme of carrying on preparation for war. It is not possible to get a very widely extended distribution through the press of the real facts in all of the horror of detail. The best that I can do it to make it a part of the Congressional Record, and through that and the distribution that can follow of the matter which is printed in the Recorp, lay before the American people ultimately a clear understanding of the horrors of modern warfare.

On page 42 of Mr. Irwin's book, I find the following:

Just before the armistice, an American, binding together many inventions made by civilians for civilian purposes, showed a dazzling way to the warfare of the future. He proved that airplanes flying without pilots could be steered accurately by wireless. This meant that the airplane had become a supergun. Caliber was increased indefinitely. An airplane could now carry explosive charges or gas charges up to its whole lifting capacity of many tons. It was no longer merely a vehicle; it could be virtually a self-propelling shell. And in the matter of accuracy the uncertain human factor was nearly eliminated, as happens in most highly improved machines. An expert on this kind of marksmanship, hovering in an airplane or Zepplin many miles away with a fleet of protecting battleplanes guarding him to prevent hurried workmanship, could guide these explosive fleets to their objective, whether town or fortress. Here, in effect, was a gun with a range as long as the width of European nations, a bursting charge beyond the previous imaginations of gunnery.

Mr. President a little further along in my observations I am

Mr. President, a little further along in my observations I am going to raise the question as to how much of the enormous cost imposed as a tax burden upon the American people in this bill will be effective, if at all, against that kind of warfare. That raises the further question as to how much of it is simply profit to those who have the contracts and whether one dollar of this expenditure, outside of the trifling amount found in the naval appropriation bill for airplanes and submarines, will be effective, will be a wise expenditure, in the event that we are hereafter to be parties to another war.

Mr. Irwin says further:

Mr. Irwin says further:

In "the next war," this gas-bombardment of capitals and great towns is not only a possibility, but a strong probability—almost a certainty. Military staffs have had time to think, to carry out the changes and discoveries of the Great War to their logical conclusion. They see even that with the known gases, the existing airplanes, Paris, Rome, or London could in one night be changed from a metropolis to a necropolis. If any military man hesitates to apply this method—and being human, and having a professional dislike of killing civilians, he must hesitate—the thought of what the enemy might do drives him to consideration of this plan of warfare, and to preparation. There are at this moment at least two elements in the world quite capable of turning this trick had they the means and control. The method is so effective that if you do not use it, some one else will, You must be prepared to counter, to reply in kind. Here are the words of a few authorities:

Brig. Gen. Mitchell of the United States Army, pleading with the House Committee on Appropriations for more defensive airplanes, said that "a few planes could visit New York as the central point of a territory 100 miles square every eight days and drop enough gas to keep the entire area inundated.

Yet it was not possible for anyone to offer testimony enough to the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate to divert their minds from the investment of hundreds of millions of dollars in the old craft which the experience of the world from 1914 to 1918, on the authority of the greatest naval brains in the world, demonstrated to be obsolete.

I read further:

"Two hundred tons of phosgene gas could be laid every eight days and would be enough to kill every inhabitant."

Capt. Bradner, Chief of Research of the Chemical Warfare Service, said at a congressional hearing:

"One plane carrying two tons of the liquid—a certain gas-generating compound—could cover an area 100 feet wide and 7 miles long, and could deposit enough material to kill every man in the area by action on his skin. It would be entirely possible for this country to manufacture several thousand tons a day, provided the necessary plants had been built. If Germany had had 4,000 tons of this material and 300 or 400 planes equipped in this way for its distribution, the entire First American Army would have been annihilated in 10 or 12 hours.

Yet we go on building, at a cost of from forty to forty-four million dollars per vessel, a type of vessel that the foremost admirals of Great Britain and the United States assure us is mere junk after it is completed.

Mr. President, it is horrifying to think of the best scientific ability of the world being directed at the present time, as it is to-day, to work out agencies of destruction for the annihilation of mankind.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin vield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. In that connection I call attention to an interview with the British ambassador reported in this morning's newspaper, in which he asserts that the development and dissemination of disease germs will be likely to be a feature of the next war.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, Mr. President; I am coming to that in a moment. Before the world went mad on war the evidences of civilization were the employment of all of the known devices and inventions for the betterment of mankind. By every agency of science in the laboratories of our universities, in the private foundations that men of benevolence and wealth had established, we were prosecuting research, in every avenue along which science pointed the way, to overcome the diseases that assail mankind, to meet the afflictions that shorten life. All that, Mr. President, has been arrested, and all the agencies and all the genius, and, it does seem as if all the wealth, are now being organized to accomplish the destruction of human life. Yet, Mr. President, there is not to be found within the pages of the pending bill any line that looks to meeting this situation. All the experience of the war period is rejected here. It is set aside; it is thrown into the scrap heap, and with a perversity that I can not understand, with a blindness that seems to be shocking, we go on piling up the tax burdens upon the American people to build something that can have no relation whatever worth considering to any war of the

Mr. President, the world has become so brutalized that the most advanced and enlightened nations of civilization are offering premiums and prizes and gold medals to scientists to work out the most modern and far-reaching schemes and methods of destroying men and life and property. There is just one glimmer of hope in it all-it is more than a ray of hope; it seems almost a certainty to me-that the thing is going to be so appalling, so horrible, that the whole world will revolt; and men in the legislative parliaments of the world will be forced to recognize the fact that to rescue mankind from this madness, war must be ended, and that the highest test of courage and advancement and progress of a nation will be its willingness to take the risk of leading the way to a permanent

Sir, if this great Government, the richest and foremost of all the earth, had the courage to dock its Navy and say to the world that it is done with this business, there is not another nation on the face of the earth that could impose upon its people the burden of taxation which is necessary to maintain the military establishments that we are forcing them to build by the insane policy which we are pursuing; but if we are going to offer premiums, if we are going to confer military titles and gold medals upon scientists of this country to work out the most destructive means which science can develop for making and his replies.

away with human life, then the other nations are going to be forced to do exactly the same thing.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will it disturb the Senator if make a suggestion there?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It will not disturb me at all. Mr. KING. Before the Naval Affairs Committee quite recently one of the most distinguished admirals of the United States Navy, one who has made very valuable contributions to naval literature, stated in answer to a question which I propounded to him, that there was no chance whatever for a cessation of the building of ships, that we would go on indefinitely. I suggested to him that, if that were the case, mankind would be burdened with taxation for the centuries to come, or words to that effect, and to that he rendered assent, and took the view, which I think is in contravention of the idea of the moral progress of the world, that no agreements between nations would be effective to prevent naval competition or bring about naval disarmament; that mankind was condemnedfor that was the ultimate conclusion which he reached-to continue under the present naval and military policy to arm during all the ages which are to come.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if that is to be accepted as the philosophy of life, then I submit to the Senator from Utah that the human race has but a short course to run when there is taken into account the new methods of killing which the recent war has developed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the senator from Montana?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am very glad the Senator from Utah has called attention to the view expressed by the distinguished admiral referred to by him. Of course, if the world can not rely upon agreements between nations for the reduction of armaments, it is a very hopeless outlook. If they can not agree upon the reduction of armaments I can not believe that by independent action they are going to reduce their armaments; but I see no reason for entertaining any such idea. The outlook which the Senator from Wisconsin has presented to us in the course of his address would be desperate indeed, if we were obliged to accept the idea that nothing possibly could come of such an arrangement as is suggested by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

It occurs to me that unless the program which is proposed by this bill for the development and upkeep of the Navy is accompanied by some such plan as is outlined in the amendment tendered by the Senator from Idaho the situation is as desperate as has been suggested by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if the nations of the world can not be expected to keep faith with each other in agreements with respect to disarmament, then there is no sense in our entering into treaty relations as to any of the questions or issues that arise between nations.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon a further observation in connection with the same subject?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I feel entirely certain that the distinguished admiral who made this remark must, of course, have referred to some other nation. I apprehend that he would not stand before self-respecting American citizens and say that his own country, our country, that we love, would either covertly or openly violate its solemn obligation, its pledge, its plighted word, its treaty. Of course, what he means is that some other nation will do that. In other words, it is a Pharisaical view to take, that we are highly virtuous ourselves but the other nations do not love virtue as we do.

Moreover, Mr. President, we have abundant evidence that that view is not correct. It is afforded by the convention which for a century has been kept between Great Britain and the United States touching armaments upon the Great Lakes. It is refuted by the experience of Argentina and Chile with reference to an agreement that they should limit their naval armaments; so we are not obliged to accept that.

I do not adhere at all to the idea that if the plan proposed by the Senator from Idaho comes to fruition in the form of an agreement or a treaty it will not be religiously observed by the nations entering into it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. KING. I do not want to do the admiral an injustice, and in view of the fact that I have his testimony before me, if it does not disturb the Senator, I should like to read just a few questions propounded by the Senator from Montana and myself,

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not at all; it does not divert me at all. Mr. KING (reading)

Senator Walsh. In short, you find no chance to escape from the burden of competitive armaments?

Admiral Firke. I should like to see the burden made as light as possible, Senator; but I do not see, on looking at it in the light of history, in the way in which we are going now—competition among the people and the tendency to overseas trade—that there is hope for cessation Senator Walsh. If an agreement for the reduction of armaments-

And he had said that before in his testimony-

And he had said that before in his testimony—would be entirely ineffective, you must equally agree that an agreement for the purpose of not increasing armaments—that is, holding them stable—would be equally ineffective. Am I right?
Admiral Fiske. I am afraid it will be ineffective.
Senator Walsh. So that the necessary conclusion at which we must arrive from your argument is that there is no possible escape from the burden of competitive armaments, and you can see no relief whatever in any line from the rivalry in which we are now engaged?
Admiral Fiske. I am sorry to say it, but I think so.
Senator King, and that would mean that we would have to continue our naval and military preparations indefinitely?
Admiral Fiske. I think so.

I think that concluded his testimony on that point. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, perhaps it will shed a little light on the views of the admiral to quote, right in that connection, a few sentences from Sir Percy Scott in a recent issue of the London Times. The thing is so good, if Senators have not had the opportunity to see it, that I am tempted to read it all, although I read a part of it a few days ago in the Senate; but I will read just a paragraph that bears, as I think, upon the views expressed by Admiral Fiske.

Sir Percy Scott says that it is hardly to be expected that these active men in the navy are going to support views that will put them out of business. He says:

put them out of business. He says:

The building of battleships will be supported by all the battleship builders of the world, because it is the bread whereby they live. Look what a paying concern it is! Would not any of your readers like to get a nice, fat contract for, say, only five battleships at thirty-five millions of golden sovereigns? In these circumstances, we must expect the construction of battleships to be backed by many people possessing strong political interests, commercial interests, and the support of capital. We must also expect the necessity of battleships to be supported by all the navies of the world, for naval men do not commit suicide, and battleships are vital to their profession and vital to their comfort. To be captain of a battleship is the ambition of every naval officer. Who cise in the world travels about with the same comfort as the captain of a battleship? He has a large drawing-room, a dining room in which he can seat 25 or 30 guests, a commodious bedroom with bathroom attached, and spare bedrooms. All these points will naturally be taken into consideration, or, at any rate, they will flit through the mind of every naval officer before he decides to vote for not building battleships.

Mr. President. I am not arguing here for suspending all

Mr. President, I am not arguing here for suspending all preparations for the defense of this country, by no manner of means. But I say you can not justify the expenditures that are being made under this bill in the face of the testimony that is before the country and that is going to be more definitely before the country than it has yet been presented to them.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I should like to make this suggestion to the Senator from Wisconsin, to be discussed by him in his very interesting speech:

The whole theory upon which this enormously large naval appropriation is based is that the greater number of ships means victory, and that it is impossible for a nation to crumple itself up by the expense of a navy as it can with an army. Now, I beg to remind the Senator that both in modern times and in ancient times it has been repeatedly demonstrated that the strength of a navy does not depend upon the number of the ships nor the number of the fighters on the ships, but upon the quality of the fighters on the ships, and that starting with Holland and going back to Spain we could go back to where the whole Grecian confederacy wrecked itself at Sicily on its fleet, and that it is just as true that a nation topheavy with a fleet can bankrupt itself and ruin itself as that it can do so with a standing army

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, there is no question about the accuracy of the statement made by the Senator from Georgia, and no man in this body or outside of it better knows his history than does the Senator from Georgia. It is a big navy that always tends to bring on war. Back of this big-navy bill are organized the great interests that have accumulated capital which they are taking out of this country and investing in foreign countries, depleting the capital of this country by exploitation of the natural resources in the alluring and attractive places of Europe where capital can be invested profitably because of the weak form of the governments. Where government is unstable, property is cheap. It is the plan of our special interests to invest their capital into those places where the governments are weak and where the investment of $100,000, the minute you put the American flag behind it, insures its being possibly $1,000,000 in value. That is the big objective behind this big-navy program.

But I want to bring the attention of Senators back to the character of the war we are to have, if there is to be another war, and to emphasize and to drive home, so far as I can, the fact that the appropriations which are being made here are not being made for that purpose. The kind of a Navy we are constructing is an admirable Navy for intimidating small and weak nations. It is not the kind of a Navy that would be useful in fighting any real power of first magnitude anywhere in the world, for the next war will be fought not in trenches, not on the surface of the seas, but from the clouds and from under the water, and the weapons will not be 20-inch guns and heavy projectiles, but death-dealing gas and disease germs, that can destroy the entire civilian population of a nation.

I say that when you get the truth of all this before the American people, when the enlightened womanhood of America understands the barbarous, appalling character of any future war, they will sweep from power and from place representatives who dare to oppose prompt and effective disarmament.

Just look at the rivalry that is going on now. Mr. Irwin says in his book:

Brevet Col. J. F. C. Fuller this year won in England the gold medal of the Royal United Service Institution for his essay on the warfare of the future. All through he avoids this topic of attacks on civilian population; he is treating, like a true old-time military man, of armies alone.

They all do that. They have not the hardihood to present the plan as it is being worked out in all its horrors. I want to say, Mr. President, that there is no difference between the advanced nations of the world in their attitude on this question. It pleased gentlemen here and served their purposes only three or four years ago to quote from Bernhardi in order to make it appear that the German idea with respect to prosecuting warfare was the most horrible that had ever been presented by a civilized nation. You can duplicate any expression you can find in Bernhardi by reference to the highest military authorities of this country or of Great Britain. Indeed, Lord Roberts indorsed the views of Bernhardi, and so did high American military authorities, in the books published immediately following Bernhardi's book.

So it is to-day, Mr. President, we are doing all the horrible and appalling things in preparation for possible war that are being done in other countries.

Mr. Irwin continues in his book:

But Fuller says concerning the general possibilities of gas, which he believes to be the weapon of the future—

Now, the words which are given here are his words, taken from the paper upon which he won the gold medal-

It is quite conceivable that many gases may be discovered which will penetrate all known gas armor. As there is no reason why one man should not be able to release 100 cylinders simultaneously, there is no reason why he should not release several million; in fact, these might be released in England to-day electrically by a one-armed cripple sitting in Kamchatka directly his indicator denoted a favorable wind.

And listen to this:

Maj. Gen. E. D. Swinton, of the British Army, said, in discussing Col. Fuller's paper:

"It has been rather our tendency up to the present to look upon warfare from the retail point of view—of killing men by fifties or hundreds or thousands. But when yeu speak of gas * * * you must remember that you are discussing a weapon which must be considered from the wholesale point of view and if you use it—and I do not know of any reason why you should not—you may kill hundreds of thousands of men, or at any rate disable them."

Just contemplate for a minute what that means. That does not mean pitting soldiers against soldiers; that does not mean putting the rifle against the rifle or the bayonet against the bayonet or the machine gun against the machine gun. That means carrying the warfare into the cities for the destruction of human life, from the infant to old age. Is that shocking to Senators here? From the smirks on some faces I judge not.

It is not so far removed from our own experiences. This last war was the first war, perhaps, in history where there was attempted on a big scale the destruction of noncombatants by what Gen. Swinton describes as the "wholesale system," starving to death the civilian population of an entire nation.

That was a form of warfare which the United States never before sanctioned. Thomas Jefferson, when he was Secretary of State, refused to permit Great Britain to make the United States a party to starving out the civilian population of France. He insisted upon our corn and our other food products going free from hindrance by the battleships of Great Britain into the ports of France to feed Great Britain's enemy, as they went to the ports of Great Britain.

But to continue the quotation from Mr. Irwin:

But to continue the quotation from Mr. Irwin:

Here, perhaps, is the place to say that Lewisite and the gas beyond Lewisite are probably no longer the exclusive secret of the United States Government. We had allies in this war; doubtless they learned the formula. Even if not, once science knows that a formula exists its rediscovery is only a matter of patient research, not of genius. And gas investigation is quietly going on abroad. If they have not arrived at the same substances, the chemists of Europe have worked out others just as deadly. The scientific investigation of the killing possibilities in gas is only four years old.

Col. Fuller says bluntly in his illuminating essay that the armies which entered the late war were antiquated human machines that military brains had ossified.

Warfare must be, will be, brought up to the standards of civilian technique. Henceforth general staffs must not wait for unstimulated civilians to invent new machines or methods of attack and defense. They must mobilize high technicians and inventors in the "pause between wars," as well as in war, bend all their energies toward discovering new ways of killing. And virtually that improvement in warfare is already begun. In the laboratories of Europe—just as the farseeing prophesied after second Ypres—men are studying new ways to destroy life.

Scientific discovery involves the factors of leisure. To reach great things, a man can not be hurried. War is all organized burry. With both sides racing for victory, the savants of Europe had not the leisure to reach out toward the unknown. They worked with poison gas; that was already discovered, and merely needed improvement. Now, in the pause since the armistice, they are venturing into the unknown. Let us take testimony again from the public and official remarks of Gen.

Now, here is a suggestion of a new weapon. Gen. Swinton says:

Ray warfare. I imagine from the progress that has been made in the past that in the future we will not have recourse to gas alone, but will employ every force of nature that we can; and there is a tendency at present for progress in the development of the different forms of rays that can be turned to lethal purposes. We have X rays, we have light rays, we have heat rays. We may not be so very far from the development of some kinds of lethal ray which will shrivel up or paralyze or poison human beings. The final form of human strife, as I regard it, is germ warfare. I think it will come to that; and so far as I can see there is no reason why it should not, if you mean to fight * * * prepare now * * * we must envisage these new forms of warfare, and as far as possible expend energy, time and money in encouraging our inventors and scientists to study the waging of war on a wholesale scale instead of * * * thinking so much about methods which will kill a few individuals only at a time.

I wish to add another paragraph or two from this book of Mr. Irwin's, and I read from page 60, from the chapter entitled "Tactics of the next war," as follows:

Mr. Irwin's, and I read from page 60, from the chapter entitled "Tactics of the next war," as follows:

The gas-proof tank, a military improvement now virtually accomplished, points the way to the perfect defense. Col. Fuller imagines "centers of defense"—fortresses, or something like them, rendered gas-tight, wherein you may keep your reserve forces, to which your tanks will return for repairs and replenishment of supplies. You can reconstruct our great cities so as to furnish for our civilians "centers of defense." This was done imperfectly in the late war, when in constantly ratided towns, such as Venice, the authorities banked the deep cellars with sandbags, thus turning them into dugouts like those used by the troops. However, cellars will never form a defense against sinking, lethal, cell-killing gas like Lewiste and its probable successors. The shelters must be large enough to accommodate the people of a whole city. They must be deep enough in the ground to resist the enormous explosive power of the great new bombs; they must be gas proof, either by rendering them air-tight and furnishing oxygen to keep the immates alive or by providing ventilators which make the outer air pass through an antidote. They must be as easily accessible as the subway—even more accessible. This virtually involves rebuilding modern cities if the inhabitants expect to survive a war.

Unless some general staff in Europe is hugging a deep and sinister secret, we have not yet found the killing ray. That lies beyond the present frontiers of science; its discovery involves pioneer work. If it comes, it may change and intensify warfare in many ways which we can not at present conceive. But warfare by disease-bearing bacilli is already preparing in the laboratories. Here, for example, is one method which I have heard suggested and which, I have learned from men of science, seems quite possible: Find some rather rare disease, preferably one which flourishes in a far corner of the world, so that people of your own region have no insuranc

In this very interesting work Mr. Irwin devotes one chapter to the economics of the next war, in which the possibilities of the destruction of property are very graphically presented. If anyone suspects for a moment that that subject is not undergoing investigation now, he is quite behind the times. If some of the parliamentary bodies of the great wealthy nations of the world saw the possibility of destruction of property upon such a scale as to practically wipe out and annihilate for a period of many years the productivity of land, the source of all of our wealth, I think, that it might be a stronger deterrent force in our preparations for war than the possible destruction of human life, because in most of the great parliamentary bodies of the world to-day property is regarded as much more precious than human life.

On page 108 Mr. Irwin presents this view:

Concerning the actual destruction of physical property, one may speak with less certainty. It all depends upon the larger strategy. I have suggested the elimination of all life in such a city as Parls—or New York—as a possible result. That could be accomplished by such a gas as Lewisite. Now, Lewisite whirled in a lethal cloud over Paris would not greatly injure property. When at length the poison was dissipated the opera would still be there and the Louvre and the great railway terminals and the factories—a little corroded, perhaps, but still usable after you cleaned out the corpses and tidied up a bit. So, perhaps, a better way of breaking up the "resistance of the rear" would be to exterminate not the human Paris but the physical Paris. That could be done in one gigantic conflagration started by inextinguishable chemicals dropped from a few aircraft. The method is practicable even now, in the infancy of chemical warfare, and the military chemists of Europe are experimenting further along these lines. Such a campaign would, of course, not be confined to Paris, although Paris as a center for the brains of war, as the most vital knot in the railway web and the great factory city, is eminently important. It would be aimed also at Lvons and St. Etienne, great manufacturing cities; at Marseille, Cherbourg, Havre, and Bordeaux, the great ports; at a hundred little cities which do their part in making munitions.

In such a campaign of conflagrations the loss of life would necessarily be less than in a killing attack with gas. But possibly not much.

Imagine Paris suddenly become a superheated furnace in a hundred spots; imagine a swift rush of flame through every quarter; imagine the population struggling, piling up, shriveling with the heat; imagine the survivors ranging the open fields in the condition of starving animals.

Such a campaign could in a few weeks nearly equal the property the survivors ranging the open fields in the condition of starving animals.

Such a campaign could in a few weeks nearly equal the property losses of the Great War; especially if the defenders, whom I have imagined to be the French, retaliated on the attackers—say the Germans—and burned Berlin and the Rhine towns.

So far as we can see now, gas will probably be the standard weapon of the next war. High explosives will still be used on an extensive scale; but it will be auxiliary to the new killing instrument. It is unlikely that there will be a locked trench line and a steady bombardment lasting for years. Consequently—ignoring the possibility of great conflagrations—we may hope for a smaller loss in the item of buildings. On the other hand, the bill will probably show a larger item for destroyed fields—agricultural wealth. The struggle just finished was the first in history where any considerable area of land was ruined for cultivation. Now it is a property of the new poison gas that it sterilizes—not only kills cells but prevents the growth of cells. Concerning one successor of Lewisite gas, an expert has said: "You burst a container carrying a minute quantity of the substance which makes the gas at the foot of a tree. You do not see the fumes rise; it is invisible; but within a few seconds you see the leaves begin to shrivel. While we are not quite certain, we estimate that land on which this gas has fallen will grow nothing for about seven years." In the next war—unless we discover meantime some still more effective method of killing—clouds of such gas will sweep over hundreds of square miles, not only eliminating all unprotected life, animal and vegetable, but sterilizing the soil "for about seven years." The power of its soil to produce food is the first vital item in the wealth of nations. It would seem that this increased loss of productive lands should at least balance the decreased loss in buildings.

Mr. President, it is not a very far cry from killing by gas,

Mr. President, it is not a very far cry from killing by gas, a new weapon developed out of the last war, to destroying the fertility of soil by chemical preparations, devastating and rendering barren and a desert waste great areas of productive

I have taken some time, Mr. President, to put into the Record in this connection the sections which I have read from the book by Mr. Irwin. Now, I turn for just a moment to some expert testimony submitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives. I want to be accurate about this, and I will furnish the date. It was on February 4, 1921. The witness who is testifying is Gen. Mitchell. I believe that Gen. Mitchell is the head or the assistant to the head of the Air Service of the United States Army.

Mr. HALE. Gen. Menoher is the head of that service; I

We estimate from the studies we have so far made that direct hits on decks and superstructures will break every electric-light globe on the ship, throwing her into absolute darkness below decks; disrupt telephone, radio, and interior communication systems; fill firerooms, engine rooms, and all compartments ventilated by a forced-draft system with noxious gases; cause shell shock to the persons within a radius of 300 feet, disrupt ammunition hoists, dislodge or jam turrets, dish upper decks at least, kill all persons on upper decks (antiaircraft gun's crews and fire control parties in tops), cause fires to break out, and explode all antiaircraft ammunition. Detonation of bombs beneath water line will sink or disable battleships. If explosion occurs forward of bulge (that part of the ship fitted with longitudinal protection bulkheads), it will cause her to settle by the bow, causing her to decrease speed, to steer badly, and consequently to fall out of formation. If explosion occurs aft of bulge, the after compartments will fill, causing ship to settle by the stern; the main propeller shafts will be thrown out of line, causing almost immediate stopping of engines on that side of ship, consequent slowing down, and inability to keep station in formation. In addition, there is a strong probability that the rudder will become jammed at the same time, making the hip a menace to the ship behind her. If an explosion occurs abreast of the bulge (or amidships) and does not cause the ship to sink, it will at least cause the ship to take a sharp list, causing difficulties in steering and consequently serious trouble in keeping position in formation. It will also cause a marked change (increase or decrease) in the angle of elevation of the main battery guns, which will greatly decrease accuracy of gunfire.

He says further:

Te quote from a report of an eyewitness of the destruction of a large bomb exploded on the Indiana:

"It is safe to assume, judging from the results obtained with the 1,650-pound demolition bomb containing 990 pounds of amatol exploded on the deck, that this amount of explosive is sufficient to put a modern battleship out of action.

"It is safe to assume that the flame and gases generated by the explosion would instantly kill all those that were reached by them. This would include all personnel in the wasts, all personnel in the vicinity of the bomb, the personnel in the turrets, provided one of the openings was directed toward the explosion; lastly, and of major importance, all personnel in the engine room, since the gases would readily penetrate through the gratings over the engine room. It is safe to assume that any personnel in the turrets in the immediate vicinity of the explosion would be killed by concussion. The damage to the navigating instruments and communications would certainly be considerable."

I merely add that, Mr. President, to the matter quoted from Mr. Irwin as contributing additional authority on the subject which he discusses in his very interesting work.

It seems to me that there follows the very certain conclusion that the next war, if there shall be another war, will present a horrifying spectacle from which the human imagination re-coils. The desolation and waste, the utter annihilation of moral and spiritual forces and of every form of life itself which will follow in the wake of the next war compel us at this time to take aggressive and advanced ground for saving this country and the world from the possibility of another war

There is a phase of this situation that I think it is the duty of the Senate to recognize in formulating a naval policy for this country. No one can survey the present alignment of world powers and deny that if the world is to subject itself to the blighting curse of another war the methods of warfare described in the quotations which I have presented here will be employed in a death grapple between races. It will not be a civil war; it will not be merely an international war or an intercontinental struggle, but it will be the most horrible, the most deprayed, the most destructive warfare of which human imagination can conceive.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin further yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that within the past week Lloyd-George has said—the Senator may have quoted it while I was detained from the Senate Chamber-that the next war would leave Europe in ashes; that it would not only be destructive of governments, of nations, but it would be destructive of property, and would leave that great Continent in

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I saw that statement, and I think that is the conclusion that every thoughtful man has forced upon him; and we simply are driven to find some way out here and now. All of this accumulated thought surely militates against such legislation as the pending bill carries. We are doing exactly the thing that forces other nations to make like appropriations or larger appropriations where it is possible for them to raise the money.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, assuming that the United States could build more and larger vessels than any other county. in the world, even that would not give us supremacy of the sea, would it? Did not the last war teach us that if we have war it is very likely that many other nations will get into it, and therefore that there will be no end of the building of ships. Even if we had more than any other one country, we would have to keep on building until we had, perhaps, more than all the rest of the countries put together, and still we would not have the supremacy. I can see no end to it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the Senator's suggestion is correct, that there is no limit, there is not any stopping place, unless we depart from this line of legislation. Yet we make these observations in the discussion of every bill of this character. Year after year we have the same debates, but we go along making the appropriations and repeating the mistakes of the preceding Congresses, enlarging all the while the program, and imposing heavier and heavier burdens upon the people.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me for referring to the suggestion which he made a moment ago, I Crozier entered into a contract with the Bethlehem Steel Co., assent to the statement made by the Senator respecting the influences of the manufacturers of munitions and armaments, and their power-because they do have power-in affecting legisla-There is no doubt in the world but what the Vickers Manufacturing Co., in Great Britain, has had some influence in promoting the navalistic and militaristic spirit in Great Britain. There is no doubt but what the great manufacturing company in France, the Creuzot Co., has had great influence in developing a militaristic spirit in France. Unquestionably the great Krupp Co., in Germany, and other companies engaged in the manufacture of cannon and guns and other munitions of war materially contributed to the augmentation of the militaristic spirit there.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yet, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, all the profits made by the Krupps were not comparable to the profits which are made by the three armor-plate manufacturers who have contracts that are being provided for under this bill.

The other day in addressing the Senate upon the pending legislation I said that I was going to ascertain, if possible, whether any officers of the Army or of the Navy as at present functioning were employed by the armor-plate manufacturers, the beneficiaries of the bill, or any of the other manufacturers of munitions having contracts with the Government. I was requested by a number of Senators after I left the floor to lay before the Senate any information which I could get upon that subject.

From replies received from the department it would seem that, excepting as these matters have come to the surface from time to time through the investigations presecuted by the committees of Congress, there is no official information to be had upon the subject. I found that in 1912 the House Committee on Military Affairs conducted a hearing on the fortifications bill, and that one Robert S. Waddell, of the United States Powder Co., of Louisville, Ky., testified as a witness. Mr. Waddell was with the Du Pont Powder Co. as general sales agent for 21

I quote the following from his testimony:

I should say that my statements in regard to the potency of the Du Pont lobby in Washington is the fact that they maintain here a Mr. Buckner, who was the president of the International Smokeless Powder Co. and a vice president of the Du Pont Trust. He devotes his entire time and attention to Washington business; makes this his headquarters. He does not do anything else. When I was with the company they paid their vice presidents $30,000 per year, and I presume he is getting a good, rich salary and a liberal account for expenditures. I know there is a very great deal of money spent here for entertainment—not offensively; I would not use it in that sense, but in the sense that a sales department always does; they entertain their customers and treat them as well as they know how. They are as courteous as they can be, and spend a great deal of money in that way.

I think my judgment of lobbies here is that they are an offence without way. * * *

I think my judgment of lobbies here is that they are an offense rather than a benefit to the Government.

Before this same committee there appeared Col. Buckner, vice president of the Du Pont Powder Co. In answer to charges made by Mr. Waddell that the Du Pont Powder Co. maintained a lobby in Washington, Col. Buckner made the following statement:

His statements on that subject are all false. There has never at any time in the history of the Du Pont Co. existed a lobby. I am the only representative of the Du Pont Powder Co., except that I have employed in my service Gen. Humphrey, who looks after small details. I have to have a representative here in this city, and when he retried I employed him to look after such little details as getting information from all of the departments that affect the Du Pont Powder Co.

Q. You spoke of Gen. Humphrey, a retired Army officer, now being a representative of the company. What other persons at any time has the company had employed in connection with contracts with the Government?

Col. Buckner replied:

No one, except since I have been out of the country so much I have turned the business over to Mr. Landis (a former Member of Congress), to look after this business down here in a measure, but not entirely, because I have been away from the country.

The retired Army officer referred to by Col. Buckner was Maj. Gen. Charles F. Humphrey, and although this officer was upon the retired list of the Army, receiving a salary of $6,000 per year, he was, as admitted by Col. Buckner, employed by the Du Pont Powder Co. to represent it in Washington.

The case of Brig. Gen. William Crozier, former Chief of Ordnance, now retired, is familiar to many Members of the Senate. It will be remembered that when Gen. Crozier was nominated to be Chief of Ordnance a very active fight was made against his confirmation. It may be interesting to the Senate to go into the history of this case for a moment.

While a captain in the Army Gen. Crozier perfected and patented what was known as the Buffington-Crozier disappearing gun carriage. Upon the patent being issued the then Capt. Crozier entered into a contract with the Bethlehem Steel Co., this carriage, it being expressly provided, however, that the Government of the United States should be at liberty to manufacture it if it chose. While this contract was still in effect Capt. Crozier was nominated in 1902 for the position of Chief of Ordnance. This nomination resulted in Capt. Crozier being jumped over the heads of 27 officers and 3 grades. The opposition to Gen. Crozier's nomination was chiefly upon the ground that as Chief of Ordnance he would also be a member of the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications, which would be required to pass upon the inventions in which he was financially interested, and also that as Chief of Ordnance he would be called upon to pass upon contracts amounting to millions of dollars, for which the Bethlehem Co. would be a competitor.

The official records of the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs show that on April 3, 1902, the nomination of Gen. Crozier was ordered adversely reported by a vote of 8 to 2. Strong pressure having been brought to bear upon the committee and the Senate, this nomination was re-referred to the committee and finally reported without recommendation. The Senate yielded, and on June 20, in executive session, he was confirmed.

That is the record, which the Senate can take for what it is worth

As far back as 1894 there was evidence that the armor-plate manufacturers had entered into an international agreement.

I think I submitted to the Senate the other day statements taken from a work published in 1914 of a list of members of Parliament interested as stockholders or directors in the large armor-plate manufacturing companies of England. I think there is abundant evidence that the Bethlehem Steel Co., which is one of the big concerns that has contracts with this Government, has had a combination with the armor-plate manufacturers of Great Britain, and, indeed, all the leading nations of the whole world, and that it has been impossible for this Government to make contracts upon a competitive basis with the manufacturers of armor plate here, and that there has been an understanding between the armor-plate manufacturers of the United States and the armor-plate manufacturers of Great Britain and Germany and France and Italy and of Russia, when Russia was under the Czar, that they would not enter into competitive bidding here.

As far back as 1894 there is to be found evidence that the armor-plate manufacturers had entered into international agreements for the purpose of maintaining uniformly high prices to their respective Governments for armor plate and for the suppression of competition. Secretary of the Navy H. A. Herbert, under President Cleveland, in his report (H. Doc. No. 58, p. 22, 54th Cong.) said:

I am informed upon authority which I believe to be good that about, or perhaps before, the time of the last contract of the Bethlehem company with Russia there was a meeting in Paris of the representatives of the principal, if not all, of the armor manufacturers of Europe and America.

These facts seem to lead to the conclusion that there is, at least, a friendly understanding or agreement among the principal manufacturers of the world that prices shall be maintained at about the same level.

I have already read to the Senate the statement of Secretary Daniels, appearing before the House Naval Affairs Committee in 1914. I venture to repeat what the Secretary said concerning the bids for armor plate for the dreadnaught Pennsylvania in this connection:

When we came to the armor we rejected all the bids and were then absolutely in a situation from which it appeared there was no relief. Though you can not establish it in black and white, there is no doubt of an armor plate trust all over the world. That is to say, the people abroad who make armor plate will not come here and submit bids, because they know if they do our manufacturers will go abroad and submit bids. They have divided the world, like Gaul, into three parts.

Also in this connection I think a review of the history of the Harvey United Steel Co. of Great Britain is of interest. From the British Stock Exchange Yearbook, 1912, we learn that the Harvey United Steel Co., "was registered July 16, 1901, to amalgamate or control four other companies holding the rights of the Harvey patents for treating steel, including the Harvey Steel Co. of Great Britain (Ltd.) and the Harvey Continental Steel Co. (Ltd.)." This concern was also licensors for the Krupp and Charpy processes of treating armor plate.

The British connections of this concern were as follows:

Albert Vickers, chairman of the board of directors of Vickers (Ltd.), manufacturers of arms, held 2.697 shares of stock in the Harvey United Steel Co., and was managing director. William Beardmore, chairman of the board of directors of the company bearing his name, was also a director of the Harvey Co.

Armstrong, Whitworth & Co. (Ltd.) was represented on the board of directors of the Harvey Co. by J. M. Falkner, a director in Armstrong, Whitworth & Co.

John Brown & Co. (Ltd.), the Coventry Ordnance Co. (Ltd.), and Thomas Firth & Co. (Ltd.) were jointly represented by C. E. Ellis, who was a member of the board of directors of the Harvey Co. The combined holding of these three firms in the Harvey Co. was 7,438 shares.

The Fairfield Shipbuilding Co. (Ltd.) and Messrs. Cammell, Laird & Co. (Ltd.) were largely interested in the Coventry Ordnance Co. (Ltd.); and the Palmer's Shipbuilding & Iron Co. and the Hadfield Foundry Co. (Ltd.) were connected directly with the Harvey Co. through the John Brown & Co. (Ltd.), in which they were interested.

In the United States the Bethlehem Steel Co. held 4,301 shares in the Harvey Co. Interested at this time with the Bethlehem Co. were Harlan & Hollingsworth, of Wilmington; Union Iron Works, of San Francisco; and Samuel L. Moore & Son, at Elizabeth, N. J.

In France there were Schneider & Co., which held 9,862 shares in the Harvey Co. There were also four French directors in the Harvey Co., each of whom had 2,000 shares.

The Italian affiliations of this international combination for the manufacture of armor plate were as follows:

Societa degli Alti Forni Fondiere ed Acciaiene di Terni held 8.000 shares. Their representative on the board of directors was Raffaele Bettini.

The English corporation Armstrong, Whitworth & Co., stock-holders in the Harvey Co., were also largely interested in the Armstrong-Pozzuoli (Ltd.), of Italy, whose arsenal is "the chief supply of war material to the Italian Navy," and in the firm Ansaldo-Armstrong & Co., of Genoa.

In Germany, Actien Gesellschaft der Dillinger Huttinwirke corporation held 2,731 shares of the Harvey Steel Co. and was represented on the board of directors by Fritz Saeftel. Friedrich Krupp, of the Krupp Works, held 4,731 shares, and was represented on the board of directors by Heinrish Vielhaber and Emil Ehrensberger.

Through the Krupps the Harvey Co. was in connection with the Skoda Co., of Austria, and through the Schneider & Co. corporation, of France, the Harvey Co. established contracts with the manufacturers of armor plate in Russia, while the Dillinger firm is owned by the Deutsche Waffen & Manitions Fabrik, which has large holdings in Belgium and in the Mauser Co., in addition to its large munition factory at Dillinger.

The public criticism which followed the exposure of this international combination resulted in the dissolution of the Harvey Co. after two extraordinary meetings of its board of directors, on July 15 and 31, 1912, and, although there is no evidence which I have been able to find of its reorganization since the war, I believe that the understandings and agreements reached at that time would be found to be still in force and effect if a thoroughgoing investigation were instituted into this situation.

Mr. President, the history of the Government's relations with the manufacturers of powder is not less startling than the situation in regard to armor plate. In this connection I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate two paragraphs of the international agreement entered into in 1897 by the manufacturers of powder. This agreement was introduced in evidence by the Department of Justice of the United States in its suit against the Du Pont Co.:

Whenever the American factories receive an inquiry for any Government other than their own, either directly or indirectly, they are to communicate with the European factories through the chairman appointed, as hereinafter set forth, and by that means to ascertain the price at which the European factories are quoting or have fixed, and they shall be bound not to quote or sell at any lower figure than the price at which the European factories are quoting or have fixed. Should the European factories receive an inquiry from the Government of the United States of North America, or decide to quote for delivery for that Government, either directly or indirectly, they shall first in like manner ascertain the price quoted or fixed by the American factories and shall be bound not to quote or sell below that figure.

The American factories are to abstain from manufacturing, selling, or quoting, directly or indirectly, in or for consumption in any of the European territory, and the Europeans are to abstain in like manner from manufacturing, selling, or quoting, directly or indirectly, in or for consumption in any of the countries of the American territory. With regard to the syndicated territory, neither party is to erect works there, except by a mutual understanding, and the trade there is to be carried on for joint account in the manner hereinafter defined.

The evil results of this combination are clearly set forth in the agreement between the Du Pont Co. and the United Rheinisch Westphalian Gunpowder Mills, of Germany. This agreement makes it clear that the Du Pont Co. did not hesitate to furnish this German company with information concerning all of its improvements in the process of making powder, much of which it secured from Government experts.

A: IMENTS AGAINST THE BILL UNANSWERED.

Mr. President, in the course of this debate it has been demonstrated that this country is absolutely impregnable against offensive attack by any nation or combination of nations in the world. Upon the authority of Gen. Weaver, Gen. Miles, Admiral Fletcher, Admiral Sir Percy Scott, and Admiral Sims, it has been shown beyond any possibility of doubt that neither Japan nor Great Britain could send successfully a fleet of capital ships against this country without that fleet being utterly annihilated and the purpose of the expedition defeated. It has been shown that the completion of the 1916 program will entail an immediate burden of about $1,000,000,000, and the entail an immediate burden of about $1,000,000,000, and the charges resulting from increased personnel, upkeep, and the building of yards and docks will mount into billions, which can not at this time be estimated. It has been shown, moreover, that we have to-day a Navy twice as strong as that of Japan and only slightly inferior to that of Great Britain, and that if we complete the 1916 program and enter upon an additional three-year program, already recommended by the General Board by 1927 after we have expended $1,500,000,000,000 eral Board, by 1927, after we have expended $1,500,000,000 or more for construction, we shall be in relatively no better position than we are to-day. It has been shown that the 17 capital ships now under construction will be obsolete within five years, and that unless we are preparing for a war within that period these vessels will never have the slightest possible utility.

In the course of this debate it has been shown that the General Board of the United States Navy stands practically alone against the best authority in this country and abroad in urging the construction of battleships and battle cruisers. the expert testimony of Admiral Sims, Gen. Mitchell, Admiral Scott, Admiral Fisher, and other eminent naval authorities, I have demonstrated that by building a reasonable number of airplanes and submarines this country can remain, as she is to-day, impregnable against attack and infinitely better equipped for the exigency of war than if we should continue the building of capital ships.

I have indicted before the bar of the Senate the selfish interests which lurk behind this legislation. I have shown that the manufacturers of armament and armor plate have hundreds of millions of dollars in contracts at stake in this program. I have shown that these manufacturers constitute an armor ring which controls the prices in every country of the civilized world, and that in every country they have worked through Organizations like the Navy League and the National Security League to increase appropriations for naval and military purposes. I say that these great corporations have been convicted of fraud upon the Government. I have put in the testimony and the reports of committees to that effect, one of them being the report of a committee of the Senate. I assert that in taking unconscionable profits from the Government in contracts and in furnishing inferior and defective material to protect the Nation's vessels of war they have been guilty of stealing from the United States Treasury. I further assert that the great bankers, the great international financiers who have money invested in foreign lands, are bringing pressure to bear upon this Government to provide a Navy which can be used to guarantee the investments and collect the debts which these great interests have at stake.

You may scoff and sneer at this indictment, but you can not answer it. You may continue to load the people down with taxes and paralyze legitimate business by exacting tribute to be paid finally to a few favored concerns; you may nurture and entrench the Steel Trust until its grip upon our whole industrial life becomes even more powerful than it is to-day; you may make of the American Navy a menace to the peace of the world which will finally drag us into war; but the time will come when the people of this country will arise against such a policy. The American people will not long tolerate in office an administration pledged to economy which burdens the public with hundreds of millions of dollars in order to favor and protect special interests at home and abroad. That is the issue involved in this proposed legislation. It is an issue that will not down, and when it is fully understood by the people it will drive from this Chamber every man who supports this unwarranted expenditure of the public funds.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, are individual amendments in order?
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Individual amendments are in order to section 16.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have an amendment which I desire to offer when the committee amendments are disposed of. I thought all the committee amendments had been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. KING. I inquire what is the committee amendment? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Section 16 as amended.

Mr. KING. As amended by the committee or by the Senate? The PRESIDING OFFICER. By the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. I will say to the Senator from Utah that two or three amendments offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] were adopted during the Senator's temporary absence.

Mr. KING. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. I inquire if the committee amendments have been disposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments have now been disposed of.

Mr. BORAH. I have an amendment to appear as a new section to the bill. I ask that it be read, and upon its adoption I shall ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

The Assistant Secretary. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section, to be numbered section 17, and to read as follows:

SEC. 17. That the President is authorized and requested to invite the Governments of Great Britain and Japan to send representatives to a conference, which shall be charged with the duty of promptly entering into an understanding or agreement by which the naval expenditures and building programs of each of said Governments, to wit, the United States, Great Britain, and Japan, shall be substantially reduced annually during the next five years to such an extent and upon such terms as may be agreed upon, which understanding or agreement is to be reported to the respective Governments for approval.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

Upon that I ask for the year and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois Mr. McKinley]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Ball], who s necessarily absent, but on this question I am at liberty to rote. I vote "yea."

While I am on my feet, I should like to announce that my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL] is necessarily absent. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Mc-Cumber]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. War-REN], but I understand that on this question he would vote the same way that I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). eral pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Kel-LOGG], who is necessarily absent. I am advised that if he were present he would vote as I shall vote. Therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. I am advised that if present he would vote as I shall vote. Therefor I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson]. I understand, however, that if he were present he would vote as I expect to vote, and therefore I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. EDGE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen]. I am informed that if he were present he would vote as I propose to vote. I therefore vote yea."

Mr. COLT. Although I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], I am at liberty to vote on this amendment. I vote "yea."

on this amendment. I vote "yea."

Mr. ERNST. I have a general pair with my colleague, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Stanley]. If he were present he would vote "yea." I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON. The senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] is detained on official business. He has a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Pennose]. I under the senior senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Pennose]. derstand that if the senior Senator from Pennsylvania were present he would vote "yea," and if the senior Senator from Mississippi were present he also would vote "yea."

Mr. BROUSSARD. My colleague [Mr. RANSDELL] is ill. Besides that, he has a pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. France]. If my colleague were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "yea."

Mr. FERNALD. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Jones]. I understand that on this question he would vote as I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson], is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. France], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Kellogg], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENBOOT], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKinley], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Page], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Weller]. If present, each of these Senators would vote for the pending amendment.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] is absent on official business. present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 74, nays 0, as follows:

Mr. Borah's amendment was agreed to. Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to be inserted after line 4, page 39 of the bill.

Ransdell

Trammell

Warren Weller Williams

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Assistant Secretary. On page 39, after line 4, it is proposed to insert the following:

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to cause to be prepared in the Office of Communications, Navy Department, a publication known as the Shipping Bulletin, and to publish and furnish the same to the maritime interests of the United States and other interested parties at the cost of collecting and publishing the information, including the cost of printing and paper and other necessary expenses. The expenses of such bulletin shall be paid from the appropriation "Engineering, Bureau of Steam Engineering, fiscal year 1921." The money received from the sale of such publication shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. laneous receipts

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word of explanation,

The chairman of the committee already knows what the object of the amendment is; but for years past this Shipping Bulletin has been issued and is subscribed for by the maritime interests of the United States. Until a year ago the subscription price was 25 cents per day. It developed that the 25 cents subscription price would not pay the cost of the publication of the document, and the Appropriations Committee authorized its continuance at a subscription price of a dollar per day, and the dollar per day is now about paying the expenses of the bulletin. At the time the discontinuance of the bulletin was thought ofin fact, it was ordered at one time by the Secretary of the Navy—there were hundreds—I was going to say perhaps a couple of thousands-of business men of the country interested in maritime matters protesting here against the discontinuance of the bulletin. It was at that time that the subscription price was raised from 25 cents a day to a dollar a day. As I say, the price of a dollar a day is now about paying the expenses of the bulletin, and its publication is authorized only up until July 1 of this year.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I understand that the bulletin is now bringing about 90 cents per copy, so that the loss on I it is about 10 cents. But it is my information that in all probability in a very short time it will be self-supporting. In fact, it is expected that it will be self-supporting from now on.

There is no question about the value of the publication, and as the amendment carries no appropriation, but simply amounts to an authorization to the Bureau of Engineering to give some credit to the publication, in order to enable them to make the publication until they can collect the payments, I see no objection to it. I would suggest, however, that the amendment ought to be changed so as to make it read "Bureau of Engineering," striking out the word "Steam." The name of the bureau has been changed.

That may be done, if that is the case. Mr. SMOOT.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I inquire of the Senator from Utah why the bulletin should not be printed at the Government Printing Office? This would enable them to set up a separate plant, and we have been endeavoring to avoid the setting up of outside plants, requiring publications to be made at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. SMOOT. This publication must be gotten out in New York, because that is where three-fourths of the demand for it comes, and it is a daily publication. The news comes by cable. The movements of ships all over the world are reported to the Bureau of Engineering daily, and that is why the expense is so heavy—a dollar a day. If the news is a day old, it is not worth anything to the maritime interests. It must be published so that it can get into the hands of the maritime people every day, and if that is not accomplished it might just as well be printed anywhere and sent by mail.

Mr. OVERMAN. It seems to me that we had testimony before us in the Appropriations Committee at the last session concerning this matter. Did we not make an appropriation for this publication?

Mr. SMOOT. We made no appropriation; but we instructed them to charge $1 a day for each subscription, instead of 25

Mr. CALDER. May I inquire of the Senator from Utah if the number of subscribers has fallen off since the price was raised?

Mr. SMOOT. The number has fallen off; but the subscriptions are increasing now. Admiral Bullard told me the other day that he thought by the end of this month the subscriptions would increase, at the rate of a dollar a day, and that this rate would take care of the publication.

Mr. CALDER. This publication is very much desired by the people engaged in maritime business. At first they protested to me against the increase in the charge, but I have not had any protests in the last month, and I wondered if the number of subscribers had fallen off or if it was still so largely used.

Mr. SMOOT. There are not as many subscribers as there were when the price was 25 cents a copy, but I have not heard of any protests lately as to the amount that is being charged for it, and I feel that the subscribers ought to pay for it. The Government collects the information, and the Government is in a position where it can collect it. The Government has the information at hand every day, and since it does not cost the Government anything, it seems to me that the publication ought to be continued.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question about this matter. Some time during the last Congress the Senator from Utah had attached to an appropriation bill an amendment providing for the cutting off of all bulletins and publications of this kind. Does not this bulletin come within the terms of that proviso?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it does not come within the terms of that proviso. The Senator will remember that action must be taken by Congress, I think, before October, as I remember it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We extended the time, I remember, but think it was extended to July. I am not discussing the merits of this proposition. I do not recall the exact wording of the Senator's amendment—Mr. SMOOT. That related to public documents, and this is not a public document.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It related not only to public documents but, if I recollect aright, it related to publications of the departments.

Mr. SMOOT. Departmental documents, as well.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This is a publication of the Navy Department, is it not?

Mr. SMOOT. It is the only one that is charged for.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. I know, but it is a publication of the Navy Department and comes within the terms of the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah and placed in the appropriation act.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know whether it does or not. I shall have to look it up in order to determine that question. There is not any question but that this bulletin ought to be published.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no doubt it is a meritorious publication, and I am not opposing its publication. But there may be other meritorious publications along this line, and the Senator's amendment, I think, to the sundry civil act was very far-reaching. It cut out all publications of this kind. While I shall not object or make a point of order at this time, because I think if it is not costing the Government any money there is no reason why the people who want it should not have the privilege, it seems to me it should be taken care of by a resolution which would go to the Committee on Printing, who would refer it back to the Senate, so that the Senate might have an opportunity to consider other publications as well as this one.

Mr. SMOOT. There can be a resolution as to some of the other publications if they are to be continued.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then why the haste in reference to this?

Mr. SMOOT. Because Admiral Bullard felt that we ought to have the amendment adopted at this time in this bill, so that he could give notice to the subscribers that it would be continued. If the Government of the United States does not do it, somebody else will have to do it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator in charge of the bill says that the lack of funds will not stop the publication, because he can assure the Senate that in a short time the funds will be in their hands. So it seems to me the real cause of the stopping of the publication must be the order of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to publish it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This will revoke an order of Congress of which the Senator from Utah himself was the author.

The amendment we put on the appropriation act authorized the publication until a certain date. I forget the date now, but I think it was eight months from the passage of the act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think it was to continue until July;

but I may be mistaken.

Mr. SMOOT. That makes no difference. I am quite sure that unless a resolution is agreed to those publications will have to cease at the time designated in the appropriation act. But those are publications which are printed free by the Government, and they are an expense to the Government. This is not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I shall not object; I do not think a Senator is justified in objecting to matters he is not informed about, and I am not informed about this publication, and the consensus of opinion seems to be that it is a necessary document. But what I want to ask the Senator from Utah is this, if the amendment he put on the sundry civil act cutting off these publications is too far-reaching—and I think probably it is-he should offer a resolution defining how the provision in the sundry civil act shall be modified, so that we may know and have an opportunity to adopt amendments and to put all of these propositions on the same basis. In that way we have an opportunity to consider them on equal terms.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment to the appropriation act was only an extension of time under the law, and under the law itself when a resolution is presented it will have to state specifically what publications can be printed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand; but at this time we are going to avoid it by another amendment to an appropriation bill, and I do not want to have it done that way. I shall not object at this time, but I hope the Senator from Utah will not make an exception in another case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Assistant Secretary. Add as a new section at the end of the bill:

'SEC. 18. Provided, That all midshipmen found deficient during the present or last session, and whose resignations were asked for and received by the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, if renominated to the academy, shall be admitted to the academy without regard to the age limit now provided by law and placed in the class one year behind, their former class.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in explanation of the amendment 1 may say that in the deficiency act approved June 5, 1920, there was a provision of this kind:

That until otherwise provided by law no midshipman found deficient at the close of the last and succeeding academic terms shall be involuntarily discontinued at the Naval Academy or in the service unless he shall fail upon reexamination in the subjects in which found deficient at an examination to be held at the beginning of the next and succeeding academic terms, and the Secretary of the Navy shall provide for he special instru tion of such midshipmen in the subjects in which found deficient during the period between academic terms.

Mr. President, last January or February there were 110 midshipmen found deficient. The act of last year was not com-plied with, but instead of it the Superintendent of the Academy wrote to the 110 students thus found deficient, substantially requiring them to hand in their resignations by the next day. There was nothing else to be done, and those boys handed in their resignations, and were not given the benefit of that statute.

All I seek to do by my amendment is to give those boys the benefits of that provision of the law. Just what excuse was given for not giving them the benefit of the statute I do not know, but my understanding is that the authorities said they did not have the time between the then session, which ended on January 30, and the next session, which began on the 1st of February, and, therefore, that the stipulation in the statute allowing a reexamination did not apply or could not apply in the very nature of things

It seems to me under those circumstances those boys ought to have the benefit of the statute which was passed last June. It applied only to the 110 to whom my amendment relates.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated again?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amend-

The Assistant Secretary again read Mr. McKellar's amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. To what does the word "session" refer? Mr. McKELLAR. I understand there are two sessions, a session ending January 30 and the next one ending with the commencement in June.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It refers to sessions of the academy and not sessions of Congress?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. Were there any midshipmen found deficient between sessions of the academy? Mr. McKELLAR. They could not be found deficient between

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not know but that an order might have been made. I wanted to make sure that everyone who had been found deficient had the benefit of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think this makes it absolutely sure. It is a matter of very great justice to these boys.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I agree with the Senator as to the merits of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the amendment may be agreed to.
Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I for just Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I for just a moment have the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill? I shall desire to speak for some little length of time-not very long, because I am not in the habit of speaking very long, but regard the pending amendment as of so much importance that I would prefer, if the Senator will consent, to have the matter go over until to-morrow.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My understanding is that there is a unanimous-consent agreement that to-morrow the Senate shall go into executive session at 12 o'clock to take up the question of the confirmation of a presidential appointment, so that we would be precluded by that from taking up the Navy appropriation bill at that time.

Mr. POMERENE. I have in mind that fact, I do not imagine that the executive session will take all the afternoon. The pending amendment is going to take some little time, and I think Senators, if they have not been informed about it, will realize before the discussion is finished that it is a very important amendment, and that its purpose is to do justice to 110 young men who have been the victims of the grossest kind of injustice, and I measure my words when I use that expression.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wish to say to the chairman of the committee that there are other Senators who desire to take a few moments time on the pending amendment. know that I do. I make the suggestion to the Senator in charge of the bill that we take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] to some modifications that it seems to me should be made in his proposed amendment in case it is to be considered.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be glad to hear any suggestion the Senator has to make, and to accept it if possible.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator is willing to accept these modifications and allow the amendment to go to conference in order that it may there be carefully considered, I shall not object to it. The committee has had no opportunity to consider it. One change that ought to be made in it is to limit to one year the period within which these midshipmen who have resigned can be admitted to the academy without regard to their age.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very glad to accept an amendment of that kind.

Mr. POINDEXTER. So, after the word "academy," in line 5 of the printed amendment, there should be inserted the words within one year from the date of resignation."

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Secretary will report the amendment to the amendment, I shall be glad to accept it. I think it is very proper.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed change will be stated.

The Assistant Secretary. In line 5 of the amendment as printed it is proposed, after the word "academy," to insert the words "within one year from the date of resignation," so that if so amended it will read:

That all midshipmen found deficient during the present or last session and whose resignations were asked for and received by the Superintendent of the Naval Academy if renominated to the academy within one year from the date of resignation shall be admitted to the academy without regard to age limit—

And so forth.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am entirely willing to accept that with just one change. I think that the word in the Senator's proposed amendment should be "renominated" and not "reappointed." As I understand it, Senators and Congressmen or the President, as the case may be, nominate candidates for midshipmen and they are appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, although I am not positive about it. I believe that ought to be done, and therefore I should like to insert the word "renominated" instead of the word "reappointed."

Mr. LODGE. I think "nominated" is the correct word.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is really where another change in the Senator's amendment comes in. I have no objection to striking out the word "reappointed" and substituting the word "renominated."

Mr. McKELLAR. That has already been done.

Mr. POMERENE. I may say for the information of Senators that the word "nominate" is used in section 2727 of the Compiled Statutes, which authorizes the naming of midship-men, and I think the change as proposed by the Senator from Tennessee is proper.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand that has been accepted. I then suggest the following change: After the word "law," in line 6, there should be inserted the words "subject to other requirements as to qualifications for the admission of midshipmen to the academy now required by law." The amendment ought not to require the admission of men to the academy without qualification.

Mr. McKELLAR. Except as to age.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Except as to age. The age limit is waived by the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know exactly how it would read, but I wish to have age excepted. I know some of the boys are more than 20 years of age, and my amendment specifically excepts them. If the language of the Senator does not change that exception, I shall be very glad to accept it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The language I have proposed does not change that exception.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very glad to accept it, then. While I am on my feet, if the Senator will permit me to say another word, I have been informed that a statement I made a few moments ago that these boys have never had reexamination was incorrect. I was informed that the 110 young men had not had a reexamination, and it was upon that information that I made my statement to the Senate,

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will permit me, I can give some information about that.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator has information on that subject, I should be glad to have him give it to the Senate, because I do not wish to make a statement to the Senate that is not absolutely correct.

Mr. POMERENE. At the end of the first term, which was, I think, January 29 or 30, there were 286 midshipmen found deficient in studies, including 19 first-class men, 76 second-class men, 41 third-class men, and 150 fourth-class men. Then, there was the reexamination, to which the Senator from Tennessee has referred, after some instruction had been given to them. I wish to correct that and say after some alleged instruction was given to the boys. After that alleged instruction 110 failed-24 midshipmen of the second class, 1 of the first class, 8 of the third class, and the balance of the fourth class. It is for the relief of these 110 boys that the amendment is presented.

I realize that it is getting late, and I desire to beseech the journ or recess until to-morrow. I regard this of so much importance that I desire to have the RECORD contain the facts. Though Senators may feel that I am unduly exercised in the matter, I feel that it is a public duty, a duty that I owe to these boys and to the academy and to the people, to give the facts, and I wish them in the RECORD, so that Members of the House will have an opportunity to examine them and ascertain whether I am right or not

It is true that the amendment may be accepted, and I hope it will be, but I think it is of importance that we shall have these facts fully stated, and it is for that reason that I hope the Senator will consent to have the matter go over until to-morrow or the day following. I shall probably wish to speak about 20 or 25 minutes in presenting the facts, and there are other Senators who desire to discuss it, too.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I rise to join in the request made by the Senator from Ohio. As one of the Board of Visitors to the academy, some information concerning the matter was placed at my disposal by the superintendent of the academy. I think the information given the Senate is not accurate at all.

As stated by the Senator from Ohio, some 286 cadets failed in their original examination. They were, as a matter of fact, given additional instruction, and upon the reexamination 110 failed

As I understand the matter, they were given the full benefit of the law enacted a year ago. Whether, under these circumstances, they ought to be again admitted to the academy, having failed, after having had the additional instruction given them and the reexamination, is a matter of somewhat serious import.

There are some of those boys, 77 of them, who were fourthclass men. They perhaps were not very adequately equipped when they came in, perhaps being admitted upon certificates from high schools, and that kind of thing, without examination; it was found that they were unable to keep up the pace. But there were some of them who had been there some length of time-10 of the third class, 2 of the second class, and 1 of the first class. These older boys had been there for two or three years, had failed in their examinations, and they had been given the additional instruction required by law. Then they failed upon the second examination, and the amendment now tendered proposes to admit them again to the academy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They can be admitted again now if they are within the age limit for appointment. The only effect the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee would have would be to waive the age limit. That probably would apply in some of the cases, but not in others.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, if they were renomi-

Mr. POINDEXTER. With the changes made in the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee they must have all the qualifications required by law for entrance to the academy except in the matter of age.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have some information, which has been given to me in a letter from the superintendent of the academy, which I do not have available here to-day.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will permit me, there is a provision in case they have been there for more than two years. It just sets them back a year, and they are allowed to graduate.

A man in the first class who fails goes back to the second class.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I wish to say that some of us have had boys in colleges, and those of us who have know very well that when a boy has spent two or three years in college, and then for some reason or other fails in an examination, the fair thing and the economical thing is not to throw away all the expenditure and efforts of those two or three years, but it is to do precisely what every faculty in the land would doput that boy back one year and let him go over the course again. It seems to me that that is precisely true with reference to the Government. We have spent thousands of dollars upon these They go along to a certain stage, and for some reason boys. or other they fail in their examinations. The fair thing and the economical thing is to put them back a year and let them go on.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Montana that it is stated that these boys hatl their reinstruction. They did in one sense of the word have it, but it was not in conformity with what I believe is the spirit of the law which was read by the Senator from Tennessee. That expressly provides that-during the period between academic terms.

The Secretary of the Navy shall provide for the special instruction of such midshipmen in the subjects in which found deficient—

There was just one day, namely, Sunday, intervening between Senator in charge of the bill to agree that the Senate shall ad- the first and the second academic terms of this year. I concede that the amendment was very obscurely drawn, but the purpose was that the midshipmen should have their instruction during vacation. It did not suit the purpose of the academy authorities to give them such instruction, and I want to take a little time to show things as I understand them to be over there.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. May I interrupt the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I feel like saying in justice to the academy authorities in connection with this matter that they have acted very advisedly. Confronted with the ambiguity of the statute, and in order to give it the proper interpretation, they asked the advice of the Attorney General. He recognized at once that it was impossible to give instruction between the first term and the second term in strict conformity with the statute. He said obviously the purpose was, however, that the instruction should be given, and it was given. Of course, it was not given between the terms, because, as the Senator stated, there was just one day between the two terms.

Mr. POMERENE. But it was given at a time when the boys had all that they could possibly do. I recognize the fact that there are different viewpoints here. There is the viewpoint of Admiral Scales and some of the instructors; there is the viewpoint of the midshipmen and their parents and their friends; and there is the viewpoint of the public. I want some time to take this matter up, and at this moment I move that the Senate adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. LODGE. I hope the Senator from Ohio will allow us to have a short executive session.

Mr. POMERENE. I have no objection to that, but I want to take this matter up when I can have about half an hour to

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, this is a very good time to do so, if the Senator is now prepared. There is nothing to prevent him from proceeding.

Mr. POMERENE. I think I have taken about an hour in the discussion of this bill, though it is a pretty important measure. There is this question, and there is also another amendment which I intend myself to offer that will take some time to discuss before we get through with it. We have been in session now continuously since 12 o'clock, and if the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], the leader of the majority, desires to make a motion to take a recess at this time or go into executive session, I certainly shall withdraw my motion.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not want to interfere with the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. If that is so, I insist on my motion to adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senate desires me to go on, I shall

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will pardon me, I have already stated that we were perfectly willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I understand that; but will it be thrown out in conference?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no idea whether it will be or not. At least, it will be fully considered.

Mr. POMERENE. I have had some experience recently in having amendments accepted and having them thrown out in conference. I am not in the habit of indulging in any undue delay, but I feel very deeply on this subject, and if necessary I will now go on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr.

MCKELLAR].

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I wish to say to the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter] that I have three amendments, the consideration of which will consume several hours.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Has the Senator only three amendments to offer?

Mr. KING. I did not know but what that might induce the Senator to consent to take a recess at this time.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if Senators are going to insist on going ahead to-night, and the Senator from Ohio is going to speak, he certainly ought to have a quorum here. I do not think anything is going to be gained by trying to force this matter to-night.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] does not object to the amendment, and I hope the amendment may now be adopted while the matter is fresh in our minds. There seems to be no objection to the amendment. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] can speak in the morning and explain the amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. I am entirely willing that the amendment shall be accepted now, but I am going to lay the facts before the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then I hope that action may be had on the amendment. If the Senator from Ohio will permit action to be had on the amendment now, I think it would be perfectly proper.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know just what the language of the amendment is in its present form. These boys who are going back to the Naval Academy ought to go in at the beginning of the first school year?
Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I understand, when we nominate a man to the academy at Annapolis he enters on the 1st of June?

Mr. McKELLAR. I should be perfectly willing to have the amendment provide that the nomination shall be made within 60 days instead of a year.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That would limit it still further. The amendment says "within one year," but I prefer to have it within 60 days. If that change can be made, it will make it that much narrower.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will accept that modification.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. KING. I should like to have the amendment stated, as there have been numerous amendments and modifications of it made.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not understand that there has been any amendment to the amendment. The rule of the Senate is that the Senator offering an amendment may modify it at any time until the amendment is voted upon.

Mr. KING. It is gratifying to have the Senator from Washington advise us of a rule that everybody is familiar with. I ask that the amendment may be stated, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Assistant Secretary. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill as a new section the following:

SEC. 18. That all midshipmen found deficient during the present or last session, and whose resignations were asked for and received by the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, if renominated to the academy within 60 days from the date of resignation, shall be admitted to the academ

Mr. McKELLAR. No; not "60 days from the date of resignation," but "60 days from the date of the approval of this It is not the fault of the clerks at the desk that the amendment is not in proper form, but it is our fault in not having the amendment perfected earlier. It should read "within 60 days from the date of the approval of this act," of course.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, no one seems to know just exactly what the amendment means. It shows the necessity of our adjourning, so that we may have an opportunity to consider it. I should like to hear the Senator from Montana explain what the amendment means.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will allow the amendment to be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Assistant Secretary. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 18. That all midshipmen found deficient during the present or last session, and whose resignations were asked for and received by the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, if renominated to the academy within 60 days from the date of the approval of this act, shall be admitted to the academy without regard to the age limit now provided by law, subject to other requirements as to qualifications for the admission of midshipmen to the academy now required by law, and shall be placed in the class one year behind their former class.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me suggest to the Senator that instead of reading "60 days," it should read "if renominated prior to the opening of the next school year.'

Mr. McKELLAR. The next school year will begin on the 1st of June, and the time would be very short. I hope the Senator will accept the amendment as it is.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no serious objection, although under the wording of the amendment they may be nominated after the school year. As I understand, now mid-shipmen can not enter except on the 1st day of June or at whatever time the school year begins; so that if they are nominated after that date they will have to wait for another year.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee what is meant by the words "found deficient." Does that include mental defects and physical defects?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; quite the contrary. I think almost everybody knows what the words "found deficient"

Mr. LODGE. That is the customary phrase when a student fails to pass his examinations and to meet the requirements of his course of study.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is used by colleges all over the country to describe those who have failed to come up to the minimum requirements.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator if under the amendment a young man would be permitted to enter the academy who was found physically defective?

Mr. McKELLAR. The amendment provides that the nominees shall comply with the qualifications provided by law. A man physically defective could not enter the academy.

Mr. KING. The word "deficient" is not well defined in the amendment. It does not relate to some other act specifically; so that if there is a statute defining what "deficiency" means it will be necessary to import that statute into the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Washington covers that entire matter. It provides specifically that the applicant shall be subject to all the qualifications now required for admission.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I may say that the word "deficient" is the word which is used both in section 1519 as well as in the amendment to the deficiency bill which was approved on June 5, 1920.

Mr. McKELLAR. The expression is one used very generally. Mr. LODGE. That is absolutely correct; it is used in all colleges.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from Montana whether Admiral Scales and those who have charge of the academy feel that this proposed legislation is proper?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I have no informa-tion upon the subject at all. I do not think that any expression has been made upon the subject by him, nor do I think that the legislation now proposed has been given any consideration. I should like, however, to submit briefly that it is a sub-ject worthy of consideration whether this kind of legislation is not going to break down the standard of the academy. If the boys fail in their examinations they are obliged to take the penalty that is visited upon failure in every institution of learning in the country; but if they are given to understand that a special act of Congress will be passed admitting them the next year and only requiring that they shall fall back a year, it can very readily be understood that much of the incentive impelling the young men to do their best at this institution will be gone. Such a rule would not be applied in any other institution in the country that I know anything about. A student who has pursued the course of study for a certain period and has failed in his examinations is conditioned; that is to say, he is given a period of probation within which he must make up his studies and pass the appropriate and complete examination. If he fails to do so he is dismissed; but if he is immediately readmitted the whole character of the institution suffers in consequence. I repeat, that it is a subject very well worthy of much more consideration than it is possible to give it at this time. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. KING and Mr. TOWNSEND called for a division.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn. The motion was a reed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 26, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 25, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. William Tyler Page, Clerk of the House, read the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOMS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, D. C., May 25, 1921.

I hereby designate Hon. Horace M. Towner to act as Speaker protempore to-day.

Mr. TOWNER assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chaplain will offer prayer. The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, the earth is Thy footstool, and at Thy feet we humbly bow. Hear us and never leave us alone. Make us worthy even of the littlest gifts of life and save us from the peril of weak desire. Lead us along the road of Thy truth and when it is too hard and we grow impatient make it break forth into the music of good cheer. Be the sovereign of all our hearts and bind them with the fetters of pure devotion to the loved ones at home and our dear native land. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER assumed the chair.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not.
Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-six Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to. The doors were opened.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6300) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, it shall be in order, the general rules of the House to the contrary notwithstanding, to offer and to consider the following amend-

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Tennessee desire time for the consideration of the rule?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. We should like to have half an hour on this side.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we have one hour for the consideration of the rule, one-half to be under the control of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett] and one-half to be controlled by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that there be one hour of debate upon the rule, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this rule is to make in order the items read in the rule that went out during the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill on points of order. The purpose is to give the House an opportunity to consider those items and insert them in the bill if the House sees fit to do so. It is the orderly way to proceed when the House finds itself in the condition in which it now finds itself on matters of this kind. There is nothing unusual or drastic about this rule. It simply gives the House an opportunity to say whether or not the activities provided for in these items shall be pursued during the next fiscal year.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

. Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. This is legislation on an appropriation bill? How long has it been known to the Committee of the How long has it been known to the Committee on Appropriations that this legislation is necessary?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. These are really appropriations on an appropriation bill that were not in order because they appropriate for the ensuing fiscal year, rather than for deficiencies in this and the last fiscal year.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Would they have been in order on an appropriation bill making appropriations for the next fiscal year?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They would have been in order. Mr. RAMSEYER. All of these items?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Most of them were provided for and have been provided for in the past.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the deficiency appropriation bill as it was reported to the House by the Committee on Appropriations contained many items of appropriations and legislation which were subject to points of order. Many items in the bill involve salaries for additional employees during the year 1922. There is also legislation of interest to the public and to the country at large. The pending rule undertakes to make in order those items which carry the jobs, but it fails to make in order the items of legislation in the bill which are of interest to the public generally. For my part I am opposed to the rule which undertakes to take care of the jobs but fails to give consideration to the interests of the people of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There were some items in the deficiency bill involving employees for the next fiscal year to which I, as a member of the subcommittee, gave my assent. There were some items to which I was opposed. There are some items included in this rule involving positions for 1922 which I think are necessary, but I do not think those positions are quite so necessary as some legislation which was proposed by the committee and which has gone out on points of order and which could have been made in order by this rule now under consideration. Now, the whole trouble has arisen because in the last session of the last Congress, when the other side was in the majority as it is now, the effort was made to have the people understand that the knife was going to be applied to all of the governmental positions. Great credit was taken at that time because the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill had greatly reduced the number of employees for the fiscal year 1922. It was stated then in the advocacy of that bill, by those proposing it, that they felt that every single dollar had been appropriated; that every position had been allowed which was necessary in order that the Government might fully and properly function during the fiscal year 1922. Now, after the new administration has taken charge, within less than three months, we find the heads of the departments of this administration coming to the Congress and saying that the Congress cut too deeply and they must have many of these positions restored, and the committee, as I have said, has restored a number. undertook to restore a number of them in the deficiency bill as presented. Those items went out-

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Can the gentleman give me five minutes additional?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I can yield the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Those positions went out on points of order. What does this rule do? This rule relates solely to jobs. This rule makes it in order to provide 50 new positions for the fiscal year 1922, aggregating in money the sum of $97,710.

In these positions are two places carrying $6,000 each per annum, three of them at $4,000 each, one at $3,500, and others of varying less amounts. In addition to that, it increases the limitation upon the employment of persons in the Navy Department, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, by $400,000, and hence makes $400,000 available for the further employment of employees during the remainder of this fiscal year. In addition to that it undertakes to transfer from the Bureau of the Census $250,000, which will not be used by that bureau, and make it available for positions in the Bureau of Standards for the next fiscal year, so this rule does nothing more nor less than to make available for salaries the sum of $747,710. Now, what does it fail to do? There is a provision in this bill, put in there at the instance of the Secretary of Commerce, which gives him authority to fix fees for steamboat-inspection service and wireless service, a service that is costing this Government $1,325,000 and possibly a million and a half dollars every year. This provision gave the Secretary the right to fix reasonable fees not to aggregate a sum in excess of the expenditures, and thus save to the people of this country and the Treasury a million and a half dollars a year. But this rule does not make it in order, and it has already gone out on the point of order. In addition to that, this bill undertook to give to the Secretary of Commerce $250,000 to enable him to promote and extend our foreign commerce and extend our export industries. That has gone out on a point of order, and strange to say, this rule does not make that provision in order, and I wish to say again that I am infinitely more in favor of a provision giving to the Secretary of Commerce $250,000 for the promotion and extension of our domestic and foreign commerce, and also the provision which would give to the Secretary the right to recoup from the shipowners the sum of $1,500,000 expended every year for service rendered by the Steamboat-Inspection Service and the Bureau of Navigation to vessels of the United States and to foreign vessels, than I am in the provisions providing jobs during the next fiscal year of 1922. Therefore I am opposed to the adoption of this rule, and I hope it will be voted down. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the gentleman who just preceded me [Mr. Byrns of Tennessee] referred to the action of the legislative committee in its attempt to reduce the clerical force of the United States and now criticizes the action of the Committee on Rules with reference to the rule brought in which will increase that number to some extent. We did the best we could at that time in the light that we had. The trouble then, and perhaps the trouble now, is that we got but little encouragement from the department heads or from those who are in a position to know the exact situation with reference to the number of employees we should have. Diligent inquiry has been made, and among the things, perhaps, that we cut off, because of the fact that we had to cut in the dark, as every committee knows we have to do, because we are not aided by the heads of these bureaus, possibly we may have cut off too many.

There is another consideration that I think will appeal to fair-minded men, that in these chaotic conditions, that in the unrestful situation not only this Government is in but the Governments of the world as well, and by reason of the fact of our being mixed up with all those foreign governmental affairs in an unsettled condition, which add to the unsettled conditions here, that perhaps there is necessity for the continuation of some of these clerks during this unsettled period. For instance, take the clerks who are asked for by the Treasury Department, some of which went out on a point of order that were provided for in the legislative bill. We then thought and think now they should be restored. Some of them are necessary, as those in authority say, who were in authority under a Democratic administration and who are still in authority, that until our foreign relations have been settled and until we know what we are going to do in relation to foreign loans and get them determined upon some stable basis that additional clerks will be necessary in the Treasury Department. This provision is for a single year, during which time it is hoped we will have more light upon this subject.

Now, with reference to the $250,000 that is sought to be transferred from the Bureau of the Census to the Department of Commerce for its use in other activities that were talked about here yesterday, Mr. Rogers, for whom I have the highest possible respect, then chief of the Bureau of the Census, stated before the legislative committee that it would be essential that all this money be used in completing the census. Hoover, who succeeded him, by reason of his investigation, finds that in his opinion he can save possibly $500,000 that Mr. Rogers thought then was necessary for the census. He is asking that $250,000 be transferred for the purpose of encouraging other activities that are essential to all the business interests of this country, and that, if Mr. Hoover's idea is carried out, will result in a net saving of more than Mr. Rogers thought when he was at the head of the Census Bureau, If you figure out the net increase that will be warranted by reason of this rule if enacted into law, the number is not great and the amount involved is not great when compared with the great amount of money that is appropriated each year for the clerical force of this country. In fact, the net result will be a decrease in employees as compared with the present force. It is the desire, I know, of the legislative committee, I believe the desire of the general Committee on Appropriations, that we shall still continue to reduce this clerical army in the District of Columbia. It is too large now, and it should be reduced to that number absolutely necessary for the good conduct of the business of the United States. And it will be the purpose of those who are in charge to reduce it as fast as possible. And I hope, if this reclassification bill that is now being considered by the committee results in what we all desire it should result in, and this reorganization committee that now has charge of the reorganization of the governmental functions of this Government report what we think they should report, it will result in a reduction far greater than we now anticipate. The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I want to refer to the amendment under the title of Bureau of Standards, which will be made in order by this rule. I feel very sorry for the position in which my good friend from Indiana [Mr. Wood] finds himself. He took seriously the promises of the Republican Party and made an effort to reduce the expenses of the Government. He appropriated $1,000,000 for the Bureau of the Census, and now in 60 days thereafter you find the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Goon], the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, make on the floor this statement in response to a question of mine:

Mr. Good. The Secretary of Commerce said that they would save $500,000, but he hoped that we would not take more than $250,000, as some conditions might arise where he would want that much.

Before the fiscal year begins, for which the committee presided over by my genial friend from Indiana [Mr. Wood] appropriated $1,000,000, the chairman, Mr. Good, says they can save $500,000, but the Secretary hopes we will not take more than $250,000, as some conditions might arise where he would want that much.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can not yield.

I thereupon offered an amendment that, inasmuch as the chairman advised us that the Secretary of Commerce did not need $500,000, the $500,000 be covered back into the Treasury to the credit of the taxpayers. Did that get by? The election was over. The gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, made a point of order on that. What is to be done with this $250,000? The gentleman from Iowa said they had no use for it. But would they turn it back into the Treasury? Not while they can provide jobs for the faithful. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] said that by this bill 500 new jobs were created. What did they do with the $150,000? They propose to increase the appropriation to test cement, clay, and stone. I have the hearings here on this item in the legislative bill conducted by my friend from Indiana. They asked for $175,000. He said:

You have estimated for an increase in your force there of 23 men? Mr. STRATTON, Yes.

Mr. Wood refused to give it to him. They did not give him but $125,000. They come back now and want you to give them $50,000, the amount you refused to give them last session.

In another item they asked for $25,000 and you gave them nothing. Now they ask for $100,000 for the same purpose, and you give it to them.

My good friend, Jonathan Bourne, former Senator, in the last campaign conducted for the Republican publicity committee a column in the newspapers entitled "Unde Ted's Bedtime Stories." I now look for a revival of this column. Mr. MADDEN was treasurer of the committee. In this column Uncle Ted carried on a dialogue with Jack and Ruth, in which he discussed with the little ones when they went to bed at night public affairs, and I hear Jack asking Uncle Ted: "Uncle Ted, I notice there was $250,000 that the chairman of the Appropriation Committee said the Bureau of the Census had no use for. Did they give it back to the people?" "No." they did not give it back to the people, what did they do with it?" "They created some new jobs." "How much did the Secretary of Commerce under the Democratic administration ask for the purpose of investigating and the testing of instruments?" "He asked for $25,000." "Did he get it?" "No, dear Jack, he did not get the $25,000. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] and his committee refused to recommend a single cent." Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is making a mistake, I am sure.

The new job has been cut out. Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I take the statement of the Director of the Eureau of Standards to the gentleman from Indiana in the legislative hearings under the Bureau of Census, that the first item included 23 jobs. But he refused to give it

Mr. GOOD. We have more clerks there now than we will have next year.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. He stated he would use the additional money to employ 23 more testers, employees drawing $1,000 and $1,500.

But let me get back to Uncle Ted's story. "Uncle Ted, let me ask you: You said that Mr. Wood refused to give them $25,000. Did Mr. Wood and Mr. Mondell include that $25,000 in the statements they made to the people of America that they had reduced estimates and by so doing saved money?" "They did include it, my young friends." "Was it saved to the people?" "It was saved until the election." "What about after the election?"

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I would like to have three minutes more.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Uncle Ted said, "After the election they appointed Mr. Hoover." "What did he do?" He got hold of Dr. Stratton and appeared before another com-"He got what did he say to him?" "He appealed from the decision of the legislative subcommittee to the deficiency subcommittee, presided over by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Goop]." "What did he say?" "He said, 'Inasmuch as the Democratic administration is no longer in power and the Republican Party is pledged to economy, instead of asking for $25,000, I will ask for $75,000 more, making the estimate $100.000." "But surely, Uncle Ted," said little Jack, "they did not do that?" Said Uncle Ted. "Yes, Jack; I hate to tell you that the committee presided over by Mr. Good told Mr. Hoover, Inasmuch as you are so extravagant as to increase the estimate $75,000 more than your predecessor, I will go you $25,000 better and give you $100,000," which is $100,000 more than the preceding Congress gave for this purpose for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1921." At that staggering blow Jack said, "What will the people say?" "The people will say," answered Uncle Ted, "that it is exceedingly unfortunate that when President Harding goes to New York on Monday of this week and says we should be stony hearted in refusing to heed the appeals of people who want extravagant appropriations that we should have enough teamwork to cause Congress to refuse an appropriation of this kind."

We should exercise common sense and not invite the departments of this Government to appeal from the decision of the Committee on Appropriations and ask for an activity $75,000 more than they asked for in the original estimates and have this committee give them every dollar they asked for. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In order that we may get precisely what the President said on that occasion, let me read:

At this point let me say that too much stress can not be laid on the fact that eternal vigilance is the price of economy and efficiency. Nothing is easier in a Government establishment than to continue in existence offices, positions, employments, once created. It requires persistence, determined stony-hearted devotion to the public interest. There must be sacrifice of the interests of the place holder, whose only reason for keeping his position is that he wants the salary.

[Applause,]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am glad my friend from Tennessee has read the President's words. If on this Republican side you would only vote the way you applaud and the way you speak, this country would be safe. But instead of doing that, I find you coming in here increasing appropriations, now that the election is over, taking back this $25,000, taking back in the item preceding $100,000, and refusing to turn back $250,000 to the Public Treasury when the Secretary of Commerce says he does not need it, and when the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says he does not need it.

What excuse is there for it? The only argument that the gentleman could use in behalf of it was that "Mr. Hoover asks for it." I want you to get stony hearted long enough to stand by what you have done, and not compel my friend, Mr. Wood of Indiana, to stand up here and explain why he refused to give them anything, while the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] insisted on giving them $100,000. [Applause on the Democratic side. ]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I intend to take only a few minutes on this rule. The Committee on Rules has gone over as carefully as it could the whole situation presented by the present deficiency bill and selected only the items that seemed absolutely necessary for the efficient conduct of the public business.

The gentlemen on the other side of the House say we should appropriate only for what is necessary and leave out everything else. That is as far as we have gone. We have not made all of this legislation that was desired in order, because we wanted to protect as far as possible the jurisdiction of the regular legislative committees of the House, and I think we have done so in every instance, and for that reason have recommended to the House the consideration of a very few items and only those considered to be an actual necessity.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I will.

Mr. HICKS. There are a good many of us in this House who feel that the present method of making appropriations is wrong. I would like to ask my colleague this question: Suppose this rule is adopted in this House. Will that take away from the legislative committees of the House the right that some think they should have of suggesting legislation? [Applause.1

Mr. SNELL. I am just as much interested in that proposition as my colleague from New York, and so far as I can learn I can not see anything in the rule that we have presented that interferes in any way with the rights of the legislative committees of the House. All of these matters are purely appropriating matters that come from the Committee on Appropriations and are under their jurisdiction and have to do with appropriations.

Mr. CARTER. But they are not authorized by law.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And you denied all matters of a legislative for by our Democratic brethren and absolutely necessary to take care of the conditions as they exist to-day and they left to us? We are only taking conditions as we find them.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is what President Harding protested against in the article I read.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman knows the difference between what President Harding was protesting against and what we are providing for at this time. He was protesting against unnecessary positions. But these are absolutely necessary for the conduct of the Government business, and no man would advocate doing away with a position that is essential to governmental efficiency.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is stated this would be a positive increase in the number of employees. It will only add about 50, and it will decrease three times that number in the Census Office.

Mr. SNELL. We want you to have an opportunity to express yourselves not only on matters that are essential, but also on matters absolutely necessary to carry out the provisions of the budget law. That is what is provided for under section 4 of the rule. We also make provision for carrying out the provisions of the oil leasing bill, which was enacted by a practically unanimous vote of the House. Those things are absolutely essential for efficient operation of the Government's business and to put in effect laws you have enacted. Every one of the positions provided for in this bill will bring money into the Treasury instead of taking money out. I am just as much opposed to creating new positions as any other man on the floor of this House, and I have always voted against them. But I hope I am not so shortsighted as not to provide enough men to properly conduct the Government's business, and I am specially interested in positions that will bring money into the Treasury instead of taking money out of the Treasury.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. BUTLER. This resolution proposes to make in order a removal of the limitation which the Naval Affairs Committee put on certain appropriations. I do not propose to take the gentleman's time, but I want to say that it is a very great disappointment to me that you propose to increase that appropriation for clerical hire $400,000, when we spent days and days quarreling over the same thing, and quarreled with the people who asked for it.

Mr. SNELL. That is a limitation that was placed upon this amount by the Appropriations Committee themselves.

Mr. BUTLER. It was the Naval Affairs Committee that did this, when we were alive [laughter]-when we were at work. Mr. SNELL. Yes; but when the final appropriation was made it was made by the Appropriations Committee, and they simply want to remove a limitation they put there themselves.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no; by the Naval Affairs Committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SNELL. This rule is right, and should be adopted without opposition.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I know very little about the merits of the proposed amendments. Unfortunately I have very little time to give attention to the various provisions in appropriation bills. I realize that when they are reported by the Appropriations Committee, as a usual thing, they are going to be adopted by the House, and I devote whatever energies I have to other legislative duties. know from the general admission here that the proposed amendments that are authorized will create jobs to the extent of threequarters of a million dollars. That is a considerable sum of

But I do want to say a word to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Goop]. If I understand correctly, this will probably be the last appropriation bill that he will report to the House of Representatives; and I want to say to him that while he is going down in history as the father of the budget system in this country, and very justly so, he is at the same time doing more for the destruction of that system, so far as the House of Representatives is concerned, than any other living man.

Gentlemen, you can not continue to bring in rules at the behest of the Appropriations Committee in order to make items Gentlemen of the minority are talking about new jobs. Are in order that are not in order under the general rules of the they new jobs or merely a continuation of matters provided House and the House continue to stand for such procedure.

Why, take this honest old Roman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER]. He is riled. Why? Because his judgment has been superseded. His judgment and that of his committee, after days and weeks of labor, have been set aside by a subcommittee composed of five of the Committee on Appropriations assisted actively by the Committee on Rules. Why, gentlemen, you are fixing to destroy the Appropriations Committee. You are fixing to go back to the old system of nine appropriating committees in this House. On my side of the House I was chided-and, probably, justly so-for my activity in assisting to change the I wanted to rules and to create one appropriating committee. economize in this Government. I wanted to see it run on business principles. That has always been my position, and I realized that when we got the budgetary system in the executive branch of the Government we ought to extend it to the House of Representatives in good faith, and therefore I helped to change the rules to create one appropriating committee instead But, gentlemen, I tell you frankly that if the experience we have had since we have had that one Committee on Appropriations is to continue in this Congress I for one am ready now to cut it asunder and go back to the old proposition that we had before. [Applause.] I say that in all good faith. If each time you bring in a bill you are going to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and say to him, "Here is what we want; here is what is necessary in order that we may have our will, regardless of what one man in the House may say if you are going to continue that method, it is not going to be long until you are going to have an insurrection led by Tom BUTLER and a few others on that side who have got the courage to do their will, and we are going to join with them over here and do a little business and turn the appropriating business back to the committees which formerly had it. [Applause.] I do not want to do that.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Nothing doing yet.

Mr. GARNER. I am frank to say I do not want to do it, but as certainly as you are here if you continue to legislate by special rules on appropriation bills that is going to be the

Now, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] could have entirely remedied this situation. I have seen appropriation bills go from this House to another body, and I have seen amendments put on there that were stricken out in the Committee of the Whole in the House of Representatives upon a point of order. It has been done ever since I have been here, and I challenge the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] to point to a single instance in the House of Representatives where a special rule has been brought in for an appropriating committee that did not involve a legislative proposition.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARNER. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. GARNER. If during the 18 years that I have been here you have been able to bring out your appropriation bills from Mr. Butler's committee and other committees without a special rule in reference to particular items, why can not the Committee on Appropriations do it now? You never had a rule here before, while the Democrats were in power or the Republicans were in power, authorizing items on an appropriation bill that such rule did not contain legislative provisions.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman does not mean to say that! If the gentleman will allow me, I will put into the RECORD rule after rule adopted while the Democratic Party was in power making items in order on appropriation bills.

Mr. GARNER. Oh, yes, Mr. Speaker; but each one of those rules had in it some legislative provision. You can not find a single rule reported from the Rules Committee while the Democrats were in power the sole purpose of which was to put an item in an appropriation bill without a legislative provision being attached to it.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Did the Democrats, Republicans, or anyone Mr. CARTER. else ever before bring in a rule to make a deficiency in order on an appropriation bill when the time for spending the money had not yet begun?

Mr. GARNER. Not so far as I know. I merely mention this because I do not want to see the system that we now have destroyed, and I warn you that if you continue this special-rule business you are going to so disgust a number of honest Republicans who have got courage that they are going to join the same kind of folks on this side of the House and destroy the new system. [Applause.] I yield back whatever time I have

The SPEAKER. The gentleman used all his time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, how does the time stand?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMP-BELL] has 17 minutes and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, our Democratic friends who have nothing else to do but try to worry us need not be alarmed. The Republican administration and the Republican side of this House and of the Senate propose to conduct the Government economically and efficiently regardless of their small kicks and objections. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] made two statements, one that he knew very little about appropriation bills, and that he proved by saying that the Democratic side passed no rules providing for inserting appropriation items in appropriation bills. There were more rules for that purpose passed by the House during the eight years of Democratic control in this House than had been passed before during the whole history of the Government. [Applause on the Republican side.] Of course, the gentleman from Texas is not familiar with them.

But, Mr. Speaker, I rose for another purpose. I am used to this pin pricking; it does not bother me like it may affect some of the younger Members of the House. That is the duty of the majority side-to stand the pin pricking of the minority side of the House, which deals in little things instead of big things of legislative work before the House.

Mr. Speaker, there has been since I have been a Member of the House quite a long line of illustrious chairmen of the Committee on Appropriations. When I came into the House that dear old patriot, Uncle Joe Cannon, was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. [Applause.] And when he made Speaker he was followed by a distinguished son of Indiana, James A. Hemenway, who himself was followed by another distinguished son from Minnesota, James A. Tawney. These three were Republicans. When the Democrats came in control of the House they kept up the high standard. John J. Fitzgerald, for years chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, a brilliant and great man, was followed by Swagar Sherley along the same lines of broadness and greatness. And now we came into power again, and a distinguished son of Iowa, James W. Good, was made chairman. [Applause.] Uncle JOE CANNON, himself having been long chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, appointed Mr. Hemenway chairman; he appointed Mr. Tawney chairman; and he appointed Mr. Good on the Committee on Appropriations. There is not a committee of the House where the chairman of the committee has to stand so much against the requests of Members of the House as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. The position requires nerve and determination; all of these chairmen have had these qualities, including the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Good, the present chairman. He is shortly to leave this House, according to rumor and report and my belief, to honor me by becoming a constituent of mine. I shall feel highly honored to have Mr. Good as a resident of the district I have the honor to represent. We all honor him; we all wish for him success and happiness in life. A distinguished Member of this House, he has made a steady and distinguished chairman of the committee, worthy of the long line of the great chairmen of that committee, and I hope he may have everything that he may want in the future both for himself and his family. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who has just yielded the floor, has attained the eminent position which he occupies in this Chamber by reason of his familiarity with the laws and the rules of this House. If we are to depart from the observance of orderly processes, then most any tyro can hope some day to attain the place of power of the gentleman from Illinois. Without observance of the rules his knowledge becomes useless. We take no issue with him in the personal tribute he paid to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa, but we rather think it ill becomes the Republican side of this House, just when the gentleman from Iowa is departing, under a special rule to provide for a host of new Government jobs and to take a course diametrically opposed to that which has been espoused so many years by the gentleman from Iowa.

This is a land of law. Whenever this Government or any other Government departs from the legal pathways laid down for its conduct it becomes an autocracy. If it adopts a law and violates it by not observing it, it is no less an autocracy than if it has no law except the rule of might. By the adoption of this rule this House confesses that it is not able to function according to the regular rules of this body. It admits the charges that have been made against the institution of the budget and one appropriating committee that all the power of the House will be centered in the Appropriations Committee and the Committee on Rules. The House will not function as a legislative body. Two committees will wield absolutely all the power that resides in this body. Under this rule amendments which are not in order under the general rules are made in order carrying $747,000.

Seven hundred and forty-seven thousand dollars for what? For new jobs. I said that this was a land of law, but it is said that necessity knows no law. Necessity before the election required that the Republican Party should promise a reduction in the clerical and other forces of the Government. Necessity after the election, the necessity to get every job, requires that they discard that slogan and provide the jobs which are to be provided under this rule. The Republican Party came into power in March. Like that stormy month, with loud protesta-tions of economy, "It came in like a lion," but, with March, "It went out like a lamb."

It must indeed be humiliating-it is to some of us on this side-to see these two old veterans in the war for economy, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good], who in all of the years that I have served -and, by the way, it was all during a Democratic administration—with tears in their eyes, crying out against the departments, saying that they should be cut down by reducing the employees, that the poor, suffering taxpayers should be relieved, and that the army of job holders be disbanded, to now see the gentleman from Indiana rise in his place, come to the mourner's bench as a penitent, and the gentleman from Iowa no longer in favor of reducing the rolls. They perhaps feel "we are all at last at the old pie counter and we will hold a revival and call all the brethren to the feast." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the deficiency is not alone in the appropriations, but the real deficiency is in the Republican side of the House in not being able to conduct the affairs of the Government according to the rules and laws laid down for its government and its procedure. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if this were in any way a personal matter it would present phases of embarrassment to the minority side, because the minority Members recognize in the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] a man of great ability, a man of superb courage, a man of the highest integrity and of the highest patriotism. The fact that the gentleman from Iowa is an intense partisan does not in any way depreciate our respect for him. I like men of that sort, and I like to meet men of that kind.

But this is not a personal matter. This is a matter which, however little you may think of it, tests the new system of appropriations. I gave my support, not without embarrassment to me personally, to the new rule which limited the Appropriations Committee to appropriations and the legislative committees to legislation. This is the second time that the author of that rule himself, when he has been in personal charge of the bill, has by the force of his influence and power compelled the Committee on Rules to bring in a special rule which destroys the general rule of the House. If that custom be continued, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Garner] so well said, it will destroy that new rule. These matters ought to be referred to the legislative committees. True, these provisions are only job-creating provisions, but nevertheless they are legislation. A strange and mysterious thing to me is that in view of the fact that there was some legislation in the bill which was good, the Committee on Rules would not make that in order, and only made that in order which creates the jobs, but that is a matter of small consequence.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. The provision of the resolution which changes the limitation put upon the clerical hire for chemists in the Navy Department is certainly legislation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It undoubtedly is, and it is a matter of which I do not believe the committee which reported the bill has as much information as the Naval Committee, and I think it should have come from the gentleman's committee.

Mr. BUTLER. Did not the gentleman say there was no legislation covered in this rule?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, no; I said that all of it was legislation. I said there was some good legislation which, if they were going to cover anything, might have been covered.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this discussion has been rather interesting. I did not think this rule was as important as has been made to appear by the discussion on the other side. I have been on the Committee on Rules for many years and took some part as a minority member of that committee for a period of eight years under the Democratic regime. This is one of the most innocent rules that has been brought into the House within my service on that committee. One Member of the minority side complains that it does not contain legislation and another complains that it does. But the really amusing part of the discussion was when Mr. Garner, the gentleman from Texas, endeavored to be serious when he bewailed what he hoped was an embryo revolution on this side of the House. Why, if the gentleman from Texas could start trouble on this side of the House he would be happy. That is just how much he would deprecate trouble on this side of the House. As a matter of fact, there has been much ado about nothing. There have been no new jobs created except in a very few instances. There are transfers of employees in the Treasury Department, made necessary by reason of the contemplated inauguration of the budget system. It is proposed, as an illustration, to transfer 16 employees from one section of the Treasury Department to another at the same salary which they have been receiving throughout the years in the Treasury Department. Yet the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Garner] would have you believe that we are creating new offices here to make additional raids on the Treasury, that we are not following our preach-ments for economy in the past. We are merely simplifying the activities of the executive departments of the Government by transferring and consolidating under this rule activities in the executive departments. It could not be done on a deficiency appropriation bill under the general rules of the House. budget system has not yet become a law. The conference report has just been agreed to by the conferees. It will be sent to the President within a few days. That is what makes much of this transfer of employees in the departments necessary upon this bill. Gentlemen would lead Members of the House to believe that new offices are created. It is nothing of the kind. discussion of these items on their merits, when we reach them in the consideration of the bill, you can vote them up or down as you see fit. You can increase or diminish the number of these employees or their salaries. This rule gives you an opportunity to consider them in the light of the new conditions that are to be inaugurated largely by the budget system. The same is true of the next section that is made in order.

Provision is made here for 21 employees in the General Land Office. In the closing hours of the last session we passed a mineral and oil leasing bill. This could not have been appropriated for, because that bill did not become a law until the very closing hours of the session. It is necessary to provide for those activities in this bill. It could not be done under the present rules of the House. That is all there is to that. There is no disposition on the part of the Committee on Rules to take from any legislative committee in this House its authority, and it has not done so. These are appropriating

Mr. BUTLER. How about the limitation?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will come to the limitation.

Mr. BUTLER. It is raised $400,000.
Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes. The Committee on Appropriations diminished the limitation and then found it necessary to increase it, as they say. When this matter is reached here this afternoon under this rule the gentleman from Pennsylvania, thoroughly familiar with the conditions surrounding this item, may take the floor and convince the House that it is not necessary to raise the limitation on that appropriation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In five minutes?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In five minutes. If he can Mr. BUTLER. I appreciate what the gentleman has said, but we took about two weeks fixing it once. [Laughter.] Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania is opposed to this item-

Mr. BUTLER. I am going to vote against it. Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. He can vote against it, and he can persuade other gentlemen to vote against it. That is the privilege that this rule gives.

Mr. BUTLER. I appreciate that, and I would say to my friend that I want only to take care of myself; I am not thinking of anyone else.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What is said of this item is true of others. Transfers are made in the Department of Commerce from one branch of the service to another. It is charged here that this is an onslaught on the Treasury. It is merely transferring clerks and officers from one bureau to another who have been on the pay roll for years. Some of them will be eliminated, because they have not been appropriated for. This rule simply gives the Committee of the Whole, in the further consideration of the deficiency bill, an opportunity to say whether the items made in order should be appropriated for in the ensuing fiscal year. That is all there is to it. We will have a chance to vote up or down these items.

The Chair in the consideration of this bill ruled them out on points of order because they were providing for activities for the ensuing fiscal year rather than deficiencies in the present or past fiscal years. It is thought by the Committee on Appropriations that these activities should be provided for, and we are bringing this rule to enable the House to decide whether or not this shall be done. Mr. Speaker, no substantial reason having been given why the House should not have an opportunity to consider these items in an orderly way under the rule as provided in this rule

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Committee on Rules ordinarily sit as a court of appeals to consider the merits of these various items after one committee of the House has considered the matter?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; not ordinarily nor extraordinarily.

Mr. WALSH. Did they do so in this case?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They did not.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution. The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 224, nays 113, answered "present" 3, not voting 90, as follows:

THE BUDGET (H. REPT. NO. 96).

Mr. GOOD, from the committee of conference, presented the conference report on the bill (S. 1084) to provide a national budget system and independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes, which was ordered printed under the

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6300. The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6300, with Mr. Campbell of Kansas in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6300, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6300) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as we have just had some discussion on the rule, I offer first an amendment which the rule made in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. Good: Page 16, after line 20, insert:

"Commissioner of the Public Debt, $6,000;

"Commissioner of Accounts and Deposits, $6,000;

"Division of Deposits: Chief of division, $3,500; assistant chief of division, $2,500; clerks—1 $2,250, 1 $2,000, 1 $1,800, 1 $1,600, 1 $1,400; messenger, $840; assistant messenger, $720; in all, $16,610."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order, because in the consideration of the bill we have passed that page, and the special rule which the House adopted did not provide to return to that page of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. The Chair does not care to hear me?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield to me? Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. It is sought to put in by one amendment $28,610 worth of salaries for certain gentlemen, which were made in order by the special rule. Of course, the special rule simply made it in order. If it had been drawn accurately, of course it would have provided for returning, or else they would not have specified the page. But when blacksmiths go into the jewelry-repair business you can not expect anything else.

This is just typical of the boasted efficiency they keep on telling us they are going to give us, but which is kind of hovering in the offing and acting with some timidity in entering this The economy program, too, I suppose, will come in sooner or later. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] said they were going to practice economy; that that was the way they were going to conduct the business in spite of all the nagging of the Democrats. If you do actually practice economy, we will be mighty glad, but we are going to continue to nag you until we get you to adopt the Democratic program of economy. We are with President Harding. That is the reason why we voted against this infamous rule. We think he ought to be supported in his sincere efforts to check extravagance and get rid of hungry officeholders who are hanging at the garments of you gentlemen. I have gone through that. But God save the United States Treasury. Your President does not seem to be able to do it. You have to bring in special rules to overcome his recommendations.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

This amendment alone provides for $28,610, and is a portion of the $747,710 made in order by the rule which the House has just adopted. But for that rule this $747,710 would have been kept out of this bill and been saved for the people. That is, by voting for this rule we allow this $747,710 to be spent.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman tell us where the $747,000 is? BLANTON. I will do it. This first amendment is $28,610; the next one is $24,300; the next is $400,000; the next for $32,800; the next for $12,000; and the last for $250,000. making a total of $747,710.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no. Not a dollar of appropriation. Mr. BLANTON. Oh, but the part the gentleman has in mind is money that has already been appropriated, and which is going to be used now, which otherwise would not have been used, but saved for the Treasury. And my distinguished colleague on the other side of the aisle, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, has tried to make the chairman of this committee understand that, and he does not seem to be able to do in. But he understands it, all right. All of us understand it.

Mr. GOOD. No. You do not understand a thing about it.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLANTON. If it could have been spent without passing these amendments, why was it necessary to put in the rule?

Mr. GOOD. Tell the committee what that force will do, if you understand it. The gentleman can not tell a single thing the force will do.

Mr. BLANTON. If I had more than two minutes, I could. The gentleman can not take all the time, because I want some of the time myself.

Mr. GOOD. You do not know anything about it.

Mr. BLANTON. I know more about it than you would like these other Members to know. You keep them in the dark and are thus voting them here for this extravagance. However much extravagance and wastefulness there is now in this House of Representatives, I thank God, and I congratulate the people of this Nation, upon the fact that in the general grab-bag selection of officers in the political turnover last November the people nevertheless drew a big man in the White House. [Applause on the Republican side.] I thank God that the people through that grab-bag selection drew a man who believes in economy, who stands foursquare for it. Let me remind you that when you fellows here tried to force a two or three hundred thousand dollar inauguration program on him he would not stand for it, and he spanked you and turned you down, and he made you haul the numerous big stacks of lumber that you had piled sky-high over in front of the Capitol back to the lumber yards unused. And I want to warn you, if he is the kind of a man that he has made me believe he is, he is going to make you take every one of these wasteful, unnecessary items out of this bill, because he promised the people of this Nation in New York day before yesterday that he was going to stop this extravagant expenditure of money, and that he was going to cut down this office force in Washington. And I believe in him. I have looked him in the eye, and I believe he is honest in it, and I am backing him up. Though a partisan Democrat, I appreciate our President and his efforts for the

Mr. GOOD. Tell us about the $400,000 new.

Mr. BLANTON. I will tell you about it. Your Naval Affairs Committee that is presided over by that old war horse from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] turned this item down. He under-

Mr. GOOD. What is it for? Mr. BLANTON. Most of it is going to be paid for clerical hire and expenses for an army of useless employees next month in that particular branch of the service.

Mr. GOOD. What do they do? The gentleman does not

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the gentleman is not going to take me away from the sulject of my argument. [Laughter.]

The gentleman provides for 50 new employees here under this rule; 50 specified positions, if you please, running from $6,000 a year each on down, and in the big lump-sum appropriation of $400,000 and this other appropriation of $250,000 that has been transferred to the Bureau of Standards there is a small army more of extra employees provided for as against premises made to retrench.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Goop], out of the depth of his information, asked what they are going to do? Mr. BLANTON. Yes. Besides drawing salaries, they are going to vote the Republican ticket—or he thinks they are—in the future.

Mr. WINGO. They will principally draw salaries. Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; and fill jobs for the Republican machine. I do not blame you fellows for trying to take care of your constituents. I try to take care of mine. But you ought not to do it at the expense of the people now when we are facing a deficit of over $3,000,000, and our expenses, as shown by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] the other day, have run up this year to $5,600,000,000. We ought to call a halt. Most of you gentlemen believe in calling a halt, and most of you, if you had not been whipped into line by a machine with every cog greased, would have voted against that rule, because most of you really believe in economy. [Applause.]

has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this item provides seven positions apparently, but they are not new positions. Every one of these employees is now holding one of these positions. But the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] fails to tell the House that by the rule you have adopted you have reduced the salary of the chief of the Division of Deposits from $4,500 to $3,500 and that you have reduced the salary of the assistant from $3,000 to $2,500. Every position that we have here now has been filled during all of these years, and you have had two Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury in addition to that assisting them at their work, and these you will not have next year.

This item of the Commissioner of the Public Debt was carried The gentlein the legislative bill when that bill was reported. man from Texas made a point of order against this position, that of the Commissioner of Public Debt. He wants to know what he does. He has supervision over and coordinates the work of the Register of the Treasury. He handles the retired securities as they come in. He coordinates the Division of Loans and Currency, which handles the issue of new securities. He has 3,000 employees under him in these three divisions that he is attempting to coordinate. The Commissioner of Public Debt will handle the public debt of $24,000,000,000, with about $7,500,000.000 maturing obligations within the next three years. He has grown up in the service. He is a civil-service employee. He is the same man who was there during the former administration, and he is a very capable man.

Now, take the commissioner of accounts and deposits. have loaned almost $500,000,000 to the railroads of the United We have loaned $10,000,000,000 to foreign countries. The office of the commissioner of accounts and deposits is the only organization in the Treasury Department to-day that has to do with the collection of the interest on the $500,000,000 loaned to the various railroads of the country. But the gentleman would hamper the Government and deprive it of the revenue by not providing for his place.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Why were not these amounts, these salaries, in the bill as they should be?

Mr. GOOD. In the reorganization under President Wilson these salaries were paid out of a lump-sum appropriation, and that lump-sum appropriation ceased to be available for that purpose. I am sorry I can not yield further.

Now, take the Division of Deposits. This division was established by President Wilson in 1919. The present incumbent has performed the work, but without title. He supervises and coordinates the work of the Treasury. The Division of Deposits and the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants handles payments running into very big figures every day. He exercises immediate supervision over the Treasury balances in the 12 Federal reserve banks, the 24 branch banks, and 500 national banks.

A Republican House that reduced the estimates of the former administration for this year by over $1,000,000,000 is now criticized because it wants the Government to function in a healthy and efficient way. We propose to have it function in that way. We are behind President Harding in his demand for economy. We have been behind him all the time, and we are going to continue to give him support, and we are going to enforce a degree of economy that will make the past administration look very sick indeed. [Applause on the Republican side.]

has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division. The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 85, noes 5.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Good: On page 17, after line 10, insert: "Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants: For the force to be transferred to this division on account of the transfer of duties from the Division of Public Moneys, at annual rates of compensation during the fiscal year 1922, as follows: Assistant chief of division, $2,500, clerks—two at $2,000 each, three at $1,800 each, three at $1,600 each, two at $1,400 each, two at $1,200 each; two messengers, at $840 each; assistant messenger, $720; in all, $24,300."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this provision, as Members will note by reading it, simply takes care of the transfer of the division of public moneys. When the legislative bill was Lefore the House it carried something like $26,000 or $27,000 for this division. That division was created by the last administration, and they ask for its continuance. The item went out on a point of order, so that now there is no appropriation at all to carry the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants for next

The budget bill, which has been unanimously agreed to by the conferees, contains the following provision:

The duties now appertaining to the Division of Public Moneys of the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury, so far as they relate to the covering of revenues and repayments into the Treasury, the issuance of duplicate checks and warrants, and the certification of outstanding liabilities for payment shall be performed by the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants of the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury.

There is absolutely no appropriation to carry on this work. The force is there. We are not adding a single new employee, but the legislative bill, with these provisions, instead of increasing the number of jobs in the Treasury Department, will decrease the number of jobs by almost 2,000. Those are the facts, and it seems to me it comes with ill grace at this time to say that this is a bill for jobs. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Good: Page 34, after line 4, insert:

"Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts: The limitation specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921 on expenditures for pay of chemists and for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in the supply and accounting department of the navy yards and naval stations and disbursing offices for the fiscal year 1921 is further increased by $400,000."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized. Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Iowa

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this provision is one in which the Committee on Appropriations has no interest except as members responsible to perform their duty. It is indeed painful to the committee that the former Secretary of the Navy did not make the allotments and enforce it for this expenditure so that there would be enough money to do this work for the entire year. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] a few minutes ago thought he knew all about it. Of course, he knew nothing about it.

The facts are these: That with the appropriation of $10,-500,000 carried in the Navy bill for this year, there was a limitation of $3,500,000 for clerical work of this kind. Last winter the former Secretary of the Navy made a deficiency estimate to increase that limitation by $1,750,000. I then took the matter up with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] and we both agreed that they should have arranged so as to get along within the limitation which he carried in his bill; but they had not done so, and they had expended then by far the larger part of the money that was appropriated for clerical services.

Now it must be remembered that at the various supply depots in the United States there are at the present time $280,000,000 worth of materials, $600,000,000 worth of ordnance and ordnance stores, and $60,000,000 worth of clothing; or, all told, according to the most recent estimate, approximately $1,000,000,000 worth of Government property in these naval supply depots. The number of persons employed to issue these stores and to do that clerical work on the 1st day of December last was 3,638.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GOOD. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there ob-

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Now, in this bill they asked for an appropriation of $750,000, and to increase the limit for clerical services by $750,000. When we came to figure the matter out we found they had money enough in the appropriation. It would run them rather close, it is true. They figured that they would have $6,000 left, practically, at the end of the year. But under the limitation they will not have one penny left on the 1st day of June to pay the clerical force, and not only the clerical force, but those who issue and account for the issue of these stores to the Navy and to the various ships.

I am just as much embarrassed by this as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] is. But the Committee on Appropriations were impressed with a solemn responsibility, to protect at all times the property of the Government. The fact that the former Secretary of the Navy had failed to allot this money by months, the fact that he had failed to carry out the mandates of Congress, was no direction to me or to the Committee on Appropriations that would justify us in a failure on our part to discharge our duty.

I lay the matter before the House. It does not make a bit of difference to me or any member of the committee what you do with it. I think it is absolutely necessary. I do not know how the Navy is going to function without going on and violating the law if you do not grant it. I do not want to put the present Secretary of the Navy in that position. I think we must give him sufficient funds to care for this property. But next year it is up to him to keep his expenditures within appropriations.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I have no criticism to make of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. I know that.

Mr. BUTLER. I enjoyed the fine commendation given him by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] this morning, because the gentleman from Iowa is properly known and will bear in history the reputation of an economist. I do not think the gentleman from Iowa ever quite understood what the Navy Department is asking. The subject of appropriations for clerks has ever been a sore one with us, and I have been made the special object of their condemnation on several occasions. I do not believe in paying a great number of people who might be discharged. Gov. Kelley of Michigan helped me take this out once, and he is three-fourths responsible for it. At the time we limited this appropriation to $3,500,000 they had 5,600 employees to be paid. Now they have 3,500 or 3,700, as I understood the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. Thirty-six hundred on December 1. There has been a reduction of 20 per cent since that time.

Mr. BUTLER. We want them further reduced. asked a witness the question, "How much did you have for this purpose prior to the war?" They had $1,700,000. He said to them, "If you get two and a half times as much, that will be enough," and I said, "If they get $3,500.000 it will be enough."

Less than a year ago, after a great deal of examination and after much questioning we fixed the amount at $3,500,000, more than_twice the amount which the bill carried prior to prewar time, which the whole of the committee after a great deal of discussion considered was a sufficient amount.

I do believe now, as I believed then, that $3,500,000 is sufficient.

Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUTLER. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. If there was a sufficient appropriation in the first place and the Democratic administration practically exhausted that appropriation before the new administration took hold-and I am not saying whether properly or improperly-is that a good reason for refusing to make a sufficient appropriation to pay the necessary salaries from now until July 1?

Mr. BUTLER. We are appropriating for a deficiency of $400,000, and I will say to my good friend that I do not believe in these deficiencies.

Mr. MANN. That is not the question; the question is whether we shall maintain the service that is to be maintained. Theoretically you can not charge the present administration with it, although I suppose there are the same officials under the present administration as under the former administration, but what are we going to do if they have exhausted the appropriation?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. If they have not any money to pay these salaries, what are they going to do?

Mr. BUTLER. They should not have created the deficiency.

Mr. MANN. But that is past, and we have now another administration.

Mr. BUTLER. Take it off somewhere else and give it to them. I want to say to my friend that I would say to officials you created this deficiency; now take it out of the next year's appropriation. They pay no attention whatever to the law. Furthermore, I am in favor of enforcing the law against them. They would go from our committee room straight to the Committee on Appropriations to obtain what we had not allowed

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that I always stood behind him in that matter.

Mr. BUTLER. I know that the gentleman did, and he did it well, and without his assistance sometimes I would have failed. Mr. MANN. But what are you going to do in a case of this sort, where the administration has changed and the men responsible theoretically have changed; are you going to stop the service or give them the money?

Mr. BUTLER. I would stop the service a bit. Furthermore, I want to say that we are already considering giving the department authority to sell $60,000,000 worth, or such as may be necessary, of material, and therefore they will not need so many guards, clerks, and policemen, and I believe they can get

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. BUTLER. With pleasure. I shall be glad to listen to it. Mr. McKENZIE. Will this $400,000 come out of the appropriation made in the regular appropriation bill? Mr. GOOD. It is an increase of limitation.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman tell me where the money to come from; that is what bothers me. They propose to get it somewhere or you would not have a rule.

Mr. GOOD. They have the money out of the $10,500,000. They ask for more, but we found that they have money enough.

Mr. BUTLER. If they have the money, they have enough to pay the $3,500,000. They have money in the bureau to pay the $3,500,000.

Mr. GOOD. They have paid that all out, and they have paid out most of the $750,000 which we increased the limitation for. Mr. BUTLER. Who increased the limitation?

Mr. GOOD. We increased it, with the consent of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman is mistaken; I never consented to an increase, and I know I am still living.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and the gentleman was very much alive then, but he has forgotten. I recall that I went over the matter with the gentleman when they asked for $1,750,000, and we agreed that under the circumstances, inasmuch as they had not reduced the force, it would be necessary for them to have the limitation increased, and we increased it $750,000, and that went through.

Mr. BUTLER. I confess I did not know what I agreed to. do not claim that the gentleman tried to deceive me; he did not deceive me: I was ignorant.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no; the gentleman was not ignorant. We talked the whole matter over and the gentleman was just as indignant as I was because they had not decreased the force as they ought to have done, but we looked the matter squarely in the face and saw that it was necessary, and the gentleman agreed to increase the limitation $750,000.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not know what I was doing. I exonerate the gentleman from any attempt to deceive me, and I was not deceived; I did not understand. I never would have agreed to it if I had understood. This is the one department in which there can be some retrenchment. Four hundred thousand dollars is a good deal of money to add for clerical hire and the hire of chemists. Now they do not need all of the chemists; we are manufacturing very little powder.

Mr. GOOD. There are only twenty-odd chemists all told. Mr. BUTLER. It is the regular establishment; I do not think there is any necessity for increasing the force.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. I recall a conference with the gentleman that we had over a deficiency appropriation requested for the repairing of old ships, but I do not recall the one the gentleman has alluded to.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, the gentleman came to the Committee on Appropriations, and the gentleman, myself, and Mr. Pugh talked this matter over, and we had the figures before us. I certainly can not be mistaken about that.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, I did not know it.

The CHAIRMAN. the gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, the fact with reference to this item is that in the fiscal year 1920 the Navy spent for this purpose something between ten and eleven million dollars, and if I am in error about that the gentleman will correct me. When we came to make the estimates for this fiscal year the naval officers, the department, wanted the Secretary of the Navy to ask for something like $6,000,000, I think it was. The Secretary of the Navy, in his desire to economize and cut down, scaled that item to three and a half million dollars. He and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] agreed, and Secretary Daniels and the gentleman from Pennsylvania were criticized then, and why? For extravagance? Oh, no; they were criticized on this floor because it was said that they were trying to cripple the Navy. The big Navy men criticized the gentleman from Pennsylvania because he agreed with the Secretary of the Navy that three and a half million dollars were enough. happened? The Secretary of the Navy gave instructions to cut it down and be as economical as possible. They have gone ahead and they have expended the money. They need, I think it is claimed, about $500,000 more, and they would spend that if you would give it to them, but the committee comes in and undertakes to give them $400,000 more. Whether that should be given them or not, I do not know. The gentleman from Pennsylvania agreed with the Secretary of the Navy in his economy program then, and it is rather amusing to me to find men who by inference criticized the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his desire for economy at that time now charging him with being a waster because he spent as much as he did. That is the situation and that is the record.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the situation as I recollect it with reference to this item is this: There is a lumpsum appropriation carried in every naval bill for the support of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts. As I recollect that sum in the last year's bill it was something like $10,500,000. Of that amount it was provided that not to exceed $3,500,000 should be used for this particular purpose. We went into it pretty carefully at the time, and it was difficult to arrive at a correct figure. We had just been coming down from the large figures of the war. The Bureau of Supplies and Accounts had expanded enormously to handle the huge war business. Before the war it had been taking care of 50,000 men. During the war it had to take care of 550,000 men, with a corresponding increase in the supplies. And it was one of the most efficiently managed bureaus in the whole service, either Army or Navy, and, I think, economically managed. As stated by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler], chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I think with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, fixed the limitation for this particular purpose at $3,500,000, basing the sum a good deal upon the expenditures that were made before the war and making due allowance for new activities, a larger Navy, and somewhat higher wages. The Committee on Appropriations in considering the bill for next year went into it pretty exhaustively again, and while we met with a good deal of resistance from the bureau, and the claim that we were not allowing enough for this item was again made, yet we fixed it again at $3,500,000. So that is the best judgment probably of both of the committees as to the amount that the bureau ought to expend for this purpose. However, we are up against the situation that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has pointed out, that the money available for this current fiscal year under this limitation has already been expended. We can not suspend the work of this bureau for a month-it is the accounting bureau of the Navy. We have these cost-plus contracts being carried out under which shipbuilding concerns are building great ships of war for the Government. Our inspectors must be there constantly to watch the progress of these ships.

Millions of dollars are being expended every month and the closest kind of scrutiny and inspection must be provided. Otherwise costs under these contracts would mount skyward. It would not be wise for the Government to suspend inspection for a month on all of this cost-plus construction. Therefore, while we all regret the necessity, it is here, and unless the $400,000 limitation is provided the Secretary of the Navy will have no authority to carry this work forward. The money provided for the current year is gone.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes. Mr. WALSH. Is there an item covering this service in the present naval appropriation bill which is pending in another

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The $3,500,000 limitation which was in last year's bill was thought to provide a sum sufficient for next year.

Mr. WALSH. Could not the addition which is wanted be made immediately available in this bill that is now pending?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Sufficient money still remains to the credit of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts out of this year's funds, but it is limited in the expenditure for this purpose to $3,500,000. Hence, all that is needed is to boost this limitation by the sum required.

Mr. WALSH. In the present naval appropriation bill which is now pending in the Senate could it not be provided that $400,000 of the money shall be immediately available?

KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; but in that event there would undoubtedly be a shortage in this same item for the next year.

Mr. WALSH. Perhaps it ought to be short, if they are going run through it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman that we put the $3,500,000 limitation in the bill last year over the very vigorous protest of the bureau that it was not sufficient. We thought it was, and I think the Secretary of the Navy thought so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in the hope of economy, I voted to place this power in the Committee on Appropriations, but I am confronted now with the disappointing effect when the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations shows that he has assumed all available knowledge and knows all about a legislative item taken away from the Naval Affairs Committee and that the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee does not know a thing about it.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no.

Mr. BLANTON. Or, in other words, that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations knows more about the business of the Naval Affairs Committee than does the great, able chairman of that committee.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, do not say that.
Mr. BLANTON. I am not agreeing to that statement; but that is the position that has been assumed by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. No; it is not. I have said nothing derogatory of the splendid service of the gentleman from Pennsylvania

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, there is nobody who has any hurt feelings here. I want to suggest to my friend from Texas

Mr. BLANTON. I yield the balance of my time to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, as he is able to defend himself.

Mr. BUTLER. I want to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question. I do not understand this mass of figures. The gentleman will recall that we used to ask our questions pretty straight and say to a witness, "Come right to the point and answer." Where does this deficiency occur? How much of Where does this deficiency occur? How much of it occurs for clerks?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. This occurs in the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts for the payment of the clerical and inspection force of every sort employed in the various navy yards and stations.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, let me ask this question: Did not this department, in violation of our expressed command, increase this sum of money? [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, I will say to the gentleman this: The Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts stated before the Committee on Appropriations that he had endeavored to keep within the amount allowed last year; that in attempting to do so he got so far behind with the accounting that the various bureaus of the Navy could not properly function; that he could not advise the bureaus promptly as to the state of their accounts because he fell so far behind with his accounting; that finally he went to the Secretary of the Navy, who, as I recall the law, has authority to authorize a deficiency in writing—I have forgotten just the provision of the law—and the Secretary finally did authorize the deficiency in a proper and legal way. I think an attempt was made in good faith to do the work with the money provided, but it proved to be insufficient.

Mr. BUTLER. I know; that is all right. They have six hundred million and more of dollars worth of property on hand; next year, under the reduction which my old friend made, they will have $3,500,000. Now, the property is the same; why did they need it this year and will not need it next year? It will not be reduced

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. This $400,000 is not for next year. It is for next month. We have fixed the limitation for next year in the bill that passed the House at the same amount as last year, namely, $3,500,000, and hope it will be sufficient for next year.

Mr. ANDREWS. I would like to ask the gentleman a ques-They have $10,000,000 on hand at present?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. For all purposes.

Mr. ANDREWS. And out of the $10,000,000, $3,500,000 is for this purpose?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Absolutely.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will this $400,000 come out of the remaining portion of the $10,000,000?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Absolutely.

Mr. ANDREWS. And not any increase of appropriation, but transfer from one appropriation back to this purpose?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman is enricely right.

Mr. BUTLER. Then if we do not give them the $400,000 the injunction of this Congress will be recognized. [Applause.] know it is said it is taking from one pocket and putting it into What is the use?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. Butler) there were-ayes 61, noes 41.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 35, after line 21, insert:
"General Land Office: For additional employees during the fiscal year 1922 at annual rates of compensation as follows: Law examiners—2 at $2,000 each, 4 at $1,800 each, 10 at $1,600 each; 4 clerks at $1,400 each; in all, $32,800."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this matter was gone over this morning and on yesterday and has to do with the force of the General Land Office, whose work is increased largely on account of the oil leasing act.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 44, after line 20, insert:
"Salaries: For additional employees during the fiscal year 1922 at annual rates of compensation as follows: Two assistant directors at $4,000 each; expert on commercial laws in foreign countries, $4,000; in all, $12,000."

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I noticed in the Post this morning this statement from Mr. Hoover, and I thoroughly agree with the statement, too. It says:

LUMBER INDUSTRY TO BARE FIGURES—REPRESENTATIVES AGREE WITH HOOVER ON PLAN FOR PUBLISHING FACTS.

Secretary of Commerce Hoover yesterday conferred with 30 manufacturing lumbermen representing organizations of their craft in all parts of the country for the purpose, it was stated, of securing an accurate survey of the lumber industry for the benefit of the public as well as business men.

"The object of the conference, which is the first one of its kind held so far in Washington," said Edgar P. Allen, of the National Lumber Manufacturers' Association, "is to try and secure facts relating to the lumber industry, which, when placed before the public, will enable people to know when to buy and how to utilize lumber in the best interests of the Nation."

Secretary Hooyer, it is understood, called upon the lumbermen to the Nation."

Secretary Hoover, it is understood, called upon the lumbermen to make an exhaustive survey of their business, take a thorough inventory and present the Department of Commerce with the facts and figures. According to the plan outlined by the Secretary, this information will be sent broadcast throughout the country under the supervision of the Department of Commerce. The lumbermen, it is said, promised to give the Secretary of Commerce all statistics gathered by their organizations.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, it seems to be the policy of Secretary Hoover to bring real publicity in the lumber industry. He stated before the Committee on Ways and Means a few days ago that he expected to try to bring full and accurate publicity in the various industries of the country, so that the consumers of the country might know what profits were being made in the coal business, the lumber business, and the other businesses of the country. I think that is a wise proposition, and I congratulate Mr. Hoover. I saw a statement in the Post this morning to the effect that certain great banking institutions of New York are preparing to float a loan of $100,000,000 for the French Republic, and many such loans have been made recently by American banking institutions to foreign Governments, notwithstanding the fact that many banks have failed in various sections of the country for lack of credit. Also there has the past two or three months been much distress in the South for lack of funds to take care of the cotton and other crops. Yet it seems the big financial institutions of the country have no trouble getting vast sums of money to lend foreign Governments, as well as item for structural investigations.

foreign individuals and corporations. There is something seriously wrong.

I think it would be wise for Mr. Hoover and the Federal Reserve Board to give the public some publicity about those loans, for this reason: It is perfectly all right and proper for them to make the loans provided our own people are first adequately taken care of, and provided also that France or these other Governments are going to expend some of that money in this country in buying our surplus products, cotton, wheat, and manufactured products, instead of spending it in South America and other countries in competition with the products of the farms, factories, and mines of this country. I believe it would be a good thing if we should have real publicity, since the great banking institutions are quasi public-service corporations in a We have heard a great deal recently about America first and American business first, and I think it would be very wise for Mr. Hoover and the Federal Reserve Board to take the public into their confidence and give actual publicity instead of so much propaganda about these things, so that the people may know themselves whether they are being gouged or whether there are yet profiteers in the country two or three years after the war is over. Also whether our great financial institutions are taking care of foreign Governments and peoples and letting our own people suffer.

I am submitting these observations because I think they are right, and I agree with the statement Mr. Hoover made in the paper this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Good: In the amendment adopted on page 5, after line 17, insert before the sum of "$250,000" the following: fiscal year 1922."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Good: On page 46, after line 10, insert: "the sum of $250,000 of the appropriation of $1,000,000 for the Bureau of the Census for the fiscal year 1922 is transferred to the Bureau of Standards and made available during that fiscal year for the following purposes and in the following amounts, respectively:"

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I desire recognition in opposition to the amendment.

This paragraph which is sought to be inserted by amendment is the paragraph to which I referred during the discussion of the rule this morning. Its purpose is to make available for the next fiscal year the three appropriations to be found on pages 46 and 47. In the discussion this morning the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] stated that these appropriations would not involve the creation of any new jobs or new employment. I therefore desire to state the facts for the benefit of the committee.

There was estimated by the department for the first appropriation, which is for the continuation of the investigation of structural material-and the appropriation prior to the war-the sum of $100,000. Last year the Congress appropriated for this purpose $125,000. For the next year they asked for $175,000 and the Congress gave them the same amount that they have for this fiscal year, to wit, $125,000. Now, as to whether or not it creates any new jobs, I refer to page 1238 of the hearings upon the legislative bill. The question was asked by Mr. Wood:

You have estimated for an increase in your force there of 23 men?

The estimate being the increase from $125,000 to $175,000. The answer of Mr. Stratton is:

They are mostly testers. The men who are doing this testing are men of the grade from $1,000 to $1,500, with perhaps a few who supervise it. So it does provide for the employment of 23 additional men.

In arguing yesterday afternoon in behalf of this increased appropriation the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] said it was appropriated for the purpose of aiding the American people in securing homes at this time, when it was so important on account of the housing situation.

That was not this item.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman will turn to the RECORD, he will find the statement was made as to this

In the hearings on the legislative bill only a few months ago Dr. Stratton presented the estimate, and he was asked this question by Mr. Wason, of New Hampshire:

If I understand you, this $175,000 would only take care of the Government's purchases that you should test?

Mr. Stratton. Yes, sir; we do not do this kind of testing for the public. Private laboratories can do that, very largely.

Again, Mr. Wason said:

The word "testing" should be inserted.

To which Mr. Stratton replied:

Yes; or we should say "the testing and inspecting for the Government," because we confine that purely to Government work.

After that statement the committee gave them only $125,000; and so now they come back at this session, just two months later, and in presenting the same estimate, presented by the same gentleman, Mr. Stratton, accompanied by the new Secretary, the additional $50,000 was urged on the ground that the housing conditions in the country at this time were such that it was necessary to make an investigation in order to help solve the problem.

Now, as to the second paragraph, which is made available for the next fiscal year:

For technical investigations in cooperation with the industries upon fundamental problems involved in industrial development following the

For this purpose they had $50,000 for this year, 1921. Fifty thousand dollars was appropriated for 1922. The department comes back and asks for $100,000 additional on estimates presented by the same gentleman, Dr. Stratton, and by this paragraph, if you vote it into the hill, you give them the additional $100,000.

The third paragraph, by which you will make available— The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The third paragraph is:

To enable the Bureau of Standards to cooperate with Government departments, engineers, and manufacturers in the establishment of stand-

That estimate was also presented to the Congress at the last session. They asked for $175,000 for 1921 and the Appropriation Committee gave them nothing for this work, the committee presided over by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Woon] evidently deeming that it was not of importance. For 1922 they asked for only $25,000, and the Congress gave them nothing.

I should say that in presenting that estimate, in order that it may know what importance was attached to it by the Director of the Bureau of Standards in charge of this work, only one question was asked and a short answer made, as appears in the hearings, to be found on page 1255. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] cited the estimate in the appropriation bill. Mr. Stratton said this, and this is all he had to say, in support of this item:

That involves the working out of standards for the Government service, and in cooperation with manufacturers, not in standardizing for them, but helping them to work out their standards. That item explains itself very well, and it is an important one.

That is what the director said in support of the item, and now on appeal from the decision of the Congress they ask for $100,000 instead of $25,000, and the Congress, if it votes for this provision, is going to give them $100,000. In this way you will appropriate $250,000, the $250,000 which the chairman of the committee told the House yesterday was to the credit of the Bureau of the Census and could not be used by that bureau. My proposition was to put the $250,000 back into the Treasury instead of giving it to this Bureau of Standards on such a showing as they have made.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On April 30, 1921:

H. R. 2185. An act providing for a "Pageant of Progress Exposition" cancellation stamp to be used by the Chicago post

On May 6, 1921:

H. R. 3152. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Ironton & Russell Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River at or near the city of Ironton, Ohio, and between the county of Lawrence, Ohio, and the county of Greenup, Ky.

On May 17, 1921:

H. J. Res. 52. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to furnish water to applicants and entrymen in arrears for more than one calendar year of payment for maintenance or construction charges, notwithstanding the provisions of section 6 of the act of August 13, 1914.

On May 19, 1921:

H. R. 4075. An act to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States.

On May 25, 1921:

H. J. Res. 123. Joint resolution to provide funds for the repair of the elevator in the Washington Monument.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session,

Mr. MADDEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I started in connection with the last paragraph, in replying to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], to say that if the $100,000 provided for in that paragraph be allowed it will enable the Bureau of Standards, in cooperation with the engineers and manufacturers of the country perhaps to fix a standard bolt and a standard thread which can be used by all the manufacturers in almost every activity in the manufacturing establishments of the country. If that could be brought about, it would save millions, hundreds of millions of dollars, in the manufacture of articles in use throughout the country, and if the Government of the United States by the expenditure of $100,000 can approach any such condition as that it will be money very well spent.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Not just now, please.

Then, for example, for the continuation of the investigation of structural materials, such as stone, clay, cement, and so forth, there is no activity of the Government so useful to the people of the Nation as this activity in the Bureau of Standards. Let us first take cement. They will be able to classify the various qualities of cement and give the standard quality to the public, and in that way they will be able to give the public the benefit of the inferiority or the superiority of the various cements, and in that way compel the manufacturers of cement to sell according to the value of the commodity, whereas to day, without any standard, the cement combination is able to say to the public, "We give you a cement of a superior quality and we charge you the highest possible price."

But with a standard fixed and the various qualities designated, no such condition can apply. Surely if the Government can spend $50,000 for the ascertainment of such information as this, which will enable the building public to buy its materials at a price justified by the quality of the goods, we could afford to spend $50,000-yes, $1,000,000; and more than that-because to-day the combination that exists among the cement manufacturers is such that the public is compelled to pay an exorbitant price for almost any kind of cement they may choose to put upon the market.

And so it is with all the various clays and the other materials that are used in building. And while there is no chance on earth, through the Bureau of Standards, to fix the actual cost of building or to reduce the cost except in this indirect way. yet there is an advantage in informing the public of the conditions under which the materials are manufactured and as to the character of the materials that are placed on the market to be sold, and thereby give to the public information which will enable the people to buy according to standards, and not according to the combination's price.

Mr. WINGO rose.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman from Arkansas want some

Mr. WINGO. One minute.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. GOOD. all debate on this paragraph all amendments thereto close in three minutes, one minute to be consumed by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection, Mr. WINGO. Mr. Cha

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] a question.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. Mr. WINGO. I understand the gentleman to say that the Bureau of Standards is at work upon the problem of standardizing nuts and bolts?

Mr. MADDEN. That is what we are trying to do under the item on page 47.

Mr. WINGO. Nuts are supposed to be standardized. What are they trying to do now?

Mr. MADDEN. They are trying to make the bolts and nuts have the same thread in all kinds of machinery manufactured, instead of having 400 or 500 or, perhaps, 1,000 different sized

Mr. WINGO. The fact of the matter is that wonderful progress has been made in standardizing bolts and nuts, and we are making progress in standardizing threads. But it would be impossible to standardize all "nuts," especially legis-[Laughter.] I hope they can work out standlative "nuts." ards of other kinds, so that you will have standard engine parts and other standard parts. That will be useful. But it is useless to let these "nuts" try to standardize other "nuts," because thus far all the progress that has been made has been upon steel and iron nuts. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, in order that we may know just what we are doing, even with this appropriation, I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], we are not appropriating as much for these activities in the Bureau of Standards as was estimated for by Mr. Alexander, the former Secretary of the Department of Commerce. The estimate for the continuation of the investigation of structural materials was $175,000, and Congress appropriated for the next year $125,-000. For technical investigations the estimate was $250,000, and the appropriation was $50,000. The estimate to enable the Bureau of Standards to cooperate with the Government departments was $25,000, and no appropriation was made. In other words, the estimates were $450,000, and we are appropriating only $425,000, with this increase, and so far as the "jobs" are concerned, all of this money is taken from the appropriation made to the Bureau of the Census.

If you were to assume-which would be a violent assumption-that those clerks who are to be dropped each draw as much as $1,500 per annum, it will require the dropping of 166 clerks in the Census to take care of 66 people in the Bureau of Standards. What I said was that we were not creating more new jobs. We are lopping off more jobs by this rule than we are putting on, but we are transferring appropriations from one bureau to another and getting superior men at higher pay, men who can direct the investigators.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman give me a little lesson in economy?

Mr. GOOD. I will try. Mr. BUTLER. This amendment having been offered by the gentleman will, of course, be adopted; but if it had not been offered there would be a chance that the Treasury might get $250,000, would there not? There would be that much left over in the Bureau of the Census.

Mr. GOOD. I do not think the Secretary of Commerce would spend it, but I do say it is the opinion of Mr. Secretary Hoover that it will save many, many times the amount of the appro-priation to the men in the United States engaged in industrial activity, including those who are building homes. If that is a good argument, we can just stop the wheels of government and not pay out anything. But the Government would cease to function.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division. The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 70, noes 23.

So the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Capitol power plant: For lighting the Capitol, Senate and House Office Buildings, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921, $18,000.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. May I ask the chairman of the committee what was the original appropriation for this item?

Mr. GOOD. For this Capitol power plant?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. My recollection is that it was $111,000.

Mr. UNDERHILL. And this $18,000 is a deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman I realize that it is pretty hard to save thousands, but it seems to me that here is an few dollars at least. Since I have been here it has been my observation that on the brightest, sunniest days, when the reflection from the marble corridors is almost blinding, every chandelier and every cluster and every globe and every electric light in the corridors of the House Office Buildingand I suppose in the Senate Office Building as well-is lighted during the daytime. We found out during the war that we could conserve coal and energy and money and time and effort if we economized on our electric light, and we all endeavored to do so. At every one of the elevators there is a switch which could easily be turned by the operator, but I suppose that operator is under another department. At almost every entrance there is a doorkeeper, and right at his hand is a switch that he might easily turn, but I suppose he is under some other department. We see the policemen walking the corridors of the building, but I suppose they are under some other department and can not turn a switch; and I suppose the only way we can help is by the Members, when they leave their offices at night, turning off the lights in their own rooms and thereby save in contrast to the indifference and neglect of the employees. I offer this as a suggestion.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

To pay the widow of William H. Frankhauser, late a Representative from the State of Michigan, $7,500, to be disbursed by the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 48, after line 9, insert a new paragraph as follows: "To pay the widow of Charles F. Van de Water, late a Representative from the State of California, $7,500, to be disbursed by the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, Representative VAN DE WATER was elected a Member of this House from the ninth California district at the beginning of November of last year. About three weeks afterwards he was attending a meeting at a neighboring town and left along about 11 o'clock in the evening in an automobile for his home at Long Beach, with his wife, his secretary, a young lady from Long Beach, and another lady in the machine. Some one had carelessly left an automobile truck that had broken down along the highway, a fine-surfaced road. It was rather a foggy evening. Mr. Van de Water driving his car did not see this truck and trailer and drove into it and was killed, as was also his young lady secretary.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. What was the date of the accident?

Mr. OSBORNE. The latter part of November, 1920. Mr. LINEBERGER. This accident happened about 11.30 on the night of November 19, 1920, practically three weeks after he was elected.

Mr. OSBORNE. I will state that Mr. VAN DE WATER was elected after a very hot campaign by a majority of 27,000. the moment of his death he was potentially as much a Member of this House as any Member who sits here to-day. I am informed that his certificate was duly issued by the secretary of state, although it was issued after his death.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OSBORNE. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. At this time was the gentleman whom he defeated still a Member of the House?

Mr. OSBORNE. At that time he was. All of the things that Representative Van de Water would have done if it had not been for this unfortunate accident could not be done because of that fact. As I stated, the vote was canvassed in the regular form by the secretary of state, and, as I am informed, a certificate did issue that he was duly elected to the House, as, of course, he was.

Now, I do not know what was the origin of giving a year's salary to the widow of a deceased Congressman. It commenced way back a great many years ago, as far back as I can remem-It probably arose from the fact that most old Members of the House are not particularly provident.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. OSBORNE.

Mr. OSBORNE. I ask for five minutes more. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. OSBORNE. There are very few old Members of Congress, so far as my observation goes, who are particularly provident. They get along in years and become elderly men, and their wives, if they leave wives, are advanced in years and are opportunity where, by cooperation, we might be able to save a left without much property, and it seems a beneficent thing that they should be recognized in this way. Take this case of Mr. VAN DE WATER; he was a man in moderate circumstances; he had a wife and three young children, two of them girls. The whole thing is a matter of grace. It is not a matter of right, it is not a matter of law; it is a matter of grace. Therefore technical objections that might possibly be made do not apply in a case of this kind. I have looked into this somewhat, and as far as I can ascertain I have not been able to find a case where a point of order was ever made in a case of this kind. I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. OSBORNE. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Was a certificate of the election of this man filed with the Clerk of the House?

Mr. OSBORNE. I can not say. Mr. WALSH. How is the House to know that he was elected if the certificate has not been filed?

Mr. OSBORNE. I tell you that he was elected. Mr. WALSH. We would not dispute the gentleman's word, but every appropriation of this kind is based on the records of the House.

Mr. OSBORNE. I am now able to state that it was filed, as I have learned since I spoke, from my colleague, who is the successor of Mr. VAN DE WATER. It was filed with the Clerk of

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I feel I can not permit this opportunity to pass without rising to say a few words in respect to my friend the late Congressman-elect Charles F. VAN DE WATER, of the ninth California district. Mr. VAN DE Water was one of those sterling types of American citizens of which this country may well be proud. He was born in Hobart, N. Y., October 10, 1872, the son of a Methodist minister, a member of a New York conference. His father, the Rev. Isaac Van de Water, who has recently also passed into the Great Beyond, was at the time of his death in his ninety-second year and was a devout Christian gentleman and minister of the gospel, just such a father as one who had observed, as I have often done, the devotion between father and son would have expected in a family of the sterling traits of the Van de Waters. The family moved to Florida prior to coming to California. They owned an orange grove in Florida which was destroyed in one of the great freezes which occurred there some years ago.

Mr. VAN DE WATER worked his way through the preparatory school at De Lancy, Fla., working as a janitor, and later through college at Athens, Tenn., as a tutor in Latin, commercial courses, and in military training. He had a successful business career, and at the time of his death was the surviving member of the firm of Townsend-Van de Water and interested in several other business enterprises, all of which he had largely neglected on account of his candidacy-which he reluctantly entered into, and which he viewed as a patriotic duty. He married Miss Edith Weir at Chattanooga, Tenn., in 1904, and is survived by his widow and three small children.

It was my pleasure to know and to have been closely associated with Mr. VAN DE WATER both in a business and social way, from time to time, for a period of 10 years. In 1916, when the dark clouds of war were hovering over this beloved land of ours, Mr. VAN DE WATER was among the first of our citizens who realized the necessity of preparedness. He enlisted in a training camp as a private, and carried his pack as did thousands of other loyal Americans in an attempt to gain entrance into the Army for the war which was then about to be declared. Upon the declaration of war he attempted to get into the service, but was turned down because of the fact that he was a few months beyond the age limit. Notwithstanding the fact that he could not enter the military service he practically gave up business during the entire period of the war, devoting himself to Liberty loan activities and other efforts necessary to the winning of the war. As I have said before, in Charles F. Van de Water this country lost a sterling citizen and a Christian gentleman, a man possessed of a high sense of patriotism and ability, and I have no doubt of statesmanship. Had he lived to take his seat on the floor of this House I am quite sure he would have proven himself a distinguished Member of this historic body. I feel, and I am sure that those in California who knew him best feel. that to know him was to love him, and that the world and politics particularly are better because of his participation in trust that the amendment which has been offered by my friend and colleague from California [Mr. OSBORNE] will be agreed to. Mr. VAN DE WATER went through all of the expense, trials, and unpleasantness incident to a political campaign and was elected to membership in this House by approximately 27,000 majority. While his family are not in what might be called adverse circumstances, and as I understand it this does not enter into the matter, I am quite sure that the $7,500 which Congress has for many years paid to the families of deceased Members and Members elect should also be appropriated in this case. It is only fair and just that it should be so, and I trust no one will be so ungenerous as to oppose an amendment which perhaps while not strictly founded in precedent, and subject to some purely technical objection. is none the less proper because it deals with that greatest of all human mysteries, death, from which none are immune and in whose wake the humblest as well as the greatest bow to pay tribute to the departed. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the appropriation which we make for the widows of deceased Members or dependents of deceased Members is a mere gratuity. There is no law for it. The gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE] says that he can not remember when a point of order was made to a similar proposition. I can recall the death of Mr. Pepper, a distinguished Member of this House from the State of Iowa. He was a Member of the House for a couple of years. He died while he was such Member, and after his death I offered an amendment to pay his father and mother, who were dependent upon him, a year's salary. A point of order was made and it went out on the point of order. It was necessary for me to have it in-serted in the Senate and finally had it agreed to in conference.

I reserve the point of order to this item, not because I intend to press it, because I shall not, for it is a matter that is so close to the Members of the House that I think they should decide what they want to do about it, but because this man was never a Member of this House.

If the amendment is adopted, I doubt very much, unless some one violates the law, whether they can make the payment, because Mr. Van de Water was never more than a Member elect of this House and died while he was only a Member elect. If at that time, or a short time afterwards, the then sitting Member, Mr. Randall, had died, we would have had here the proposition to pay the widows of two Members from the same district.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not doubt, I take it, notwithstanding what he said, that if we make the appropriation the money will be paid. It is a gift, whether it is to the widow of a Member of the House or John Jones, who never was even a candidate for office.

Mr. GOOD. I suppose it would finally be paid, but I say it is not properly described, as the gentleman well knows, in the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to say whether there is any precedent for this at all?

Mr. GOOD. We have tried to find some precedent but have been unable to find any case where there was ever an appropriation made for the widow or the dependents of a Member elect who died after his election and prior to the time of taking his seat.

Mr. MANN. Since the gentleman from Iowa and I have been Members of this House a good many Representatives elect—that is the legal term for them, I believe-have died, and I rose to inquire whether there was any precedent for paying the widow of a Representative elect?

Mr. GOOD. I made inquiry of the Clerk, and he could find no case where there ever was before a proposition presented to the House to pay the widow or the dependent of a Member elect. Payments have always been in the case of a Member of The item which we have just passed was to pay the Congress. widow of William H. Frankhauser, and some reference had been made to that.

Mr. Frankhauser was sick on March 4 and did not take the oath of office, but he was a Member of this House and he drew his salary up to the time of his death, just as every Member draws his salary, irrespective of whether he had taken the obligation of a Member or not. Yet some question might have been raised with regard to that. But it did seem to the committee when this matter was presented informally by the gentleman from California that it was stretching the rule. said to the gentleman, I could not vote for it myself because I thought it was setting a dangerous precedent, but I told him that I would not make the point of order, because it was one of those things, it seems to me, that the Members of the House might want to determine for themselves, or, if anyone feels that the point of order should be made in the performance of his duty as a Member, that is another question.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. OSBORNE. In this case that he refers to where a point of order was made, was it a case where the amendment provided for the widow of the Member?

Mr. GOOD. I think it was both for the father and mother of a Member. It was made upon the ground that it did not go to a dependent. Mr. Pepper was unmarried at the time of his death. The matter of paying this gratuity first originated where the wife of a deceased Member was in pecuniary want, and since that time it has been granted as a matter of course to the wives of all the deceased Members, but it has been limited to persons who were actual Members of Congress.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In the case of Charles A. Sulzer, who was elected a Delegate from Alaska, and died prior to the issuance of the certificate of election to him-

Mr. GOOD. He was a sitting Member.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. However, he had not received the certificate of election.

Mr. GOOD. But he was a Member of the old Congress. Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then, it was on account of his membership of the previous Congress?

Mr. GOOD. No. He was a Member at the time of his death. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. GOOD. His term had not expired when he died.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I renew the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. May the time of the gentleman from Iowa be extended one minute so that I may make a suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. My recollection is that Mr. Suizer died in the month of April.

Mr. GOOD. I think he died the 7th or 8th of March, but the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Dowell] probably can give the information.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman is mistaken. Mr. Sulzer died in April, and the certificate was issued some two days after his death, which was about the middle of April following the 4th of March, when his term expired.

The point is, Did we pay the $7,500?

Mr. MANN. The point is, Did we pay the 3 Mr. GOOD. He was a Member of the House.

Mr. DOWELL. For the term for which he was elected, but never qualified.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; he had served one term and was elected for a second term and had his certificate of election-

Mr. MANN. Congress was in session, and he was on the pay roll of the House.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; that is a different situation.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, it was subsequently contested in the House that he was not elected.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; but up to the time of his death he was a Member. He had the privileges of the House, having been a Member of the House, but after his death it was decided that he was not legally elected.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it has always been the custom of the House, as far as I know, that when a sitting Member dies or when the death of a Member occurs during the term for which he has been elected, whether he has been actually sworn in or not, to provide a year's salary to his widow and family. As has been stated, this is a mere gratuity; there is no law that authorizes it. It has been the custom of the Congress, both of the House and Senate, for many, many years. The item that has just been passed making appropriation for the widow or the family of Mr. Frankhauser was recommended and was passed by the House in accordance with that custom. These two cases are entirely different. Mr. Van de Water was elected in November, 1920, for the term beginning March 4, 1921. He met with his most unfortunate and regrettable accident in November, 1920, more than three months before his term as a Member of Congress began, and at a time when his district was represented here upon the floor by another gentleman, and, as has been stated, if that gentleman had died prior to the expiration of his term on March 4 Congress would have appropriated a year's salary for his family.

Mr. OSBORNE. Will the gentleman yield to allow me to ask him a question? We have heard that same simile made by others; but it seems to me to be faulty in this, that if Mr. Randall, the sitting Member, had been so unfortunate as to pass away at the time Mr. Van de Water did, he would have received the gratuity as a Member of the Sixty-sixth Congress. Mr. Van de Water, if the House should approve this item, which I hope it will, will receive this amount as a Member of the present | the point of order?

House, the Sixty-seventh Congress, so there is no duplication whatever. I wanted to point out that that is a mistake; that there is no duplication.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman carry the illustration a little further? The district is now represented by a gentleman who I hope will live to represent the district for many years. He has served since March 4, and he is the sitting Member from the district. Mr. Van de Water never represented the district.

Mr. OSBORNE. Will the gentleman permit another suggestion, and that is this: Suppose I should pass away and another gentleman should be elected in my place a month from now, and in turn he should pass away, and after that a month later his successor should pass away. Of course, the fact I had passed away would not at all take care of the surviving widows of those who succeeded me. I do not think there is anything in that.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. These illustrations, I respectfully submit to the gentleman, are not on all fours with this case, because in the illustrations the gentleman makes all the Members were sitting Members. In this case one gentleman never has been a Member of Congress, but was simply elected for a term beginning on March 4. After his death in November preceding

Mr. OSBORNE. He was certified to the Clerk of this House as a Member of this House.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But he could not become a Member until March 4, when his term began. I have made this explanatory statement, gentlemen, and since I do not think there is any precedent-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I ask for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There is no precedent for an appropriation of this kind, and while I understand it may be a little ungracious, and, of course, I regret to make the point of order, it ought to be made——
Mr. OSBORNE. I hope the gentleman will not do that.
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. With all due deference to the gentleman from California, whom we all admire, I do not feel we ought to set a precedent of this kind, and I believe that somebody ought, in the interest of the Treasury of the United States, to take the position here that this is a precedent which should not be established, and I therefore make the point of order.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Is it not probable that, inasmuch as the precedent has never been established in the whole life of this Nation, that that thing may not occur?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I know gentlemen who have served in Congress for 25 and 30 years and who have recently gone out of Congress. As the gentleman's colleague from California stated a while ago, Members come to Congress, and whatever funds they had when they came here frequently become exhausted, and does not the gentleman think that, if we are going to give gratuities, those gentlemen who have faithfully served that length of time are more entitled to them than a gentleman in a case of this kind, who never performed service? Yet I do not think the gentleman would stand for an amendment that would give their wives and children a year's salary.

Mr. LINEBERGER. But this gentleman was elected to Congress, and went through an arduous campaign.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise my remarks that I made on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from California [Mr. Osborne] offers an amendment, as follows:

Page 48, after line 9, insert a new paragraph, as follows:
"To pay the widow of Charles F. Van de Water, late a Representative from the State of California, $7,500, to be disbursed by the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives."

To that amendment the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] makes a point of order. The Chair assumes that the point of order is that it is not authorized by law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I thought I so stated. That is the ground on which I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair assumed that from the discussion that has taken place on the floor.

Mr. OSBORNE. Will the Chair give me an opportunity of saying a word?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on

Mr. OSBORNE. Yes. If I stray a little from it, you must allow for the fact that I am not a lawyer.

Almost every man of intelligence-and all of the Members on this floor are men of intelligence-knows, of course, that that point of order would stand against any item of this kind that might be presented to this House. I would like to know if one of the Members of that side of the House were to pass away, and I were to get up on my side and raise a point of order, I would not be considered ungracious and unkind? I believe I would receive the universal disapprobation of the Members of the House.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am very sorry-

Mr. OSBORNE. I have not finished yet with my remarks on the point of order.

Here the House votes gratuities to contesting Members. They bring their cases here, and we vote thousands and thousands of dollars for their expenses and salaries. The House has voted for probably hundreds of cases of deceased Members. This man was elected a Member of this House, and although it might violate some of those sacred precedents, it is not a matter of law, it is a matter of gratuity, of graciousness, of grace, of final courtesy, to our deceased Member. And I feel sure if I were to raise the point of order against an appropriation in favor of the widow and children of one of you gentlemen here I would receive universal disapprobation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry by standing on my rights as a Member and by trying to protect the Treasury I have earned the disapprobation of the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE]. I am quite sure that no other Member who respects a Member's rights and who has the faintest interest in economy or the proper conception of just how far a Member should go in voting away the people's money as a gratuity shares his views. I have never heretofore made a point of order to a provision in any appropriation bill providing for the widows and the families of Members. We have just passed a provision which makes an appropriation for the family of a Member who was not sworn in, it is true, but he was a Member of this House and was actually upon the pay roll. The gentle-man from California asks this House to take from the people's Treasury $7,500 and give it as a pure gratuity to the family of a gentleman who was elected in November for a term beginning March 4, but who unfortunately died a few weeks after his election and before his term began, and a gentleman who, as his colleague has stated, was not in adverse circumstances, and whose family, according to his statement, does not need aid. Then why

Mr. OSBORNE. He did not say that.
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I decline to yield. Why should Congress, if it intends to practice as well as preach economy, take from the Treasury $7,500 and pay it as a mere gratuity to the family of a deceased gentleman who was never a Member of this House, as the gentleman says he was, and could not have been until March 4 of this year? There are families of dependent citizens of the United States who have not been so fortunate as to be elected to Congress, but who are in need, and if we are to vote gratuities, Mr. Chairman, and set a precedent of this kind, it seems to me we ought to be consistent in our action and vote gratuities to those who need them rather than to those who it is stated do not need them, and who are not in adverse circumstances.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Will the gentleman yield? I wish to make a correction.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

The Chair just stated the question raised by the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns]. is no law authorizing the appropriation provided for in the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE]. The Chair can not place the matter before the Members of the House, the point of order having been made, What the Chair would do, if the case were submitted, and if he were sitting as a Member of the House, has nothing to do with the situation as it is presented to the Chair at this time. There being no law authorizing such an appropriation, the Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select committees, exclusive of salaries and labor, unless specifically ordered by the House of Representatives, $65,000.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, striking out in line 7, page 49, the sum of "$65,000" and substituting in lieu thereof "$95,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. IRELAND: On page 49, line 7, strike out $65,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$95,000."

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I offer this amendment after a conference with the Speaker and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and I believe I enjoy their sanction in both instances. The reason for it may meet with the unanimous approval of the House. It is a necessary item, to provide for the rehabilitation and reequip-ment of our House restaurant and the House Office Building restaurant. They are in such a state of ill repair that it is necessary to start almost from the bottom and rebuild them, and this amount, added to the provision made for the contingent fund, will be necessary in order to carry out the plans that are under contemplation at the present time. To-morrow I shall introduce a resolution that will more fully explain it and take care of the item. At present I do not want to take up the time of the committee with a discussion of the separate items to prove the necessity of that additional amount being provided in the miscellaneous fund.

ment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, let us hear the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I simply rise for the purpose of getting some information from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND]. It is my understanding that the Clerk only asked for $72,000, or hardly that.

Mr. IRELAND. I think that is correct.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I did not catch the gentleman's remarks. My attention was diverted for a moment.

Mr. IRELAND. As I attempted to explain, this is to carry out the plans for the rehabilitation and reequipment of the House restaurant and the restaurant in the House Office

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Admitting that it needs rehabilitation, what is the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask somebody a question; I do not care who it is. If this appropriation is made, will it tend toward providing a fairly respectable service in the House restaurant?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that if I were sure it would I would be very heartily in favor of it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. IRELAND] a

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Very well.

Mr. GOOD. I want to ask him whether any part of this is to be used for making any changes in the building?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. GOOD. How much of it?

Mr. IRELAND. For instance, it will cost between $8,000 and $9,000 simply to tile the kitchen.

Mr. GOOD. How much more for the building?
Mr. IRELAND. I can not from memory give the several items, but I do not think there is any other item for the building.

Mr. GOOD. We should not change the old historic plan of making improvements to the Capitol by carrying part of it under the Clerk of the House and part of it under the Superintendent of the Capitol. I have no objection to the amendment, think myself that the kitchen should be rehabilitated.

Mr. IRELAND. The Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds is the only one who has been consulted, in so far as this estimate obtains.

Mr. GOOD. On page 35 there is an item of $12,000 for work at the Capitol and general repairs. If it is going to take $12,000 more to tile the floors, that ought to be put under the direction of the Superintendent of the Capitol also. That amount ought to be carried there and the balance should be carried here. I have no objection to the gentleman getting the necessary appropriation to put this kitchen, which is a disgrace at present, in the proper condition, but let us do it in the proper way. If you have $30,000 and take $15,000 to remodel the building, you might have perhaps enough.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing on the face of this item to indicate that it would be expended by the Clerk.

Mr. GOOD. This is from the contingent expenses of the

Mr. IRELAND. That was not the intention.

Mr. GOOD. The item on page 35 is for repairs to the Capitol building. That comes, as the gentleman knows, under the Superintendent of the Capitol.

Mr. MANN. I assume if this amendment goes in as it is, so far as repairs of the building are concerned, it would be expended under the direction of the Superintendent of the Capitol under the supervision of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. GOOD. I suggest that you increase the item on page 35 by $10,000 and keep the item there.

Mr. IRELAND. I think $10,000 would be sufficient at present. Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. When I rose I simply wanted to get a little information about this amendment. Does the gentleman intend to withdraw it now and offer it at another place?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes; offer it on page 35 under the Capitol Building and Grounds. I suggest that we insert an additional $10,000 there and $20,000 here.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But the question I wanted to ask is whether the adoption of this amendment is going to give better food and better service in the restaurant?

Mr. IRELAND. The gentleman can not hope so more heartily than I do.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman expresses a hope,

We all have that.

Mr. IRELAND. Of course, I think it will make an improvement. I am going to offer to the House to-morrow the resolution which the Committee on Accounts passed this morning. think that might provoke all the discussion necessary to bring out the details. I am already making inquiry as to how the funds will be expended. I can give only an approximate estimate now, after having gone over the matter with the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds. At present I can not refer to any other item than those for the tiling and the kitchen.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. What was the estimate? Mr. IRELAND. The estimate that Mr. Woods made was between $8,000 and $9,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I mean for the whole improvement?

Mr. IRELAND. The whole amount would be approximately between $30,000 and $40,000. There has been no improvement made for some time. The gentleman needs no further proof of that than to travel through the kitchen. It has been suggested that some of the utensils now in the House Office Building can be removed over here, and in that way the improvement can be made without much added expense.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As I understand, the restaurant is now run under a concession-under what committee?

Mr. IRELAND. Yes; in charge of the Speaker. He is very anxious to be relieved.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does this contemplate any different management down there or any improvement in the present management from what we have had?

Mr. IRELAND. I am not sure whether we would want to follow the policy of the Senate or continue the present one.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I was just wondering whether the gentleman's resolution took that up.

Mr. IRELAND. No; the resolution does not provide for that. It simply places the responsibility in the hands of the Committee on Accounts and authorizes the replacements, repairs, and, I hope, improvements.

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman will not bring out any thing which will propose to follow the Senate plan with reference to the restaurant, when we had to appropriate $10,000 or $20,000 by way of a deficiency in the running of the Senate

Mr. IRELAND. The Senate restaurant is now just about breaking even, and I see no reason why that should not be so if that plan is followed.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It did not for a long time.

Mr. WINGO. As I understand, the Senate restaurant is breaking even, and it is contended that if the House Members and their guests would keep away from there the accommodations would be sufficient.

Mr. IRELAND. That is very true, and you can not blame the Senators for that attitude.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman contemplate a change in the plan of running the House restaurant? I would not vote to spend a dollar down there unless I thought there would be an improvement.

Mr. IRELAND. I am hoping that there will be, although it will take some time.

Mr. WINGO. A large number of Members will not go down there at all.

Mr. IRELAND. I can not blame them for that, and they will continue to go elsewhere so long as present conditions exist,

Mr. GOOD. I suggest that the gentleman modify his amendment, and that he make it to strike out "$65,000" and insert "$85,000."

Mr. IRELAND. I ask unanimous consent to change my amendment as indicated by the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modified amendment by Mr. Ireland: Page 49, line 7, strike out $65,000" and insert "$85,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Now I ask unanimous consent to return to page 35, line 18, in order that the gentleman from Illinois can offer an amendment there.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to page 35, line 18. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. IRELAND. I move to strike out "$12,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$22,000" in line 18, page 35.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. IRELAND: Page 35, line 18, strike out "$12,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$22,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 20, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Bren-NAN] asks unanimous consent to return to page 20, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa objects. Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment by Mr. Brennan: Page 49, line 7, insert the following paragraph:

"That the following provision contained in the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes,' approved March 4, 1921, contained under the heading 'Bureau of War Risk Insurance,' in the paragraph entitled 'Medical and hospital services,' to wit: 'Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be used for the payment of commutation of quarters, subsistence, and laundry or quarters, heat and light and longevity to any employee other than the commissioned medical officers provided for by statute,' is hereby repealed."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane and is legislation.

Mr. BRENNAN. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. GOOD. I will reserve it, so that the gentleman may speak for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa reserves his point of order, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Bren-NAN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment seeks to repeal a provision inserted in the sundry civil bill approved March 4, 1921. This provision, which is inserted under the heading of Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and which applies to the employees of the Public Health Service, reads as follows:

Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be used for the payment of commutation of quarters, subsistence and laundry or quarters, heat and light, and longevity to any employee other than the commissioned medical officers provided for by statute.

My amendment, as the gentleman says, is not a deficiency appropriation; but, from what has been called to my attention, the situation created by this provision presents a very sad deficiency in legislation, which may develop into a most serious emergency on the 1st of July.

Yesterday morning a young lady from my home city of De-troit came to me in my office and stated that she is an aide in the employ of the Public Health Service stationed at the Marine Hospital in Detroit, that she is one of nine aides who have been receiving $65 a month for commutation of quarters and for subsistence; that under this provision, which was inserted in the sundry civil bill in the Senate, she and the other eight members of that staff will be deprived of their commutation, and the Public Health Service will seek to rent quarters in which they are to live. As I say, this provision was inserted in the Senate. The House appe ed to have no interest in it. It came back and was agreed to in conference.

This is the situation that confronts these hospital aides. The Public Health Service finds that it is unable to procure suitable quarters in the neighborhood except by an expenditure of money greatly in excess of what this monthly commutation would be.

This young lady tells me that the house next door is an old mansion, for which a rental of $12,000 per year is asked. The only other available building is an old shack near by, containing 11 rooms and 1 bath, in which it is proposed to house the 9 women aids, an assistant administrative officer, his wife and children. She tells me that this will result in these women, many of whom are serving from patriotic rather than mercenary motives, and who now live at home with their families or with friends, resigning from the service. I verified her statement by calling this morning at the office of the Public Health Service. Dr. Richardson and Dr. Lavinder, who have made a study of the problem presented and have tabulated statistics thereon, assured me that if this provision remains in the law it will result in a very serious emergency to the Public Health Service. They tell me that there are 653 employees serving in hospitals helping to take care of disabled and wounded soldiers, and that these employees consist of nurses and aids, dieticians, laboratory assistants, clerks, and attendants, and that they will all be placed in the position of resigning or accepting a nominal wage of $85 a month and being housed in unsuitable and cramped quarters. What is true in Detroit is merely typical of what is true in almost every other one of the 72 hospitals conducted by this bureau. In the hospitals at Minneapolis, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Evansville, and Cleveland none of the nurses now live upon the premises. If they can be persuaded to relinquish their home comforts and to take up their residence in a Government building it will result in greatly increased expense to the Government and proportionately decreased efficiency and service upon the part of the nurse. After July 1 she will be breathing hospital atmosphere 24 hours At present she is able to leave the institution upon the completion of her actual hours of duty and enjoy a period of rest and relaxation in wholly different surroundings and environment. The next day she appears at the hospital fresh and vigorous, with a zest for the performance of her duties. The present system is in accord with the better and modern hospital practice; the proposed plan is a reversion to a system rapidly being discarded by forward-looking hospitals. The provision which I seek to repeal is a startling example of an amendment, adopted under the guise of economy, which will result at once in increased expenditure and decreased efficiency.

It is no answer to say that the Public Health Service may avoid the effect of the provision by increasing salaries to make up for the loss of commutation. This would merely be chasing the devil around the post. It would result in creating two classes of attendants, doing the same grade of work, receiving entirely different salaries, those living in Government quarters being paid, perhaps, half as much as those living outside. It would interfere with the mobility and flexibility of the personnel of the service, preventing, what is now frequently necessary, the transfer of nurses from one point to another unless the formality of a discharge and a reengagement would be followed in each case, with consequent delay and inconvenience. It is no answer for Congress unofficially to suggest that the Public Health Service increase salaries in order to permit its employees to live outside so long as there remains in the statutes an official direction from Congress to the Public Health Service that it provide Government quarters for these employees in connection with the hospitals. Another alarming feature of this provision is that it will result in further reducing the now totally inadequate hospital accommodations of our disabled war veterans. It may be found necessary, I am advised, to convert hospital wards into living quarters for nurses, thereby materially reducing the number of beds for patients.

The employees affected receive now, on an average, $145 a month, which includes $65 for commutation. If this provision sundry civil law remains, they will be deprived of $65 and the Government will be required to expend $100 more to supply for the same individual greatly inferior accommodations. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? Mr. BRENNAN. There was no objection.

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Chairman, recognizing that this amendment which I offer was not in order, I took it up with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good], and he suggested that it might come under the Sweet bill, which, I understand, will be reported out to-morrow and which concerns this problem. I took it up with Mr. Sweet, and he tells me that it is not among the things that his bill seeks to correct,

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman will make the same presentation of the matter to the House when the Sweet bill is up that he has made here he will probably get it added to

Mr. BRENNAN. The reason that I advance it at this time is because it seems to me imperatively necessary that the provision be repealed before the 1st of July. We have no assurance that the Sweet bill will be enacted by that time. tell me that if this provision is not taken out of the present law it will become necessary to break up the force of nurses and aids, and they will become scattered and it will be difficult later on to again organize them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi, Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRENNAN. Certainly, Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The Sweet bill makes no provision for an emergency such as the gentleman speaks of. If provision was made, it would have to be made outside of what has already been done. However, the bill will be in by tomorrow or next day.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, still further reserving the point of order, the item referred to was put in in the Senate. It was put in because everybody in the Public Health Service was getting commutation of quarters. No matter whether he was a plumber or a doctor or a nurse, they were getting commutation, and it was intended to stop that practice. The Public Health Service has sufficient funds to pay these nurses and it makes no difference whether they get commutation of quarters or they are paid an increase in salary. It was an abuse that grew up in the Public Health Service, and the gentleman's amendment would throw us back where we were before. While the matter was put on in the Senate, it was supported by the judgment of the House. Perhaps some correction ought to be made. In some cases nurses should be given commutation, but certainly not all. Why become so military in our hospitals? Why not run those hospitals as other hospitals are run? But I will say that the Public Health Service has money to pay these nurses that the gentleman speaks about, and it makes no difference whether it is commutation or regular salary. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment to this bill providing for the repeal of certain statute law as it now exists. To that amendment the gentleman from Iowa makes the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan is legislation and a change of existing law. Clearly that is the purpose of the amendment, and the Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of the Thirteenth Census, $2.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 60. line 19, strike out "$2" and insert "$1.98," so that the paragraph will read, "For expenses of the Thirteenth Census, $1.98."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in the hope that we may undertake to find the true value of the census of 1920. I offer it also that we may give the reading clerk an opportunity to rest, he having read eight pages without interruption. Also, I desire to suggest that we are not likely to reach a vote on this bill to-night.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask if this amendment comes under the Holman rule?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, strictly. I realize this item is, in fact, a deficiency item caused by the endeavor to get the census for 1920. We seem to have overlapped $2 from such inquiry. Let us pay it at a marked-down price. I find, Mr. Chairman, that the confusion over the figures of this census are getting worse and worse every day. I am inclined to think that the statistics we are receiving are statistics that are being made by striking within anywhere from 5 to 20 per cent of some desired figures. Also, I think we will discover, if we are to take the Immigration Bureau's figures and then take the 1920 census figures of aliens in the country, that we have in the United States something over 3,000,000 lost aliens. Who has got them? Where are the 3,000,000 missing aliens? Can not we locate them before we attempt congressional reapportionment? Failure of the 1920 census enumerators to find these 3,000,000 aliens may cause the next Congress to consist of 10 or 12 Members less than a true apportionment. It may deprive one great State of three or four additional Members. Of course, that might be an advantage; but it calls attention to the kind of census we took last year. Mr. WALSH.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.
Mr. WALSH. The gentleman states that statistics are getting worse every day. Does the gentleman mean to say that the official figures given out by the Census Bureau as to the population of the several States and the various subdivisions of the States have been modified or changed since officially announced?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In many cases, they are given out subject to correction. From my best observation I am inclined to believe they are not correct as to any single State, county, township, or city, and what I meant to say with regard to their getting worse every day is that the census statisticians have to arrive at some conclusive figures regarding various matters pertaining to census statistics by a mere guess that is anywhere from 5 to 20 per cent wrong.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield that I may ask a question of the gentleman from

Iowa:

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; with pleasure.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to conclude the bill this afternoon?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.
Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment which I have introduced.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total audited claims, section 2, $610,982.88.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 38, line 10, for the purpose of offering an amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada asks unanimous consent to return to page 38, line 10, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Let us hear the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Arentz: Page 38, line 10, after the figures "$17.56" insert: "Also the sum of $10,000 to provide hospitalization at Yerington, Nev., for the infant and aged sick Paiute Indians."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to this page for the purpose of offering the amendment just reported? Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, is this a deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. I am not in favor of the amendment, but I do not want to object.

Mr. WINGO. Is it a deficiency?
Mr. GOOD. No; it is not a deficiency.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then let us get along. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee objects. The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That this act hereafter may be referred to as the "Second deficiency act, fiscal year 1921."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask unanimous consent to return to page 33 in order that I may reason with my friend from Texas [Mr. Blanton] for a moment or two in an effort to restore an item to the bill which went out on a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has already reasoned with me, and I have withdrawn my objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well. It will save me a great deal of work, and I can vouch for the account.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to return to page 33 for the purpose of restoring an item that went out on a point of order. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the item begins on line 23, page 33, and is as follows:

and to the Giant Portland Cement Co., subcontractors, for loss sustained by it on cement furnished for this work, $17,517.94.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 33, line 23, by inserting after the semicolon the language: for loss sus-and to the Giant Portland Cement Co., subcontractors, for tained by it on cement furnished for this work, $75,517.94.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman wants all the language, "or so much thereof as may be shown by audit," and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WALSH. Was not an amendment adopted at that place in the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment was adopted to that portion of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Then I desire to ask if the amendment is to follow or to precede the amendment which was adopted?

Mr. BUTLER. To take the place of the amendment which I offered. It is to follow the Good amendment.

Mr. GOOD. I think what the gentleman wants to do here is to offer an amendment on page 33, line 23, changing the period to a semicolon and add:

and to the Giant Portland Cement Co., subcontractor, for loss sustained by it on cement furnished for this work, $75,517.94, or so much thereof as may be shown by audit of the subcontractor's books by the Navy Department; in all, $243,017.94.

Mr. BUTLER. I thank the gentleman very much that he has enabled me to do what I wish.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUTLER: Page 33, line 23, after the word "dock," strike out the period, insert a semicolon, and add: "and to the Giant Portland Cement Co., subcontractor, for loss sustained by it on cement furnished for this work, $75,517.94, or so much thereof as may be shown by audit of the subcontractor's books by the Navy Department; in all, $243,017.94."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Campbell of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6300, had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage. The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amend-

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the amendment-I do not know the number, but it is on page -which changes the limitation placed upon certain expenditures in the last naval appropriation bill and grants an increase of $400,000. I ask a separate vote on that.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. BLANTON. I demand a separate vote on the six amendments known as the Good amendments made in order by the rule, and I ask unanimous consent that in the consideration of those amendments they may all be determined by one vote.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not the Chair will put them in gross.

The question was taken, and the remaining amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania included in these six referred to by the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. The other five, excepting the one referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment which the Clerk will report.

Page 34, after line 4, insert:

"Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts: The limitation specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921 on expenditures for pay of chemists and for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in the supply and accounting department of the navy yards and naval stations and disbursing offices for the fiscal year 1921 is further increased by $400,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were ayes 54, noes 47.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order of no quorum.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment to enable me to make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes: I do not want to keep gentlemen here to-night.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withhold his point?
Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.
Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if the House should adjourn, would the vote come immediately upon this amendment to-morrow morning?

The SPEAKER. It would come the first thing in the morning. Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I very greatly regret to keep the gentlemen here. I simply want a record on this question.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, has the point of no quorum been raised?

The SPEAKER. It has.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. I move that the House do now adjourn. The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 26, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 26, 1921.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we bless Thee for another day and its privileges. We desire Thy guidance to help us in the understanding of duty, to recognize Thy claims as well as those of our country. Be pleased to be with us always. For Christ Jesus' sake. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, May 20, 1921, when, on request of Mr. Lodge and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, under the unanimous-consent agreement, it becomes my duty to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 4 hours and 35 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM-CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 15).

While the doors were closed Mr. McCormick, as in legislative session, called up the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1084) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes, and the report was agreed to. The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1084) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by the amendment of the House insert the following:

"TITLE I .- DEFINITIONS.

"Section 1. This act may be cited as the 'budget and accounting act, 1921.'
"Sec. 2. When used in this act—

"The terms 'department and establishment' and 'department or establishment' mean any executive department, independent commission, board, bureau, office, agency, or other establishment of the Government, including the municipal government of the District of Columbia, but do not include the legislative branch of the Government or the Supreme Court of the United States; . "The term 'the budget' means the budget required by section 201 to be transmitted to Congress:

The term 'bureau' means the bureau of the budget;

"The term "director' means the director of the bureau of the budget; and

"The term 'assistant director' means the assistant director of the bureau of the budget.

" TITLE II .- THE BUDGET.

"Sec. 201. The President shall transmit to Congress on the first day of each regular session the budget, which shall set forth in summary and in detail:

"(a) Estimates of the expenditures and appropriations necessary, in his judgment, for the support of the Government for the ensuing fiscal year; except that the estimates for such year for the legislative branch of the Government and the Supreme Court of the United States shall be transmitted to the President on or before October 15 of each year, and shall be included by him in the budget without revision;

"(b) His estimates of the receipts of the Government during the ensuing fiscal year, under (1) laws existing at the time the budget is transmitted, and also (2) under the revenue proposals,

if any, contained in the budget:

"(c) The expenditures and receipts of the Government during the last completed fiscal year;

"(d) Estimates of the expenditures and receipts of the Government during the fiscal year in progress;

"(e) The amount of annual, permanent, or other appropriations, including balances of appropriations for prior fiscal years, available for expenditure during the fiscal year in progress, as of November 1 of such year;

"(f) Balanced statements of (1) the condition of the Treasury at the end of the last completed fiscal year, (2) the estimated condition of the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year in progress, and (3) the estimated condition of the Treasury at the end of the ensuing fiscal year, if the financial proposals contained in the budget are adopted;

"(g) All essential facts regarding the bonded and other indebtedness of the Government; and

"(h) Such other financial statements and data as in his opinion are necessary or desirable in order to make known in all practicable detail the financial condition of the Government.

"SEC. 202. (a) If the estimated receipts for the ensuing fiscal year contained in the budget, on the basis of laws existing at the time the budget is transmitted, plus the estimated amounts in the Treasury at the close of the fiscal year in progress, available for expenditure in the ensuing fiscal year, are less than the estimated expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year contained in the budget, the President, in the budget, shall make recommendations to Congress for new taxes, loans, or other appropriate action to meet the estimated deficiency.

"(b) If the aggregate of such estimated receipts and such estimated amounts in the Treasury is greater than such estimated expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year, he shall make such recommendations as in his opinion the public interests re-

"SEC. 203. (a) The President from time to time may transmit to Congress supplemental or deficiency estimates for such appropriations or expenditures as in his judgment (1) are necessary on account of laws enacted after the transmission of the budget or (2) are otherwise in the public interest. He shall accompany such estimates with a statement of the reasons therefor, including the reasons for their omission from the budget.

"(b) Whenever such supplemental or deficiency estimates reach an aggregate which, if they had been contained in the budget, would have required the President to make a recommendation under subdivision (a) of section 202, he shall thereupon make such recommendation.

"SEC. 204. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this act, the contents, order, and arrangement of the estimates of appropriations and the statements of expenditures and estimated expenditures contained in the budget or transmitted under section 203, and the notes and other data submitted therewith, shall conform to the requirements of existing law.

"(b) Estimates for lump-sum appropriations contained in the budget or transmitted under section 203 shall be accompanied by statements showing, in such detail and form as may be necessary to inform Congress, the manner of expenditure of such appropriations and of the corresponding appropriations for the fiscal year in progress and the last completed fiscal year. Such statements shall be in lieu of statements of like character now required by law.

SEC. 205. The President, in addition to the budget, shall transmit to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1921, for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, only, an alternative budget, which shall be prepared in such form and amounts and according to such system of classification and itemization as is, in his opinion, most appropriate, with such explanatory notes and tables as may be necessary to show where the various items embraced in the budget are contained in such alternative budget.

Sec. 206. No estimate or request for an appropriation and no request for an increase in an item of any such estimate or request and no recommendation as to how the revenue needs of the Government should be met shall be submitted to Congress or any committee thereof by any officer or employee of any department or establishment unless at the request of either House of "SEC. 207. There is hereby created in the Treasury Department a bureau to be known as the bureau of the budget. There shall be in the bureau a director and an assistant director, who shall be appointed by the President and receive salaries of $10,000 and $7,500 a year, respectively. The assistant director shall perform such duties as the director may designate, and during the absence or incapacity of the director or during a vacancy in the office of director he shall act as director. The bureau, under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, shall prepare for him the budget, the alternative budget, and any supplemental or deficiency estimates, and to this end shall have authority to assemble, correlate, revise, reduce, or increase the estimates of the several departments or establishments.

"SEC. 208. (a) The director, under such rules and regula-tions as the President may prescribe, shall appoint and fix the compensation of attorneys and other employees and make ex-penditures for rent in the District of Columbia, printing, binding, telegrams, telephone service, law books, books of reference, periodicals, stationery, furniture, office equipment, other supplies, and necessary expenses of the office, within the appropriations made therefor.

"(b) No person appointed by the director shall be paid a salary at a rate in excess of $6,000 a year, and not more than four persons so appointed shall be paid a salary at a rate in excess of $5,000 a year.

(c) All employees in the bureau whose compensation is at a rate of $5,000 a year or less shall be appointed in accordance with the civil service laws and regulations.

"(d) The provisions of law prohibiting the transfer of employees of executive departments and independent establishments until after service of three years shall not apply during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1921, and June 30, 1922, to the transfer of employees to the bureau.

"(e) The bureau shall not be construed to be a bureau or office created since January 1, 1916, so as to deprive employees therein of the additional compensation allowed civilian employees under the provisions of section 6 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1921, and June 30, 1922, if otherwise entitled

"SEC. 209. The bureau, when directed by the President, shall make a detailed study of the departments and establishments for the purpose of enabling the President to determine what changes (with a view of securing greater economy and efficiency in the conduct of the public service) should be made in (1) the existing organization, activities, and methods of business of such departments or establishments, (2) the appropriations therefor, (3) the assignment of particular activities to particular services, or (4) the regrouping of services. The results of such study shall be embodied in a report or reports to the President, who may transmit to Congress such report or reports or any part thereof with his recommendations on the matters covered thereby.

"Sec. 210. The bureau shall prepare for the President a codification of all laws or parts of laws relating to the preparation and transmission to Congress of statements of receipts and expenditures of the Government and of estimates of appropriations. The President shall transmit the same to Congress on or before the first Monday in December, 1921, with a recommendation as to the changes which, in his opinion, should be made in such laws or parts of laws.

"Sec. 211. The powers and duties relating to the compiling of estimates now conferred and imposed upon the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury are transferred to the bureau.

212. The bureau shall, at the request of any committee of either House of Congress having jurisdiction over revenue or appropriations, furnish the committee such aid and information as it may request.

SEC. 213. Under such regulations as the President may prescribe, (1) every department and establishment shall furnish to the bureau such information as the bureau may from time to time require, and (2) the director and the assistant director, or any employee of the bureau when duly authorized shall, for the purpose of securing such information, have access to, and the right to examine, any books, documents, papers, or records of any such department or establishment.

"SEC. 214. (a) The head of each department and establishment shall designate an official thereof as budget officer therefor, who, in each year under his direction and on or before a date fixed by him, shall prepare the departmental estimates.

"(b) Such budget officer shall also prepare, under the direction of the head of the department or establishment, such supplemental and deficiency estimates as may be required for its

"SEC. 215. The head of each department and establishment shall revise the departmental estimates and submit them to the bureau on or before September 15 of each year. In case of his failure so to do the President shall cause to be prepared such estimates and data as are necessary to enable him to include in the budget estimates and statements in respect to the work of such department or establishment.

"SEC. 216. The departmental estimates and any supplemental or deficiency estimates submitted to the bureau by the head of any department or establishment shall be prepared and submitted in such form, manner, and detail as the President may prescribe.

SEC. 217. For expenses of the establishment and maintenance of the bureau there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $225,000, to continue available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

" TITLE III .- GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE.

"SEC. 301. There is created an establishment of the Government to be known as the general accounting office, which shall be independent of the executive departments and under the control and direction of the comptroller general of the United The offices of Comptroller of the Treasury and Assistant Comptroller of the Treasury are abolished, to take effect July 1, 1921. All other officers and employees of the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury shall become officers and emthe Comptroller of the Treasury shall become omcers and employees in the general accounting office at their grades and salaries on July 1, 1921, and all books, records, documents, papers, furniture, office equipment, and other property of the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury shall become the property of the general accounting office. The comptroller general is authorized to adopt a seal for the general accounting

"SEC. 302. There shall be in the general accounting office a comptroller general of the United States and an assistant comptroller general of the United States, who shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive salaries of $10,000 and $7,500 a year, respectively. The assistant comptroller general shall perform such duties as may be assigned to him by the comptroller general, and during the absence or incapacity of the comptroller general, or during a vacancy in that office, shall act as comptroller general.

SEC. 303. Except as hereinafter provided in this section, the comptroller general and the assistant comptroller general shall hold office for 15 years. The comptroller general shall not be eligible for reappointment. The comptroller general or the assistant comptroller general may be removed at any time by joint resolution of Congress after notice and hearing, when, in the judgment of Congress, the comptroller general or assistant comptroller general has become permanently incapacitated or has been inefficient, or guilty of neglect of duty, or of malfeasance in office, or of any felony or conduct involving moral turpitude, and for no other cause and in no other manner except by impeachment. Any comptroller general or assistant comptroller general removed in the manner herein provided shall be ineligible for reappointment to that office. When a comptroller general or assistant comptroller general attains the age of 70 years he shall be retired from his office.

SEC. 304. All powers and duties now conferred or imposed by law upon the Comptroller of the Treasury or the six auditors of the Treasury Department, and the duties of the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury relating to keeping the personal ledger accounts of disbursing and collecting officers, shall, so far as not inconsistent with this act, be vested in and imposed upon the general accounting office and be exercised without direction from any other officer. The balances certified by the comptroller general shall be final and conclusive upon the executive branch of the Government. The revision by the comptroller general of set-tlements made by the six auditors shall be discontinued, except as to settlements made before July 1, 1921.

"The administrative examination of the accounts and vouchers of the Postal Service now imposed by law upon the Auditor for the Post Office Department shall be performed on and after July 1, 1921, by a bureau in the Post Office Department to be known as the bureau of accounts, which is hereby established for that purpose. The bureau of accounts shall be under the direction of a comptroller, who shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year. The comptroller shall perform the administrative duties now performed by the Auditor for the Post Office Department and such other duties in relation thereto as the Postmaster General may direct. SEC. 309. The comptroller general shall prescribe the forms, systems, and procedure for administrative appropriation and fund accounting in the several departments and establishments, and for the administrative examination of fiscal officers' accounts and claims against the United States.

"SEC. 310. The offices of the six auditors shall be abolished, to take effect July 1, 1921. All other officers and employees of these offices except as otherwise provided herein shall become officers and employees in the general accounting office at their grades and salaries on July 1, 1921. All books, records, documents, papers, furniture, office equipment, and other property of these offices, and of the Division of Bookkeeping and War-rants, so far as they relate to the work of such division transferred by section 304, shall become the property of the general accounting office. The general accounting office shall occupy temporarily the rooms now occupied by the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury and the six auditors.

"SEC. 311. (a) The comptroller general shall appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such attorneys and other employees in the general accounting office as may from time to time be provided for by law.

"(b) All such appointments, except to positions carrying a salary at a rate of more than $5,000 a year, shall be made in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations.

(c) No person appointed by the comptroller general shall be paid a salary at a rate of more than $6,000 a year, and not more than four persons shall be paid a salary at a rate of more than $5,000 a year.

(d) All officers and employees of the general accounting office, whether transferred thereto or appointed by the comptroller general, shall perform such duties as may be assigned to them by him.

(e) All official acts performed by such officers or employees specially designated therefor by the comptroller general shall have the same force and effect as though performed by the comptroller general in person.

"(f) The comptroller general shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying on the work of the general accounting office, including rules and regulations concerning the admission of attorneys to practice before such office.

"SEC. 312. (a) The comptroller general shall investigate, at the seat of government or elsewhere, all matters relating to the receipt, disbursement, and application of public funds, and shall make to the President when requested by him, and to Congress at the beginning of each regular session, a report in writing of the work of the general accounting office, containing recommendations concerning the legislation he may deem necessary to facilitate the prompt and accurate rendition and settlement of accounts and concerning such other matters relating to the receipt, disbursement, and application of public funds as he may think advisable. In such regular report, or in special reports at any time when Congress is in session, he shall make recommendations looking to greater economy or efficiency in public expenditures.

"(b) He shall make such investigations and reports as shall be ordered by either House of Congress or by any committee of either House having jurisdiction over revenue, appropria-tions, or expenditures. The comptroller general shall also, at the request of any such committee, direct assistants from his office to furnish the committee such aid and information as it may request.

"(c) The comptroller general shall specially report to Congress every expenditure or contract made by any department or establishment in any year in violation of law.

"(d) He shall submit to Congress reports upon the adequacy and effectiveness of the administrative examination of accounts and claims in the respective departments and establishments and upon the adequacy and effectiveness of departmental inspection of the offices and accounts of fiscal officers. # To the SENATE:

I transmit herewith, to receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, a treaty signed on October 20, 1920, between the United States and China, confirming the application of a 5 per cent ad valorem rate of duty to importations of goods into China by citizens of the United States.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE House, December 11, 1920.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Acting Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate, to receive the advice and consent of that body to its ratification, a treaty signed on October 20, 1920, between the United States and China, confirming the application of a 5 per cent ad valorem rate of duty to importations of goods into China by citizens of the United States.

Respectfully submitted.

NORMAN H. DAVIS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 8, 1920.

TREATY BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND CHINA

Whereas it was agreed by Article VI (e), 1, and 3, of the final protocol entered into between the powers and China, concluded at Peking September 7, 1901, that the import tariff on goods imported into China by sea should be an effective 5 per cent ad valorem;

And whereas following the conclusion of said protocol and pursuant to the provisions of the first paragraph of Article XI thereof, a treaty regarding commercial relations between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of China was concluded at Shanghai on the 8th day of October, 1903, ratifications of which were duly exchanged on the 13th day of January, 1904;

And whereas by Article V and Annex III of the said treaty it was agreed that the tariff of duties to be paid by the citizens of the United States of America on goods imported into China should be as set forth in the schedule annexed to and made a part of that treaty as Annex III thereof, subject only to such amendments and changes as were authorized by Article IV of that treaty or as might thereafter be agreed upon by the high contracting parties, and that the citizens of the United States of America should at no time pay other or higher duties on goods imported into China than those paid by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation;

And whereas a commission composed of delegates of the Governments of the United States of America and certain other powers having treaties with China regarding the duties to be paid by their citizens or subjects on imports into China, and delegates of the Republic of China has, at various conferences held at Shanghai between the 17th day of January, 1918, and the 20th day of December, 1918, agreed upon a proposed revision of the import tariff of China to the end that the rate of duty may be an effective 5 per cent ad valorem on all foreign merchandise imported into China; And whereas the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Republic of China desire to confirm the application of the proposed revised tariff of duties to importations of goods into China by citizens of the United States, the two Governments have determined to conclude this supplementary treaty, and have appointed for that purpose as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America; Mr. Bainbridge Colby, Secretary of State of the United States; and

The President of the Republic of China; Mr. Vi Kyuin Wellington Koo, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the Republic of China at Washington;

Who, having met and duly exhibited to each other their full powers, which were found to be in proper form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

The tariff of duties which, under the provisions of Article V of the treaty regarding commercial relations signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and China at Shanghai on the 8th day of October, 1903, are annexed to and made a part of that treaty, as Annex III thereof, shall, beginning with the date of the exchange of ratifications of the present treaty, cease to apply to goods imported into China by citizens of the United States of America.

The rules attached to the schedule of duties annexed to the treaty regarding commercial relations signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and China at Shanghai on the 8th day of October, 1903, are amended as agreed upon by the high contracting parties, and as so amended are hereunto annexed and continued in full force and effect.

ARTICLE II.

The tariff of duties and the rules hereunto annexed shall, beginning with the date of the exchange of ratifications of the present treaty, be in full force and effect at the ports and places of China open to commerce with foreign countries, and, beginning with the date of the exchange of ratifications, the said duties shall be paid by citizens of the United States of America on goods imported into China, until modified or changed by agreement between the two high contracting parties; but the citizens of the United States of America shall at no time be required to pay other or higher duties on goods imported into China than are paid by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation.

ARTICLE III.

Except as provided in Articles I and II of the present treaty, the articles and provisions of the treaty signed at Shanghai October 8, 1903, between the plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and China, shall continue in full force and effect, and the articles and provisions of the present treaty shall be read and construed as a supplementary treaty therete, and shall be as binding and of the same efficacy as if they had been inserted therein.

ARTICLE IV.

In the event of there being any difference of meaning between the English and Chinese texts of the present treaty, the English text shall be held to be the correct one.

This treaty and the tariff of duties and rules hereunto annexed shall be ratified by the two high contracting parties in conformity with their respective constitutions, and the ratifica-tions shall be exchanged at Washington.

In testimony whereof the plenipotentiaries of the two high contracting parties, by virtue of their respective powers, have signed this treaty in duplicate in the English and Chinese languages and have officed their respective.

guages, and have affixed their respective seals.

Done at Washington this twentieth day of October, in the year one thousand nine hundred and twenty, corresponding to the twentieth day of the tenth month of the ninth year of the Republic of China.

ANNEX II.

RULES.

RULE I. Imports unenumerated in this tariff will pay duty at the rate of 5 per cent ad valorem, and the value upon which duty is to be calculated shall be the wholesale market value of the goods in local currency. This market value when converted into haikwan taels shall be considered to be 12 per cent higher than the amount upon which duty is to be calculated.

If the goods have been sold before presentation to the customs of the application to pay duty, the gross amount of the bona fide contract will be accepted as evidence of the market value. Should the goods have been sold on c. f. and i. terms-that is to say, without inclusion in the price of duty and other chargessuch c. f. and i. price shall be taken as the value for dutypaying purposes without the deduction mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

If the goods have not been sold before presentation to the customs of the application to pay duty and should a dispute arise between customs and importer regarding the value of classification of goods, the case will be referred to a board of arbitration composed as follows: An official of the customs; a merchant selected by the consul of the importer; and a merchant, differing in nationality from the importer, selected by the senior counsel.

Questions regarding procedure, etc., which may arise during the sittings of the board shall be decided by the majority. The final finding of the majority of the board, which must be announced within 15 days of the reference (not including holidays), will be binding upon both parties. Each of the two merchants on the board will be entitled to a fee of 10 haikwan taels. Should the board sustain the customs valuation, or, in the event of not sustaining that valuation, should it decide that the goods have been undervalued by the importer to the extent of not less than 72 per cent, the importer will pay the fees; if otherwise, the fees will be paid by the customs. Should the board decide that the correct value of the goods is 20 per cent (or more) higher than that upon which the importer originally claimed to pay duty, the customs authorities may retain possession of the goods until full duty has been paid and may levy an additional duty equal to four times the duty sought to be evaded.

In all cases invoices, when available, must be produced if required by the customs.

Rule II. The following will not be liable to import duty: Foreign rice, cereals, and flour; gold and silver, both bullion and coin; printed books, charts, maps, periodicals, and newspapers.

A freight or part freight of duty-free commodities (gold and silver bullion and foreign coins excepted) will render the vessel carrying them, though no other cargo be on board, liable to tonnage dnes.

Drawbacks will be issued for ships' stores and bunker coal when taken on board.

RULE III. Except at the requisition of the Chinese Government, or for sale to Chinese duly authorized to purchase them, import trade is prohibited in all arms, ammunition, and muni-tions of war of every description. No permit to land them will be issued until the customs have proof that the necessary authority has been given to the importer. Infraction of this rule will be punishable by confiscation of all the goods con-cerned. The import of salt is absolutely prohibited.

RULE IV. The importation of opium and poppy seeds is absolutely prohibited. The importation of the following articles is prohibited except under bond by qualified medical practi-tioners, druggists, and chemists: Morphia and cocaine and hypodermic syringes; antiopium pills containing morphia, opium or cocaine, novocaine, stovaine, heroin, thebaine, ghanja, hashish, bhang, Cannabis indica, tincture of opium, laudanum, codeine, dionin, and all other derivatives of opium and cocaine.

INTERNATIONAL SANITARY CONVENTION.

In executive session this day the following resolution denunciatory of the international sanitary convention, signed at Paris, December 3, 1903, was adopted; and

On motion of Mr. Lodge, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom and from the papers accompanying the same:

Whereas the President, under date of May 17, 1920, transmitted a message to the Senate with a view to receiving the advice and consent thereof to the denunciation of the international sanitary convention signed at Paris December 3, 1903, and proclaimed May 18, 1907: Be it

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring), That the Senate advise and consent to the denunciation of the said international sanitary convention, in conformity with the reservation with respect to denunciation contained in the process verbal of the deposit of ratifications thereof, with regard to the powers which are not parties to the international sanitary convention, signed at Paris, January 17, 1912, and proclaimed December 11, 1920.

To the SENATE:

With the view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to the action desired, I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, with an accompanying letter from the Secretary of the Treasury recommending that the international sanitary convention, signed at Paris on December 3, 1903, be denounced on the part of the United States for the reason that its provisions are inimical to the interests of the United States and because of the failure of the signatory Government to observe at least one of the convention's important stipulations.

WOODROW WILSON.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, w'h the view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to the action desired, a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury recommending that the international sanitary convention, signed at Paris on December 3, 1903, be denounced on the part of the United States for the reasons stated by him.

While the convention itself makes no provision for denunciation, the right to denounce it is reserved by the signatory Government in the process verbal of the deposit of ratifications.

Respectfully submitted.

BAINBRIDGE COLBY.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE Washington, May 17, 1920. TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 12, 1920.

The SECRETARY OF STATE, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to recommend, if it meets your approval, that action be inaugurated to denounce the international sanitary convention signed at Paris December 3, 1903, ratified by the Senate March 1, 1905, and proclaimed May 18, 1907.

Subsequent to the signing of the referred-to convention at Paris, investigation into the factors involved in causing the dissemination of plague, cholera, and yellow fever made it evident that there were various features in that treaty that were wholly inadequate, and, furthermore, their application would not satisfactorily protect the ports of the United States against the introduction of such diseases from abroad. In view of these later developments of a sanitary nature, a new convention was drafted, containing modifications of the provisions of the sanitary convention signed at Paris on December 3, 1903, and was signed by the representatives of the various countries at Paris on January 17, 1912. This later convention was ratified by the United States Senate on February 19, 1913. It was assumed at the time that the various other nations that were party to the formation of this treaty would later ratify it, but in some instances this has not been done, the referred-to nations, particularly Italy, preferring that the sanitary convention signed at Paris in 1903 should still remain in force.

In view of the more modern conception on sanitary subjects, it is believed that the provisions of the sanitary convention of Paris of 1903 are distinctly inimical to the interest of this country, and steps should be taken to nullify that treaty. As a matter of fact, the actual operation of the sanitary convention of Paris of 1903 never proved to be of any advantage to the United States, and has on several occasions been utilized to the disadvantage of this Government. For instance, article 1 of that treaty provides that-each Government shall immediately notify the other Governments of the first appearance in its territory of authentic cases of plague or choiera. * * * The notification and particulars contemplated in articles 1 and 2 shall be sent to the diplomatic or consular offices in the capital of the infected country.

In so far as the records of the Public Health Bureau indicate, none of the countries signatory to the convention have complied with this obligation. On various occasions the local health authorities at some of the English ports have notified the consular officers of the occurrence of plague in the respective ports, but apparently even this method of conveying the information has not been observed in the continental countries of Europe. In 1911 there was a very severe epidemic of cholera throughout Italy, and several ports of that country have from time to time been infected with plague. There is no record that the Italian Government has ever made this information public, and this notwithstanding the fact that vessels arriving at ports of the United States in 1911 were repeatedly found to have cases of cholera on board.

The reservation made by this Government in the international sanitary convention made public February 26, 1913, made it possible for this Government to act for the prevention of the introduction of disease when reliable information is had of the occurrence of quarantinable diseases in foreign countries, and in this wise this country's interest does not suffer by reason of the nonnotification of such diseases by other countries. The department is of the opinion, in view of the foregoing, that it is infinitely better to have no international sanitary convention than to continue to abide by the terms of the Paris convention of 1903.

During the conference of the international office of public health in Paris, October, 1919, Dr. Cumming, the representative from this country, in introducing certain changes desired in the convention of January 17, 1912, explained the reasons for the reservations made by this Government in ratifying this convention, as a result of which a resolution was passed unanimously that the representatives of signatory powers advise the respective Governments (which include Great Britain and Italy) to ratify the convention of 1912. Until such ratification shall have been made the convention of 1903 appears to be binding upon this country, and in view of present conditions in Europe imposes upon this Government restrictions which the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service considers dangerous and which prevent the enforcement of measures necessary for the prevention of the introduction of diseases from abroad.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 26, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon. The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, we stand in silence. Again the light has broken from Thy throne, and behind it is infinite wisdom and beneath it is infinite love. What shall we render unto the Lord for all his benefits unto us? An honest and a contrite spirit Thou wilt not turn aside. Break through the altars of our hearts and hold them captives in the meshes of Thy love. Enrich them with the deepest joys of life, and may they know the strength of tender power. Regard our infirmities in tender compassion, and as the days ebb and flow, with their incessant calls, hold Thou our hands, that we may give Thee acceptable service. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PERRY'S VICTORY MEMORIAL COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the first annual report of the Perry's Victory Memorial Commission, dated December 6, 1920, which was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior, pursuant to section 5 of the act entitled "An act creating a commission for the maintenance, control, care, etc., of the Perry's Victory Memorial on Put in Bay Island, Lake Erie, Ohio, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1919 (40 Stat., 1322-1324).

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 25, 1921.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned last evening the previous question had been ordered on the deficiency bill, and a separate vote has been demanded on certain amendments. The Clerk will report the first amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

Amendment offered by Mr. Good: Page 34, after line 4, insert:

"Maintenance. Bureau of Supplies and Accounts: The limitation specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921 on expenditures for pay of chemists and for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in the supply and accounting department of the navy yards and naval stations and disbursing offices for the fiscal year 1921 is further increased by $400,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Before the House adjourned there had been a division on this amendment, had there not?

The SPEAKER. There was a division, but no result. Mr. BLANTON. Then, if the House should find itself without a quorum now, it would automatically be a vote on that amendment, would it not? There had been a division.

Mr. WALSH. And an adjournment.

Mr. WINGO. You would have to restate the question.

The SPEAKER. The reason why there would be an automatic call is that there was no quorum at the time. It would not follow that there was no quorum now. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division. Mr. BLANTON. A division, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 29. Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point that there is no quorum present. It is clear that there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. As many as are in favor of agreeing to the amendment will, when their names are called, vote "yea"; those opposed will vote "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 194, nays 157, answered "present" 1, not voting 78, as follows:

Mr. GOOD. On that I demand the year and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 308, nays 27, not voting 95, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. Perkins (for) with Mr. Driver (against).
Mr. Chandler of New York (for) with Mr. Bankhead (against)

Until further notice:

Mr. FRENCH with Mr. DEAL.

Mr. French with Mr. Deal.

Mr. Moores of Indiaha with Mr. Dupré.

Mr. Towner with Mr. Montague.

Mr. Wurzbach with Mr. Sears.

Mr. Dunbar with Mr. Johnson of Kentucky.

Mr. Rossdale with Mr. Lea of California.

Mr. Kreider with Mr. Sumners of Texas.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall and listenge when his name should have been called?

ing when his name should have been called?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I was not. The SPEAKER. Under the rule the gentleman can not be permitted to vote.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, would I be permitted to vote "present"? I was not in the Hall during the roll call. The SPEAKER. No; there is no provision for that.

The result was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. Good, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SPEECHES OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the President of the United States delivered some very eloquent speeches in the city of New York. I feel that those speeches are worthy of being spread broadcast throughout the country and of being made a permanent part of the RECORD. I therefore ask unanimous consent that these speeches may be inserted in the Congres-SIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the speeches of the President of the United States to which he refers. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman taken into consideration that these speeches will be quite an embarrassment to his colleague after the vote this morning?

Mr. HICKS. The record made and being made by this administration will not embarrass anyone who has the interest of the American people at heart.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow, Friday, it adjourn until Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn until Tuesday next. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there to be another baseball series?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Why, Monday is Memorial

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas does not know that Monday is Memorial Day. Let us inform him of that fact. [Laughter.] The only thing that he has in mind is baseball. He does not think of those who died in war.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would state to my distinguished friend from Illinois that we are adjourning, as we have been doing ever since this Congress met, over Saturday, which is not Memorial Day and which should be a work day for this Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BARKLEY. Reserving the right to object, what is it planned to take up next Tuesday?

Mr. MONDELL. I am inclined to the opinion that we will not have completed the packer bill, which we are about to take up, by that time; but following that will come, among other things, the conference report on the budget bill and the bill for the consolidation of activities for the benefit of ex-service men, and those measures will follow next week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PACKER LEGISLATION.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, livestock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes. Pending that motion, if I may have the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Jaco-WAY], I would inquire if an agreement can be made as to time to be allotted for general debate?

Mr. JACOWAY. I would state that from the requests that have come to me for time I think we ought to devote at least the entire day to general debate. I have requests for something over two hours on this side, and several Members on the Re-publican side have requested time, if they can not get it from the gentleman from Iowa. It occurs to me that the entire day should be consumed in general debate.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It occurs to me that a very good arrangement would be not to limit debate, but to fix the control of the time in the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HAUGEN. Can we not agree upon closing debate at a certain time, allowing liberal time for general debate?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will it be agreeable to the gentleman from Arkansas that the time be controlled for general debate by the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. JACOWAY. Entirely so. Probably the better plan would be to not limit the debate.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, may I ask if the gentleman from Arkansas is opposed to the bill?

Mr. JACOWAY. I am not.

Mr. LUCE. I shall ask recognition in opposition to the bill. Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. And so shall I. It seems to me that somebody opposed to the bill should be named as having control of half of the time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, is there a request pending? The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa has not yet stated his request.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate continue during the day, and that the time be equally divided between the gentleman from Arkansas and

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be divided, half to be controlled by himself and half to be controlled by the gentleman from Arkansas. Is there objection?

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can any arrangement be made by which time can be definitely allotted to those who are opposed to the bill?

Mr. HAUGEN. So far as the time is controlled by myself, it will be divided equally between those for and those against

Mr. JACOWAY. I do not think there will be any question about the gentleman from Massachusetts getting ample time to make the observations he desires to make on the bill.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the person to control half the time should be opposed to the bill, so that there can be real leadership if there is opposition to the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, the regular order would be for the House to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and then whoever is recognized will have an hour. It has always been customary to arrange the time. Probably gentlemen opposed to the bill—and I am in that class—will have a better opportunity by agreeing to a control of the time. It is in the interest of expedition. I think it might be well to permit the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Arkansas to control the time.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas has demanded the regular order.

Mr. JACOWAY. I withhold that for a moment. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. POU. Would not the gentleman from Arkansas be willing to divide the time as nearly as possible equally between those opposed to the bill and those favoring the bill?

Mr. JACOWAY. Certainly. That is only fair. I think there will be no doubt about the gentleman from Massachusetts getting what time he wants, Mr. POU. There are others.

Mr. JACOWAY. I know; for that matter, anybody else.

Several Members. Regular order!

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there anybody on the committee opposed to the bill?

Mr. JACOWAY. I can not answer that question. Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman from Iowa know?

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not know of anybody. Mr. ASWELL. The report of the committee is unanimous.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, in view of the arrangements made by the gentleman in charge of the bill, I withdraw any objec-

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. It is agreed the gentleman from Iowa shall control half the time and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JACOWAY] the other half.

Mr. JACOWAY. Just a question, how many hours of debate are there to be?

The SPEAKER. There has been no limit fixed.

Mr. JACOWAY. That is what I understood.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6320.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6320, with Mr. Towner in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole

House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, H. R. 6320, the bill to regulate the packing industry, which I have had the privilege of introducing and reporting favorably to the House, comes to you by a unanimous vote of the Committee on Agriculture. This bill proposes to give the Secretary of Agriculture complete inquisitorial, visitorial, supervisory, and regulatory power over the packers, stockyards, and all activities connected therewith.

The legislation proposed in this bill is not a new proposition. For more than a quarter of a century the subject of packers and packer legislation has been given much thought and consideration. It has been discussed in Congress, in the courts, on the stump, and, in fact, in nearly every home. Many believe that the spread in the price between the producer and the consumer is much wider than it should be; that the packers are in a large degree responsible for the wide spread; that there is something wrong with the meat-packing industry; and, for these and various other reasons, the packers should be brought under Government regulation and supervision. Right or wrong, the discussion and agitation has gone on, much to the embarrassment, expense, and inconvenience of many, to the innocent as well as to the guilty, until it seems to be generally conceded that the matter of legislation should be defi-nitely and finally disposed of. It has been so indicated, at least, by the representatives of the various organizations who have appeared before the committee.

Various committees and subcommittees of the two Houses have spent much time on the subject and have held hearings, covered in thousands of pages of printed testimony. The Committee on Agriculture of the House held 40 days of hearings last Congress and 1 week of hearings this Congress on meat-packing legislation, covered in more than thirty-five hundred pages of printed testimony. Representatives of the National Consumers' League, the National League of Women Voters, the Committee of Seventeen, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Board of Farm Organization, the Farmers' National Council, the National Grange, the American Society of Equity, the Order of Railroad Conductors, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and many other organizations, as well as producers, shippers, and dealers in live stock, appeared before the committee and urged, in the strongest terms, prompt and favorable action.

As a result the committee authorized me to submit House bill 6320 for your consideration and determination. This bill is somewhat different from the bill which I reported to the House last session of Congress as a substitute for the Senate bill, which passed the Senate in the Sixty-sixth Congress, in that the proposed bill places the jurisdiction over the stockyards in the Secretary of Agriculture instead of in the Interstate Commerce Commission, as was provided in the substitute. In view of the fact that the Department of Agriculture now has, and has had for a long time, a large number of persons employed in the stockyards; that it has attained splendid results in correcting certain abuses and practices in the stockyards; and that, under existing laws, it has funds and power to gather, promulgate, and diffuse certain informa-tion by telegraph, mail, or otherwise, as, for instance, information relating to the demand, supply, consumption, cost, price, and distribution of live stock and other farm products, it seemed to the committee, after giving the matter further consideration, that in the interest of economy and expediency the Secretary should be given exclusive jurisdiction over the stockyards, as well as the packers, rather than to set up dual power and machinery. Hence, it is proposed that the additional power to be granted over the stockyards shall be vested in the Secretary of Agriculture instead of the Interstate Commerce Commission as was provided in the substitute.

The bill has been prepared with care and painstaking, with a view not to hamper, discourage, or destroy, but to encourage, protect, and build up worthy and legitimate enterprises and activities in connection with the great packing industry. In other words, to supervise and regulate, and thus safeguard the interests of the public and all elements of the packing industry from the producer to the consumer without destroying any unit in it.

It is proposed to give the Secretary of Agriculture jurisdiction over the packers, stockyards, commission men, traders, buyers, and sellers, and all activities connected with the slaughtering and marketing of live stock and live-stock products in interstate commerce; that is, the Secretary shall have jurisdiction from the time the live stock is unloaded at the terminal yards and after it is out of the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Up to the time of unloading the live stock the Interstate Commerce Commission has jurisdiction over the shipment, distribution, and ownership of stock, refrigerator cars, and other equipment, and transportation rates, including belt lines and terminal roads. Hence, it is proposed that the Secretary's jurisdiction shall begin where the Interstate Commerce Commission's jurisdiction ends; or, in other words, the Interstate Commerce Commission is to continue its exclusive jurisdiction over transportation rates and compelling the carriers to furnish refrigerator and stock cars, and so forth, and the Secretary is to have exclusive jurisdiction over all transactions connected with the slaughtering and marketing of live stock and live-stock products in interstate commerce, subject, of course, to court review; to gather and compel information concerning and to investigate the organization, conduct, practices, and management of the packers and stockyards, including all transactions in or about the stockyards by all concerns or persons dealing on such yards.

Under the bill and existing laws the Secretary will have power to require reports, answers, under oath or otherwise, as often as he may deem necessary as to such matters

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield to enable me to ask him a question there? The gentleman knows more about this bill than any other Member, I take it, being the chairman of the committee. Suppose a charge should be filed against a corporation or an individual that they were violating this law; would the Secretary of Agriculture cite that body or that corporation to appear in Washington to answer the charge or would the hearing be held where the violation of the law had originated?

Mr. HAUGEN. I take it it would be-

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I am not asking the gentleman what he would take it, but what does the bill say?

Mr. HAUGEN. The usual practice would be pursued.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. That he would have to come

Mr. HAUGEN. Oh, no; arrangements could be made to hear them there. If there was an abuse, or unfair practice, for instance, in the stockyards in Chicago, a representative of the department could investigate and conduct the hearing there in the Chicago stockyards.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I do not know how I am going to vote on this bill, but if a party should be required to come here to Washington to answer these charges-however, I will wait until the gentleman gets his eyes and also turns his ears toward me.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I can say to the gentleman the bill says in plain language that the Secretary will conduct hearings in Washington and elsewhere.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. To whom would be delegate the authority to hold hearings elsewhere?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. To anyone in his department, in view of this provision.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Would he have authority to administer oaths and take the affidavits of those parties?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Does your bill provide that?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Certainly.

Mr. HAUGEN. As I have stated, under the proposed law and under the existing laws the Secretary will have power to require reports and answers under oath or otherwise as often as he may deem necessary concerning the matter

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I appreciate that. But I want to ask this question: Will the party designated to take this testimony or make this investigation in Louisiana or Texas of a charge that some company is violating the law have authority to administer oaths and take an affidavit from these other people?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; if delegated by the Secretary. Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Does this provide that? Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; besides, there are provisions in other acts made applicable that authorize that. The Secretary in enforcing this act will also be given powers possessed by the Federal Trade Commission under sections 6, 8, 9, and 10 of the Federal Trade Commission act.

Mr. MILLS. I did not quite get the answer. Does the gentleman say that this bill contains authority to the Secretary to delegate that authority to hold hearings?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. That is the question I want to ask.

Mr. MILLS. That this bill does?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; both under existing laws and the provisions of this bill he will have the power to delegate authority to hold hearings elsewhere. If the gentleman will examine sections 6, 8, 9, and 10 of the Federal Trade Commission act, which sections are made applicable to the jurisdiction, power, and duties of the Secretary in enforcing this act, he will find that the Secretary will be given the power to do the various things which I shall proceed to enumerate. We provide for the same procedure as provided in other acts.

Mr. MILLS. May I ask the gentleman further, then, if the Federal Trade Commission has not a good many of the powers which you here are granting to the Secretary? It has the power of investigation, which you are transferring from the Federal Trade Commission to the Secretary c. Agriculture, but that particular section does not cover all of the delegations of power and authority which would be involved in holding hearings and making a decision. I do not find that in this bill anywhere.

Mr. HAUGEN. We provide for the same procedure as provided in other acts.

Mr. MILLS. I do not find in this bill anywhere specific authority granted to the Secretary to delegate to anyone the right to hold hearings or make decisions.

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly that is provided.

Mr. MILLS. I shall be glad to have that pointed out. Mr. ROSE. If the gentleman will refer to section 203, lines 17 to 20, inclusive, on page 6. I think he will find that it meets his objection.

Mr. LOGAN. Why is it under section 202 you provide a method of appeal from the court of appeals and then by writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court, when you are dealing with the packers, and when you get to the stockyards you provide the Secretary's orders shall take effect in five days unless suspended by the court?

Mr. HAUGEN. One carries a criminal penalty and the other only a fine.

Mr. LOGAN. The Secretary has the full hearing in the matter.

Mr. HAUGEN. The Secretary may apply for an injunction in the case of the packer, restraining him from violating the order.

Mr. LOGAN. As to the packers, by giving no appeal, and so forth, a man might suffer great hardship under that

Mr. HAUGEN. The packer does have full right of appeal. The procedure is this: After the Secretary has made an order requiring the packer to cease and desist from violating the law the packer may appeal to the circuit court of appeals. If he does not appeal within 30 days, a violation of the order, after such 30 days, is punishable by a fine or imprisonment.

If appeal is taken, there is no criminal penalty except for violations of the order taking place after the circuit court of appeals has affirmed the order. The packer is given the right to apply to the Supreme Court within 60 days for a writ of certiorari. If the case is taken to the Supreme Court, there is no criminal penalty except for a violation occurring after the Supreme Court has affirmed the order. But if the packer fails to apply for the writ within 60 days, the criminal penalty attaches to all violations of the order occurring after the expiration of such 60 days.

If the packer appeals from the Secretary's order to the circuit court of appeals, the court may, in its discretion, on the request of the Secretary, make a temporary injunction restraining the packer from disobeying the order pending the disposition of the case by the court. If the court affirms the order, its decree operates as an injunction against violation of the order, and if the case is taken to the Supreme Court on writ of certiorari, the allowance of the writ does not operate to stay the injunction unless so ordered by the Supreme Court.

Mr. LOGAN. Why do you not put it the same in each case? Why a difference between the stockyards and the packers?

Mr. HAUGEN. The answer is that if the packer's offense is punishable under existing laws the remedy is with the Department of Justice under existing laws, which nothing in the bill in any way weakens. If the offense is one not punishable by existing law, but is a new offense created by this bill, it is believed that it would be unduly harsh, if not unconstitutional under the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Food Control case, to punish a packer until the courts have had an opportunity to define the elements of the offense. For example, the bill makes it unlawful for any packer to engage in any unfair or deceptive practice in interstate or foreign commerce. Until the court has passed upon whether or not particular acts do, as a matter of law, come within these terms it did not seem to the committee that it would be fair to punish a man for doing any of these acts until the court had passed upon the question.

Mr. LOGAN. Why do you not apply the same thing to the

Mr. HAUGEN. In answer to the gentleman's question why the procedure adopted in the case of the packers is not also made applicable to the stockyards I may say that the method of procedure in the bill as to stockyards exactly follows the procedure now existing in the control by the Interstate Commerce Commission over the railroads, which is that the Secretary, after full hearing, makes an order as to what constitutes a reasonable rate, charge, or practice in connection with trans-actions on the stockyards. Disobedience of the order is punish-able by money penalties and not by imprisonment. No appeal is given from the Secretary's order, but the person guilty of the violation of the order can test its reasonableness in a prosecution for the penalty, or, instead, may apply to the courts for an injunction restraining the enforcement of the Secretary's order.

The reason the committee believed that this procedure was more appropriate in the case of the stockyards than in the case of the packers is that in the latter case the matters to be dealt with are great questions of combinations and monopolies and methods and practices of unfair competition, usually of great magnitude and country wide in their effect; whereas in the case of the stockyards the evils to be dealt with are a multiplicity of more or less minor matters, such as proper rates and charges for the care of cattle at the stockyard and for feed furnished to them and minor injustices against shippers and purchasers, which, if to be remedied effectively, must be deal with promptly. Now, if I may proceed, let me indicate what the bill will do.

The Secretary will be given the power to subpæna; to conduct hearings; to require the production of books, papers, and documentary evidence; to require the attendance of witnesses; to prevent packers and stockyards, and all persons dealing in the stockyards, from engaging in unfair, unjustly discriminatory, or deceptive practice or device; to regulate and prescribe the practices on the stockyards; to prevent abuse; to award damages in redress of any unfair practice or abuse; to regulate and prescribe all rates, fees, and charges for services in stockyards, including the fees of commission men, yardage, feeding, watering, weighing, and handling live stock. The bill provides specifically for cooperation in the marketing of live stock through cooperative associations in the stockyards by permitting them to return to their members on a patronage basis their excess earnings on live stock handled, subject to regulations by the Secretary.

It gives the Secretary complete inquisitorial, visitorial, supervisory, and regulatory power over the packers, stockyards, and all activities connected therewith.

The bill further coordinates the duties of the Secretary of Agriculture so that it prevents overlapping of authority and duplication of jurisdiction of the other departments of the Government having regulatory power which previously existed. The object sought is to preserve and hold on to all the powers granted to regulate and to prevent abuse and unfair practices, or, in other words, not to weaken but to strengthen existing

It provides for ample court review of any of the orders or regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture so as to protect the industry from any mistakes of judgment or unwarranted use of the power thus delegated.

Undoubtedly it is a most far-reaching measure and extends further than any previous law into the regulation of private business, with the exception of the war emergency measures, and possibly the interstate commerce act.

Now, if there are any questions, I shall be glad to answer

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. Certainly.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Referring to the question asked by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Mills] with reference to who shall conduct the hearings, on page 6, section 203 of this bill, subdivision (a) provides that when the Secretary believes the packer has violated some of the provisions of the former section, making certain things unlawful, thereupon the Secretary shall make complaint against him and conduct a hearing. Then section (b) provides that after that hearing, if the Secretary finds that the packer has violated or is violating any of the provisions of that title, he makes a report in writing, stating his findings, and issues, or causes to be served on the packer, an order requiring him to desist, and if that is not appealed from, it is a final order. Now, as I understand the gentleman from New York, he wants to know what the tribunal is. Is it to be the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. HAUGEN. Yes; or such duly authorized agents.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That is a hearing of some kind. I want to know the tribunal.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there? Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will find on page 26 this pro-

The Secretary, in person or by such agents as he may designate, may prosecute any inquiry necessary to his duties under this act in any part of the United States.

Of course, the orders that may be issued in the end will be issued by the Secretary of Agriculture, or in his name, just as the Interstate Commerce Commission conducts practically all of its inquiries through agents of the commission. But the orders are issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission in the name of the Interstate Commerce Commission, although they may act in many cases almost perfunctorily upon the recom-mendations of their agents. I use the term "agents," but that is not the legal definition.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. It occurred to me, because the general language there on page 26 did not make it clear, that it was the purpose to delegate the power to hold these hearings.

Mr. MANN. Of course, maybe I do not understand what this says, but I thought the authority is to designate the agent to prosecute an inquiry or prosecute his duties anywhere in the United States. I thought it was just about as clear as any language could be written.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If I may interrupt a moment, it seems to me the inquiry might be one thing and the hearing a different thing. I find that in the act to regulate commerce the common carrier act-Congress has been very careful to provide against any misunderstanding as to how hearings shall be conducted. I read from the language of the act to regulate commerce:

The commission may appoint examiners, who shall have power to administer oaths, examine witnesses, and take testimony.

The commission in a given case may in advance have made all sorts of inquiries, but when it comes to an inter parte hearing, which the commission itself may not be able to conduct, it may designate an examiner to serve. I think that bears upon the question propounded awhile ago by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Mills]. It seems to me desirable that there should be written into this bill a provision similar to that I have quoted.

Mr. MILLS. May I add, in addition to what the gentleman from Illinois says, that I think it would be very much open to question whether the authority to make inquiries would give authority to examine witnesses, and so on, unless the language especially so provided. I think the language pointed out by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Moore], the language used in the interstate commerce act, is the language used in all of these statutes where authority is delegated to somebody to compel the attendance of witnesses and to administer oaths and to take testimony.

The gentleman from Indiana had better look at Mr. MANN. the act creating the Federal Trade Commission before he criti-

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. It is not so much a matter of criticizing the bill; what I was trying to find out is who was to sit at this hearing, whether it is to be somebody delegated for the purpose, or whether it was meant to be the commission.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 20 minutes. Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed on a subject other than the bill during that time. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has that right.

The CHAIRMAN.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, previous to the 1st of June, 1920, there were eight appropriating committees of this House. On that day a resolution was introduced in the House-a resolution of which Mr. Good, the distinguished and able chairman of the Committee on Apprepriations, had charge-to amend the rules of the House so as to center all of the appropriating powers in one committee.

That question was debated at considerable length. others who debated it was the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], who said, Record, June 1, 1920, bottom of page 8103:

The committee is to be composed of 35 members, so that evidently it will permit subcommittees representing all of the committees which now are appropriation committees.

The purpose expressed in the debate was that the committees should operate jointly and coordinate their work, and there would be not alone a centering of power but that committees whose jurisdiction was taken away would be represented on the Objections were made to the resolution. They may be summarized under two heads: First, the objections of those who said that it was centering too much power in one committee and taking away from the general membership of the House practically all of the work which they had always had to do; and second, that it would be impossible for any committee composed of 35 members to do the work that it would be necessary for them to de under the proposed amendment.

The opposition was centered and represented in a motion to recommit made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Anderson], which, in substance, provided that instead of the change of rules provided by the resolution that was introduced there should be a change of this kind: That a budget committee should be appointed, to consist of three members from each of the seven appropriating committees, the chairman and the ranking majority and minority members; the budget committee as so constituted to have jurisdiction to fix the total amount of the appropriations to be made and also the amount to be allocated to each of the appropriating committees. The resolution to recommit was submitted to the Committee of the Whole and lost by a vote of 200 against to 117 for. A year has passed, during which we have been working under the new rule. We have had an opportunity to observe, first, the plan adopted for carrying out the amendment, and second, the actual operation of the amendment, and from that experience we have an ample foundation on which to build something to increase the efficiency of the budget system and make it more workable for the

Now, first, as I said, it was suggested during the debate on the amendment that members of these several former appropriating committees be made members of the new committee, the object obviously being to coordinate and correlate the work. That was not carried out. Members were taken from these committees, but instead of acting conjointly with the committees from which they were taken, their connection with the old committee was absolutely severed, and they remained members simply of the new committee. So that advantage was entirely

Now let us consider another thing that was foreseen at the time that the committee was formed, but which was not voiced in the debate, and that was this—and I will give a concrete example: During the Great War which has just ended there was no legislative figure who stood higher, who loomed larger, and who will remain longer on the pages of history than the illustrious chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, JULIUS KAHN. [Applause.] It was seen readily that men like Mr. Kahn, who had performed heroic service; men who knew the problems of the various committees from long experience, many of them from service for a score of years; men who were trained and experienced and skilled; men of judgment, would cease giving the House and the Nation the benefit of their accumulated knowledge and long and ripe experience. was foreseen at the time as an objection, and, of course, it proved to be an objection to the successful working of the new

Again, let us consider the details of the working of the rule in the committee. The objection to the several committees was that we had a responsibility divided among seven different committees, and that there would be overlapping, multiplication, and duplication of work, all of which, it was maintained, would be avoided by the new system.

Now let us see what the new system was. Did you have one committee which had charge of all these matters, which considered them all, which viewed them as a whole, which did not lose itself in details-a committee which was able to view the whole field? You have had nothing of the kind. Instead of seven committees, when you come to the working out of the practical details, you had 13 subcommittees, practically twice the number of committees which existed before.

Let us follow that out in its workings and see how it developed. These subcommittees consisted nominally of five mem-As a matter of practice three men made up the bill in most instances. The whole five men rarely sat. I was on the committee, and I know the facts both from experience and from I was on the observation, and I am stating the result of both.

Then when the 13 subcommittees had performed their tasks, when they had completed their work, when they were ready to report their bills, how did the scheme work out in practice as to this general supervisory power which was to cut appropriations, which was to make us more efficient, and which was to result in a general survey, a complete review of the whole field?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. DEMPSEY. Not for a moment, please. It worked out in this way: The subcommittee came to the general committee with a bill in some instances consisting of 60 to 80 printed pages, which the general committee considered from 30 minutes to 4 hours at the outside, which was all the time they had to go over the bill as a whole. Of course, it was utterly impossible in that time even to read the bill. It was utterly impossible in that time to consider single items involving vast sums. It was utterly impossible to take the bill as a whole and compre-In all my experience upon that committee I recollect but one motion to reduce the amounts reported by the subcommittees, and that motion was lost. So I say that this theory that there would be supervision, this anticipated supervision which was the reason and the ground for the change of the rules, disappeared in fact when we tried it out, as we have tried it, for a year.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield at this

Mr. DEMPSEY. In just a moment; when I get through with my statement I will be glad to yield.

Now, let us follow the bill from the committee to the floor of the House and see what resulted there, see whether it worked well, see whether it carried out the favorable prognostication of those who supported it. We found on the floor that two things developed. First, we found that bills appropriating money were so inseparably connected with legislation proper that a bill could not be brought here for the one purpose which did not embrace the other. You could not report an appropriation bill that did not contain numerous legislative provisions.

And what resulted then? Nobody in this House advocated, or will advocate to-day or in the future, that these seven committees be deprived of their legislative powers. Nobody thinks that would be wise. Nobody believes that would be prudent. Nobody believes it would be defensible. And so when bills came in with legislative provisions in them we found this result, that the Committee on Appropriations would report a legislative provision, objection would be raised, and the provision would go out on a point of order. And then what would happen? We would have in many instances a rule brought in and we would set aside the time-honored precedents, we would set aside the well-established rules of the House, in order that we might carry a particular bill in a particular way. In other words, the old evil of disregarding the law on account of the exigencies of a given case was in every instance, where a rule was adopted, the plan of procedure that the House adopted under its new order of affairs.

In some instances the rule was not brought in, and then what resulted? The bill went over to the Senate, the legislative provisions having gone out on a point of order without the House having considered them, without the House knowing what they were, without the House being in any way advised as to whether they should be passed or not-the bill went over to the Senate and these provisions were put in and came back to us on conference reports; and, incomprehensible as it may seem, unbelievable as it is, this House, without having considered them, knowing nothing about any of these provisions, in each and every instance passed them just as they came from the Senate. Those are the two results that followed.

Now, gentlemen, let me pause at this point to say that there was no man in this House more sympathetic toward the establishment and the well working of the budget system than was I. Let me say that when this change in the rules was made, when it was advocated by Mr. Good, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, which gained power and jurisdiction through the change, although I was a member of one of the committees which lost appropriating jurisdiction, I supported the change. In each and every instance since that time I have supported the Committee on Appropriations when it has brought in bills. I have spoken on the floor on various occasions, and always in favor of the committee. I did not believe in obstructing business because of the existence of an unwise rule. I did not believe in collateral attacks upon it. I believe in direct attacks, and I believe only in direct attacks to better and improve-not to tear down and destroy.

And then gentlemen say, "Well, suggest how you will better or improve it, how will you do it, what can be done?" We have found from this review that the present system is inefficient. We have found it unworkable, we have found that it results in endless trouble on the floor in containing legislative provisions which go out on points of order, and in our enacting just what the Senate passes without knowing what it is. Is there some way in which we can preserve the principles of the budget system, in which we can make them work hetter than was possible under the old system or under the substitute Is there some wa; that can be accomplished? The gentleman from Minnesota suggested an outline in the motion to recommit when the amendment to the rule was passed. He suggested that the budget committee be selected and he suggested how it should be selected, and I would add only to his suggestion that it seems to me that on a committee like that of appropriations the chairman of the committee is too busy a man to serve on both committees. It seems also that a member of the Ways and Means Committee should be a member of that committee, because that committee raises the revenue, and that the Speaker and the majority leader should be members.

Let us compare and contrast the two methods. Why is it that the Committee on Appropriations has not been able to exercise a supervisory power? Simply because it is a busy committee and it has not the time. Will your new committee have the time? Yes. Why? Because you will select men who will do the work in such an order-and I am going to indicate the order shortly-that they will naturally have the time. You will select men who can be spared because you can spare one or two men from a committee when you can not take all the members of a busy committee like the Committee on Appropriations and have them spend the time in supervising the work of seven or eight committees. You can take a man from each committee who can devote his time to it. He will not have the work of the Subcommittee on Appropriations which now is pressing and requiring his time in season and out of season. His task will be to take care of the work assigned to him on the budget committee, and he will spend his time on that.

Objection has been made that when you allocate a given sum to a committee that it will appropriate the full sum allocated, and that is the only objection I have heard to the plan. It is not an objection when examined, because the way the allocation would be made is this: The various committees would sit and consider the appropriations they are to distribute, and when their work is completed, having completed the hearings, they will submit the result in the form of a tentative bill through their representatives on the budget committee. budget committee will have before it the budget as prepared by the President under the new budget bill. They will know what the total expenses will be for the next year and what the With the limit to appropriations fixed by the revenue will be. budget, with the budget committee saying we can not spend more than that, the members of the budget committee from the several distributing committees each urge the claims of their committees. Only so much, however, can be spent; and the question is, How shall it be allocated between the different committees?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. DEMPSEY. A representative of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and a representative from the Committee on Agriculture will each be there, having had their full hearings, and they will present what they say is the amount coessary for their committees, and they will know that the final result, the total amount to be expended, is such and such a sum, and in effect each one of these committees will be working to lower the other amounts allocated in order to get as much as they feel is absolutely needed for their own committees. In other words, the members from each committee will be in effect a check upon all other committees, and you need that check. select one Committee on Appropriations any more than another and say that it shall legislate for the whole House as to appropriations? Is there any charm in the name "appropriations" as applied to a committee that makes it better able to deal with appropriations than if the committee had some other name? Not at all. The Committee on Appropriations should have a check on its : ppropriations and that was made clear by the passage of the bill yesterday. Most of us voted for the $400,000 naval appropriation in order to vote with the We learned that the appropriation for clerk hire and expert chemists had mounted from $1,700,000 to $3,500,000, and that the chairman of Naval Affairs believed that this allowance had grown out of all proportion, had become extravagant, and that he was opposed to the removal of the limit of $400,000, and in learning this we learned that the Committee on Appropriations is subject to the same infirmities as other committees. [Applause.] And it will be subject to the same check and to the same control as other committees under a true and real budget committee, such as is proposed.

In conclusion let me say this: I am for a budget system. I voted for it and supported it on every occasion when the question arose in this House. I have been a part of the new system, having been a member of the Appropriations Committee during the last Congress, and I have observed how it works. need to repeat to you how it works because you know the difficulties, first, as to legislation, and next the impossible condition of affairs in having the Senate legislate for us without our even knowing what has gone into the bill. You all know that. You have tried this new rule and you have found it unworkable. You have found that instead of promoting efficiency it has had Why not try a system which exactly the opposite result. promises more, a system which is likely to accomplish the result at which you aim? You will not obtain perfection in any system. It will depend in the end upon the legislation which is helpful-and I honestly believe the budget bill will be extremely helpful-but it will depend still more upon the men in control and upon this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes. Mr. CARTER. No matter what we may do in the House, no matter what precautions we take here, will we ever have a real budget system or any real economy so long as the Senate takes no part in that proposition and places no limitation upon its actions?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I can not answer the question of the gentleman, but I can say in reply that if we do our part, and do it honestly and earnestly, do it according to the best light that we have or can obtain, we will do all that can be expected of us, and we will satisfy the country and our own consciences.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the very simple statement I wish to make will answer inquiries that I have received and similar inquiries that have perhaps been addressed to other Members of the House.

On the 7th of February of this year the House passed a bill authorizing an appropriation of $100,000,000 to further aid the States in the construction of highways. That bill failed of passage in the Senate, and of course did not become a law. There have been several highway bills introduced at this session and referred to the Committee on Roads. One of those bills is the so-called Dowell bill, that provides for continuing the Federal aid plan, and there are other bills that provide for additional appropriations. The Dowell bill includes a very valuable suggestion made by the President in his recent address to Congress, in stressing the importance of not confining action to appropriations for construction, but requiring that the Government shall look after the matter of the maintenance of the highways that are constructed. Those bills have not yet been considered by the committee, but this morning the committee met and arranged for a full hearing, which is to begin next Saturday. The prospect, therefore, is that there will at no distant day be brought before the House measures that will support the policy of Federal aid to the States for the construction and maintenance of roads, and also carrying appropriations in addition to the appropriations heretofore made that total $275,000,000. So there is ground for believing that before this extra session ends further satisfactory legislation will be passed by the House, and for hoping that it may receive the approval of the Senate and assurance given the country that there is not going to be any backward step taken in this matter, which is considered by so many of us of very great importance and so clearly entitled to serious and practical consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce].

Mr. RAYBURN. Just a minute. Is the gentleman from Iowa going to yield to anybody to explain the provisions of this bill who is an advocate of it? I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce] is an opponent of it. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas or the gentleman from Iowa will some time during the afternoon yield to somebody who is familiar with the bill and will explain the very intricate and unheard of provisions in it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Members of the committee will explain it from time to time, but I promised to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce].

I have no set speech to make on this subject and had intended to use my time very largely for the purpose in the mind of the gentleman on the other side who has just asked for information, because like himself I am seeking for light in the matter. If gentlemen, in answer to my inquiries, will take the greater part of the 20 minutes allotted to me, I shall be perfectly content.

First, Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentlemen on this side of the aisle if there is one among them who will enlighten me in the matter of the sentence on the second page of the report, about 10 lines down, which proclaims to the people of the country that this is a most comprehensive measure and extends farther than any previous law in the regulation of private business in time of peace, except possibly the interstate

Here is an announcement to the people that we are passing a law that extends farther than any previous law in the regulation of private business. It happens that last fall, believing I voiced the sentiment of the party to which I belong, on various occasions I took the opportunity in behalf of that party to pledge to the voters of my State that we would stop the regulation of private business, and much was my gratification when the man whom we succeeded in electing President came into office and said that the most important thing we had before us to-day was to put more business into Government and take the Government out of business. Will gentlemen on this side explain to me why, in the face of the declarations of our speakers and of our platform, if I mistake not, and of our President and of ourselves, we now in this somewhat frank and confiding manner disclose to the people of the United States that within a few weeks after obtaining power we, as set forth here in print, are to go farther in the regulation of private business than ever before?

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes. I asked the question for the purpose of yielding, so that I may be able to explain to my constituents.

Mr. TINCHER. Would the gentleman be in favor of repealing the other act mentioned in that connection—the interstate commerce act?

Mr. LUCE. On a previous occasion I stated to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Young], and I will repeat it to the gentleman from Kansas, that only a New England man is privileged to answer one question by propounding another. I desire to know why this statement is put in print.

Mr. TINCHER. Because there is more reason for the Government by law regulating the five big packers to-day than there were reasons existing for regulating interstate commerce at the time the interstate commerce act was passed. That is the reason I have asked the gentleman the question, and I was wondering whether he would answer it by saying he would vote to repeal the interstate commerce act.

Mr. LUCE. The interstate commerce law is not under consideration

Mr. TINCHER. Well, the Louisiana lottery law is not under consideration, either. But the Government says to a certain class of business, "You shall not exist," and the Government still exists. The Government is now saying to another class of business, "We are going to regulate you to a certain extent." I think the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. HAUGEN] was entirely right when he stated that this act goes further than we have ever gone in reference to regulating private business, except in the interstate commerce act. But we who favor this bill justify that regulation. Some of us Republicans claim that there is not an utterance of our President or anything in our party platform that is inconsistent with the Government going into the regulation of business when business needs the regulation of the Government.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas what private business the interstate commerce act regulates?

Mr. TINCHER. Well, according to the hearings in this case the interstate commerce act had the effect of depriving the greater portion of these five big packers of the rebates that they were receiving at the expense of the whole public of the United States. That was one private enterprise that the railroads were engaged in that was destroyed by the interstate commerce act.

Mr. WALSH. That was making a crime, and providing a criminal statute. It was not regulating their business.

Mr. TINCHER. I take it that the gentleman thinks the meat packers are engaged in a private business. Well, if it is private, it is publicly indulged in.

Mr. WALSH. No more than the gentleman is in private business when he is raising stock or when he is growing grain as food for the stock on his farm.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes. Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It was early held in a case where State was exercising its power to regulate railroads that a public interest attaches to the operation of railroad companies. The Supreme Court of the United States has recently decided a case arising under the so-called Ball law, holding that under certain conditions, because a public interest attaches to real estate transactions, such as the leasing of property, it is competent for Congress to legislate relative thereto so far as the District of Columbia is concerned.

It would seem, therefore, that Congress could regulate the particular business described in this bill upon that theory. I can understand how the gentleman from Massachusetts can question the expediency of the thing, but I can not understand how he can question the validity of such legislation as is proposed here.

Mr. LUCE. I was not raising the question of validity. I was asking a question regarding the statement in this report, that this goes further than any previous law in the regulation of any private business, the report saying nothing about its being of public interest or quasi public interest, or giving the intimation that we are talking here about anything but private busi-

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It is not the essential character of the business. The business may be private, but if the business has gotten to the point where a public interest attaches to it, and the conditions are such as really create a general emergency, then, as I interpret the decision of the court under the Ball law, legislation is warranted.

Mr. LUCE. Absolutely. There is no question about that. But I did not raise that issue.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Can the gentleman from Virginia cite any business that some public interest does not attach to, any business that is transacted in this country during the 24 hours of the day that some public interest does not attach to?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I think if my friend will read the case I have cited, in which the opinion was delivered by a great judge appointed from his own State, he will reach the conclusion that, respecting any designated business, it may be found that a public interest attaches to it, so as to make regulation permissible.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; and I think the gentleman will recall that that was war emergency legislation, and that in the New York case they did sustain the New York case upon a little different ground. But once in a while the gentleman is convinced that the courts render a dissenting opinion which, while it may not have the force and effect of law, may appeal to the reason of persons of ordinary intelligence. I think that is true in those two cases.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. My friend realizes, of course, that I am of only ordinary intelligence, and-

Mr. WALSH. I am speaking rather of myself, in connection with others. I may add that the gentleman from Virginia is possessed of more than ordinary intelligence. His participation in the deliberations of this House has shown him to be a man of wisdom and a distinguished lawyer.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Was not the suggestion of the gentleman one relating only to the wisdom of the legislation, in view of the statement that this goes further than any other bill in the regulation of private business, rather than a suggestion aimed at its validity or legality?

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman from New York states the matter correctly

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman from New York allow me? With reference to what my friend from Massachusetts said, for which I thank him, I certainly do not want him to think that my remark a moment ago was at all waspish, because the relations between him and me are such as to preclude any possibility of that. The court in the case that I referred to seems to lay aside any question of the exercise of the war power, and to base its conclusion altogether upon the general power of Congress legislating for the District of Columbia, and to accord to any State similar power. This bill is, of course, expressly based on the commerce clause of the Constitution.

Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Ander-Mr. LUCE.

son] desire to enlighten me?

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to enlighten the gentleman by asking a question. If this bill did not go any further than existing law on the subject there would not be much use of enacting it. would there?

Mr. LUCE. I was going to reach that stage of my dilemma

[Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. It might be a good idea for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce] to tell the House what he thinks about the bill.

Mr. LUCE. I will with great pleasure disclose my own view as to the stage at which we have arrived, because the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Moore] has helped me to bring it home. He has pointed out the existence of a law interfering with housing of a class which I think all the authorities in the country agree has done more to contribute to the distressing conditions in our large cities than any other one cause. My own State has done the same sort of thing. It has been done generally, and that interference with private business was one of the reasons that led the whole country to demand that we stop this course of action. I never understood the practical advantage of cutting off your nose to spite your face. I never understood the practical advantage of passing legislation aimed at landlords the only important result of which was to make houses more scarce and rents higher; and in this instance I can comprehend no practical advantage to myself or to any of my neighbors or to any of the people of the land in passing legislation which experience has taught can have no other effect than to increase the prices of food. And that is why the party to which I belong promised response to the appeal of the people to stop raising the cost of living by legislation.

And now let me turn to my friends on the other side and see if I can get from them some information. I have in my hand a copy of the act creating the Federal Trade Commission, approved in 1914, while these gentlemen were in power. I would live stock.

like to ask the gentlemen on that side of the aisle if they can disclose to me any single instance where the operations of the Federal Trade Commission have resulted in a reduction in the cost of articles bought by the people? I will give my whole 20 minutes if need be for one specific instance of that.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas. Mr. RAYBURN. I was a Member of the House at that time, in my first term, and was a member of the subcommittee that helped to write the Federal Trade Commission act. I do not know what others may think of it, but as for me I think the operation of that act has been very disappointing to the country.

Mr. LUCE. That recognition of the self-evident fact is very gratifying, coming from a man who helped in the passage of the act.

Now I turn to this side for some more light. I find that the Federal Trade Commission act sums up its purposes in two lines, declaring that "unfair methods of competition in commerce are hereby declared unlawful."

That is the gist of the whole law. All the rest of it simply provides the machinery for the prevention of unfair methods of competition in commerce. They are declared unlawful. And now for seven years a Government agency has had the power to carry out this prohibition.

Now, will the gentleman in charge of this bill kindly look at the section beginning at the bottom of page 4, section 202, to which is given a little over a page, and in which it is said what it shall be unlawful for any packer to do? Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] point out to me anything on this page which goes beyond the power already in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I interrupt the gentleman? Mr. LUCE. This side has a monopoly of the imparting of information at present.

Mr. TINCHER. On the entire page there is no comparison between the law and the Federal Trade Commission act.

Mr. LUCE. I can not read the page without considering it to be a mere elaboration of the attempt to prevent unfair competition in commerce.

Mr. ANDERSON. The difference between unfair competition in commerce and unfair methods in commerce.

Mr. LUCE. I think the words "in commerce" are found in every paragraph, having been carefully inserted. Therefore both in the matter of the Federal Trade Commission and of this bill it is wholly a matter of commerce; not of manufacturing or transportation, but it is wholly a matter of com-

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think if the gentleman will refer to the paragraph following that to which he has been referring in the report, he will find that the definition of what the act does is in exact accordance with his contention. The second paragraph on the second page defines it exactly as the gentleman has read it to be defined in the Federal trade act.

Mr. LUCE. That was the way I understood it, and I would like to have some gentleman show me in the bill on page 5, sec tion 202, any authority given the Secretary of Agriculture which is not already in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. ANDERSON. Is the gentleman familiar with the interpretation placed by the Federal Trade Commission and the courts upon the language "unfair methods of competition?"

Mr. LUCE. Not to such an extent that I would not be glad of further enlightenment.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not desire to enlighten the gentleman, If he is familiar with it he does not need enlightenment.

Mr. LUCE. But other gentlemen may need it.

Mr. ANDERSON. As to the intent of the language "unfair competition" it only includes acts which constitute a violation of the rights of the competitor, and it must be a method which is used by a competitor on the same plane.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Massachusetts 10 minutes more.

Mr. ANDERSON. For instance, the method of competition used by the manufacturer which we might think was a violation of the moral rights of the wholesaler would not be a violation of the Federal Trade Commission act, because the interpretation of that is that it must be an unfair method as between competitors who stand on the same plane. This goes further than that, as it affects the public interest to a large extent, and the unfair competition or unfair practice as between the packer and the general public, the packer and the producer, or the packer and any other agency connected with the marketing of

Mr. LUCE. If that were the intent of the committee, my difficulties might diminish, but on glancing over the page I see nothing of the sort. For instance, line 18 speaks of creating a monopoly with reference to commerce.

Mr. DEMPSEY. If the gentleman will yield, the page he is reading from is summarized on page 2 of the report, in the second paragraph:

The Secretary of Agriculture-is given the power to prevent packers, stockyards, companies, and all persons dealing in the stockyards from engaging in unfair, unjustly discriminatory, or deceptive practices or devices. He is given the power to regulate and prescribe the practices on the stockyards, to prevent abuses, and may award damages in redress of any unfair practices or abuses. He is given the power to regulate and prescribe all rates, fees, and charges for service in the stockyards, including the fees of commission men

Then they give the power to award damages.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman is talking about the stock-yards and the gentleman from Massachusetts is talking about

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is with reference to the stockyards and the packers

Mr. ANDERSON. If the gentleman will read the bill instead of the report, he will see that he is mistaken.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I take it that the committee prepared the report in a reasonably intelligent manner with reference to the bill and so worded it to summarize the bill in the report.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman read from the report on page 3?

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I will, Mr. RAYBURN. We gave the Federal Trade Commission wide powers, but not as wide as they give the Secretary of Agriculture under this bill. The Federal Trade Commission made a long and exhaustive investigation of the packing business and made a report. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he knows what recommendations the Federal Trade Commission, another arm of the Government that had been given these wide powers-what recommendation of theirs is included in the bill?

Mr. LUCE. Does the gentleman desire an answer from me or from somebody who is more familiar with that matter?

Mr. RAYBURN. Anyone who knows.

Mr. LUCE. I will give way to any member of the committee to answer.

Mr. TINCHER. I do not think that the Agricultural Committee followed any of the recommendations.

Mr. RAYBURN. The commission spent thousands of dollars in employing a very expensive lawyer out in California for many months investigating the packers, and tried the case through the newspapers, and then they filed a long report recommending legislation. I wondered if the report had been of any use to the committee in drafting the bill,

Mr. TINCHER. I think the gentleman is in error in saying that they filed a report recommending legislation.

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, yes; I was at the time a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and for about two months we conducted the investigation with reference to the packers, and we considered the recommendations of the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. TINCHER, I think the gentleman is right; they did file some recommendations, but we did not follow the recommendations as to legislation. There were findings of facts disclosed by the report which the committee took into consideration, and they did offer some recommendations for legislation that were not followed.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, as I said at the outset, I have no prepared argument, but in conclusion I would like to put this in the Record—that no human being has asked me to speak or vote for or against this bill. My hostility to it is the result of service in my State in an official capacity for the investigation of these questions. As the result of that service and continued observation of the general topic, since then I have become more and more strengthened in the conviction that my party and my President are right in saying that it is our duty to stop interference with private business. My observation is that every time by the use of law we attempt to regulate the tides of commerce we interfere with the normal operation of forces which if left to themselves will cure the evils of the moment. Every interference of this sort is an economic wrong, injurious to all concerned, leading to violation of law, to disregard of law, to disrespect for law, and putting additional burdens upon Therefore, trying to apply what I understood my the people. party to affirm, I object to legislation like this, openly proclaimed as going further than ever before in the way of interference with the private business of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Does the gentleman understand his President to say in the New York speech that he believes that private business when it reaches the stage of absolute monopoly in the handling of every necessity should not be interfered with by the Government?

Mr. LUCE. The President's speech may speak for itself. Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I thought the gentleman was speaking for the President.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the gentleman who just left the floor, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce], asked a question as to what food products and how the cost of living had ever been reduced by any act of the Federal Trade Commission. We have the Sherman antitrust law on the statute books, and I doubt whether the gentleman would favor a repeal of that law, yet that question could be asked just as effectively as to that. I think no Member of Congress would be able to specify in just what particular the Sherman antitrust law has reduced the cost of the necessaries of life, and yet I do not believe that any man who has imposed on him the duty of making law would want to say that the Sherman antitrust law as a law has not had a wholesome effect, although I do not know of any man who ever went to jail for violating that law.

I want to say just a word in respect to the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY], who spoke for half an hour against the present administration of the budget system in this House. I am not sure that the present appropriating committee is the perfect way to administer that law, but I do want to say and congratulate the country upon the vast improvement of that system over the old system. perhaps would not do that now except that this is such a golden opportunity for doing it. Previous to the new rule which took the power of appropriation away from the Agriculture Committee, which has 21 members, we had to spend about all of our time in the consideration of a thirty or forty million dollar appropriation bill. It took the time of that committee; and since this new rule, since we got rid of that work, which should be the least important of the work of a Member of the American Congress-that is, spending the Government's moneywe have started toward making law several good measures that it was absolutely impracticable and impossible for the committee to consider heretofore. I do not want to criticize, but I want to suggest to the legislative committees of this House that instead of spending so much time on the floor making points of order against items in appropriation bills, which would be proper if there were a law authorizing them, it might be a good idea for the legislative committees to report out some bills along that line and make them laws. Personally, I am impressed with the idea that a man who comes to the American Congress imbued with the opinion that his principal duty here is to spend the Government's money makes a very poor worker in the American Congress

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TINCHER. Yes.
Mr. DEMPSEY. Permit me to say that the gentleman from New York who was heard this afternoon never made a point of order, but always voted with the committee, as he stated in his remarks; and permit me to say, in addition, that I do not believe the gentleman will find in this Congress a man who agrees with the gentleman in his statement that the least important thing is to save money.

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, I did not say that.
Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman from New York believes that at the present time the question of taxation is the most important question before the American people and that the saving of money by spending it economically and judicially and only where it is needed is the most important duty that confronts any Member of Congress at the present time. [Applause.]

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has come just I did not say as close to my statement as I expected him to. that the saving of money was not an important thing, but appropriating committees do not save money, they spend it. appropriate money, and that is the exact proposition which I make. I say that the saving of the Government's money and not the spending of it should be a matter of some importance. I will tell you how you can save it. Pass laws for the things for which we appropriate and not appropriate for things we do not have laws for. I am not criticizing anyone for making points of order, but we all know and every man in the United States knows that to be on a big committee that has power to appropriate gives a Member of Congress standing and gives him power, and I do not hesitate to say that I believe it is a fair principle in good government that no big legislative committee should have the power to appropriate money.

I believe that the way we are approaching the matter in this bill-that is, authorizing an appropriation and then letting the administration of the bill run the gauntlet of another separate committee-is the proper and economic way to run the Government and is the way to save money and not spend money.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TINCHER, Yes.
Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman then, I take it, is totally ignorant of the fact that the Republican Party went into the last campaign on the issue that it had saved billions, and through what committees? Through the appropriating com-They were the committees through which the savings were made. The gentleman does not seem to be aware either of the workings of the House or of the position that his party took and upon which it won the last campaign.

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, yes, I am aware of it. I had something to do with the position which the party took, and I was in the last campaign. Further, I have been a member of one of these big legislative committees, and I have heard Members of Congress say since the new rule was adopted that our country is going to the eternal bow wows because we concluded to have a double check upon the expenditure of the Government's I am giving an example of this great rule, and I am not afraid to defend this rule which took from the committee that I am on the power to appropriate money, which has enabled me as a member of that committee to be a party to the drafting of three or four bills that I think are constructive, and which I take it the gentleman is opposing. I am satisfied to be just able to authorize the appropriation for the administration of these laws to which I have referred, because they have merit and because I believe we will have no trouble in getting from another entirely separate committee an appropriation adequate for the carrying out of their administration. The desire of the appropriating committees to write the law and appropriate for it at the same time has cost this Government money. will never have any conservation so long as one committee does the appropriating and the legislating. We should have the double check. I did not rise for the purpose of defending the budget plan, but I think it is about time some one called attention to the fact. I think it is about time some one who is on one of these big former appropriating committees, whether he is smarting under the loss of his power to appropriate the Government's money or not-it is about time for some such man to come out straightforwardly and say what he thinks on this subject. I have sat here and listened to this nagging and this criticism of the budget system, for that is what it amounts I have sat here and heard Members of this Congress say that now that 35 Members are legislating for everything, the rest of us may as well go home. I have heard them say that they have nothing to do; that the power was taken from their committee to appropriate. My God, is that all the people send us here for-to appropriate and spend money? I have found plenty to do and the Committee on Agriculture has found plenty to do. I simply answer the gentleman to call his attention to the fact that by this good rule the American people are about to have three or four good laws at this special session of Con-gress, and to say that four or five good men can handle a little $40,000,000 appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture, and I am frank to say they handled it just as well, if not better, than the 21 would have handled it, because every fellow of the 21 would want to have some little item in it that did not otherwise get into the bill.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. No; I can not yield. Mr. DEMPSEY. Will not the gentle Will not the gentleman yield in reference to something he said about myself?

Mr. TINCHER. I said I would not yield.
Mr. DEMPSEY. Will not the gentleman yield for just a short question?
Mr. TINCHER. No; I wanted to say-

I want to say to the gentleman I am not opposed to this bill and that I would be very glad, indeed, to hear the gentleman talk about the bill, because I wish to learn about the bill. He has had lots of time to study it. I am ready to listen to the gentleman and learn.

Mr. TINCHER. I want to say to the distinguished gentleman from New York that if he is not opposed to this bill I misunderstood the tenor of his questions to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts who just preceded me, and per-haps I am entirely mistaken; perhaps he is entirely in favor of the new rule of only having 35 men, because I had only the may cover the proposition.

same opportunity to ascertain his views about the rule as I had about the bill, and that is by his own talk. Now, I want to give a brief history of the bill that is before the committee.

A brief history, and, I may say, a supplemental history, of the packer legislation may be of some interest to the House. This matter has been, in one way or another, pending before the American Congress for more than a quarter of a century; but, confining myself to a supplemental synopsis of it, let us begin with the report made by the Federal Trade Commission, after their investigation of the packers. In this report the Federal Trade Commission denounces the packers, the five big packers, as a monopoly, as unfair, as profiteers, as being guilty of corrupt practices and unworthy. Immediately upon the filing and publishing of this report the Congress resumed the consideration of the matter of legislation to cure the evils in the packing industry.

The Department of Justice also commenced an investigation, under the direction of A. Mitchell Palmer, then Attorney General, and it was heralded over the United States through the press that he had sufficient evidence to prosecute the packers criminally and to begin action against them civilly under the then, as well as present, existing laws.

The Committee on Agriculture of the House had had about 50 days' hard work in hearings on the subject, when, like a clap of thunder out of a clear blue sky, came the announcement that the Department of Justice had cured all the evils in the packing industry by what is now the famous consent decree entered into between the packers and the Department of Justice, without reference to any existing law or to any precedent for such This was followed by the Attorney General's appearance before the Agricultural Committee, in which he took the firm and unequivocal stand that Congress should not pass any legislation; that his decree had removed all the evils; and that in the future there would be no trouble about the packers.

Personally I had the pleasure of telling the Attorney General at that time that in my judgment the decree would do more harm than good; that the interests of the great masses of the people were not at all considered in the agreement; that the decree was a camouflage to stop legislation and to protect the packers; and that the great publicity it was receiving was unwarranted by the facts. However, the decree, and the Attorney General's attitude, had this effect, and so that you may fully understand that let me explain that in the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives at that time there were about four or five Republicans unalterably opposed to any packer legislation; there was a considerable difference of opinion among the Republicans that were in favor of packer legislation, as to the extent to which we should go in the regulation; the minority, or Democratic, membership of the committee up to the morning the Attorney General appeared were, in the main, for packer legislation and regulation, or had been for such legislation subsequent to the filing of this Federal Trade Commission report, or at least they talked that way in the committee. Immediately after the Attorney General's testimony those Republicans of the committee who were opposed to any legislation whatever insisted upon that as an excuse for not reporting out a bill from the committee; the minority membership naturally hesitated to condemn their Attorney General. and there was no chance whatever to report any packer legislation out of the Agricultural Committee during the special or first regular session of the Sixty-sixth Congress. Then came the recess, followed by the short session of the Sixty-sixth Congress. The consent decree was in force during this recess, and there is no question in the world but what every member of the Agriculture Committee came to Washington upon the convening of the short session of the Sixty-sixth Congress firmly convinced that the decree was bunk, and that there had been no relief from it, and that there were lurking evils to the public in it, and that instead of being a cure for all the evils it added to the evils; but in spite of this there were enough members of the Agricultural Committee, as it was then composed, that were opposed to any regulation or law concerning the packers, combined with a considerable number of the minority members that lost interest, to make it a very slow indeed, to get any legislation reported out of the process. committee.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes. Mr. RAYBURN. Did

Did the gentleman state the decree was camouflage and bunk-

Mr. TINCHER. I propose to discuss the decree a little later in detail, and as I have only a short time, I would like to do that before the gentleman asks the question, and perhaps I

Mr. RAYBURN. I think the gentleman probably had better reserve his criticism of the former Attorney General until he has shown the bunk.

Mr. TINCHER. I will leave that with the gentlemen of the House.

This decree, in my judgment, had the effect of hastening the passage of what might be considered by some as a very radical packer bill in the United States Senate. This bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture of the House at a time when to have legislation at that short session meant that the Senate bill could not be changed in any particular. To amend it in the slightest degree in passing it in the House would mean a conference, and there was sufficient opposition to the legislation in the Senate that everyone knew that a conference on packer legislation at the short session of the Sixty-sixth Congress meant its defeat. For several days the Agricultural Committee of the House was in a fight; some of us were trying to report out the Senate bill without a single amendment, believing that we were warranted in doing that by the conditions that existed, though a great many were not in full sympathy and accord with the bill as it came to us. For several days there was a tie in the committee, which prevented the reporting out of the Senate bill; finally, by a majority of one vote the House committee reported its own bill, which, of course, meant the defeat of any packer legislation for that session of Congress. Everyone in the committee knew that, but it was amusing to observe the tactics used by certain Members of Congress from that day on till the session closed, in pretending as though they thought the packer bill reported out by the House committee could pass, and that we could have it as a law at that session of Congress, when, as a matter of fact, every Member of Congress knew then that the House bill was reported instead of the Senate bill, and there was no chance whatever for legislation in the Sixty-sixth Congress.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield right there? I know the gentleman is familiar with everything in the Kendrick-Kenyon bill which passed the Senate.

Mr. TINCHER. That is what I am talking about. Mr. HUDSPETH, Which was indorsed by the Texas & Southwestern Cattle Raisers' Association, which has the largest cattlemen membership in the world. I want to ask my friend what is the chief difference in the Kendrick-Kenyon bill which passed the Senate and this bill which is pending before us today?

Mr. TINCHER. The Kendrick-Kenyon bill never did pass the Senate. It was the Gronna bill which finally passed the Senate.

Mr. HUDSPETH. It was along the same line and practically the same.

Mr. TINCHER. The Gronna bill created a commission, and there was considerable difference. I do not want to stop now to go into all of those features, although I would be glad to later on if I have the time.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Before the gentleman takes his seat I would like for him to point out the chief differences, because I have been informed that the packers have withdrawn their opposition to this bill, and I know they were violently opposed to the Kendrick-Kenyon bill.

Mr. TINCHER. At that same short session of Congress some of us had worked hard in an effort to report out the wheat futures control bill, but there was no chance, as the committee then stood, to report the bill at all. Immediately upon the convening of the Sixty-seventh Congress in special session the proponents of these two measures began an earnest activity for the reporting of them out of the committee, which has resulted in the passage of the wheat futures control bill by the House, and I think it will within a very short time have passed the other legislative body and have become a law.

Time, manipulation by the boards of trade, and information, coupled with new blood on the Agricultural Committee, resulted in a unanimous report for that measure. The same thing has happened with respect to this bill. This is a good bill, a great step forward in Government, backed by a unanimous report of the Committee on Agriculture. It is not putting the Government in business, as is so often denounced in the press, but it does outlaw certain practices in Government, and amounts to good business in Government. Sometimes I get weary when I read or hear some colleague ranting about the Government in business. Government through law, very properly, has considerable to say concerning business. The necessity for this legislation is now more manifest and perhaps more real than ever before in the history of our country. There is a feeling well grounded upon the part of the producers and consumers of this country that there are five great industries that have a monopoly upon the meat-food products of the world, that such a monopoly is detrimental and injurious to the great masses.

Through one agency of the Government, the Federal Trade Commission, this charge in the form of a Government document has been given publicity throughout the entire world. Our export market for meat has been absolutely destroyed. swer that the so-called evils in the trade as mentioned in the Federal Trade Commission report have been cured by the consent decree is no longer tolerated or believed by anyone.

The consent decree did three or four things, which I am going to enumerate: First, it divorced the packers from the stockyards, and while this part has not been carried out-perhaps can not be under existing conditions-it does not amount to anything. It never made any difference who owned the stockyards; perhaps it was all right for the packers to own them; perhaps it was proper for them to own them. should at all times, however, being a public utility, have been under Government law and control and supervision, as they are under the bill now before you for consideration. That part of the decree is misleading to the people. Whether the stockyards are owned by packers or by any other individuals, they should be under supervision, as provided for in this bill. The second provision in the decree which I shall mention was the divorcing of the packers from the so-called unrelated lines. There was a demand for legislation along this line, coming from the wholesale grocers; there was no law authorizing the entering of this decree. It has attained whatever validity it has by virtue of its being by agreement.

Mr. JACOWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. I will.

Mr. JACOWAY. If I am not mistaken, the decree took in everything, except pouitry and eggs, that the packers sell.

Mr. RAYBURN. It did not take in anything the packers made out of any head of live stock.

Mr. TINCHER. The decree is printed.
Mr. RAYBURN. It did divorce them from going into the monopolizing of the business of the food products of the country

Mr. TINCHER. The argument for that portion of the decree by the Department of Justice is the most laughable thing imaginable. They said unless the packers were restricted from dealing in the unrelated lines in time they would have a monopoly upon them as they now have upon the meat proposition. The only reasonable deduction from that argument and from the decree itself would be that the Department of Justice concluded that the Government should permit the packers to have an absolute monopoly on all the meat products of the land, but that they would not let them have it upon anything else. As a matter of fact, there were certain unrelated lines the only marketing facilities in existence for which were owned by the five big packers, and there is one section of California where the farmers have absolutely lost a year's crop by reason of this decree. Some regulation of the packers was undoubtedly necessary, but to just, in this blunt, unscientific consent decree, destroy competition and leave for waste a great portion of the food products of this Nation has had the condemnation of all Americans familiar with it ever since. Third, to my mind the most deplorable thing in the decree is that portion of it preventing the packers from selling to the consumer any of their products. The decree is so worded that the only consumers the packers can sell to are their own employees. Now, remember that this decree was entered into at a time when there was more difference between the price of meat on foot and on the table than there ever was in the history of the world. encourage meat production and to encourage meat consumption, to benefit the producer and the consumer, the difference between the price the producer receives and the consumer pays should be reduced in every possible way. Yet here was a decree of court entered into by consent, not only without any specific law authorizing it, but in violation of the fundamental law of the land. The packer was glad enough to make that agreement; he was undoubtedly subject to the abuse of both the consumer and the producer as to this great spread of difference. After the decree was entered all he had to do was to say that he was barred by the courts from having anything whatever to do with the prices for which the food products he was handling were ultimately sold to the consumer. This was vicious, unwarranted, un-American, and has had more to do with bank-rupting the producer and half starving the consumer than any other one thing that ever happened in America.

Personally I am against consent decrees as a means of making law for government in this country. I do not believe that a court should have the power, the right to enter a void decree, a decree not based upon any law, a decree declaiming something to be unlawful, simply because some parties claiming to have an interest in it agree that it shall be entered. It occurs to me that this is manifestly un-American and wrong, that it is not worth while to discuss it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Of course, I take it that the gentleman expresses the opinion as an individual and not as a representative of his party. I would like to ask the gentleman—

Mr. TINCHER. I am expressing it as an individual and as a Republican and as a Kansan and as a cattleman.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Does the gentleman want to say the views he has expressed upon this decree are the views of the Republican Party?

Mr. TINCHER. I hope they will be if the party ever takes any action.

Mr. KINCHELOE. That is what I wanted to ask the gentleman. Can the gentleman tell the committee what the views are of the present Attorney General of this administration?

Mr. TINCHER. I do not know the views of the present Attorney General, but when I called the attention of the Secretary of Agriculture in the committee to my views on the subject he called my attention to the fact and said I had borrowed them from him because he said he had printed them along about the time the decree was made, and he seemed to think we were thinking along the same line.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The point I am making is that the gen-tleman well knows that if this decree was to be amended or set aside that the Attorney General can do it.

Mr. TINCHER. I hope he does it. Mr. RAYBURN. Does the gentle Does the gentleman mean to say he indorses the theory of the packers not only changing off, but each year and each month gathering unto themselves another line of business not at all relating to the packing business, the slaughtering or manufacturing into by-products those things that come from the cow or hog or sheep?

Mr. TINCHER. I have always been in favor of the regulation of the packing industry by law. I have been for years convinced that they were big enough, that it should be properly regulated by law, but I do not think the way to regulate-well, I do not think we could have passed a law compelling this consent decree to have been made as a legal proposition, because I do not think we can say to a class of men, "You can not buy, you can not go out to Mr. Free's district in California, like you have for 20 years, where you have the only known market facilities to handle the produce in the district.

Now, Mr. Chairman, permit me to say in closing that I consider the bill under consideration to be a most constructive, fair, and necessary piece of legislation. The House committee has held hearings, which in printed form comprise eight large volumes. The Federal Trade Commission printed reports comprise four or five large volumes on this subject. In the interests of the business of producing live stock this matter should be settled by law. I am not going to take the time of this House and this committee in discussing the evils that exist, that this bill will cure. Time has demonstrated that the business of producing meat in this country can not be carried on under existing conditions. It is my judgment that the passage of this bill, that its proper administration, will permit the meat producer to exist; that it will reduce the amount paid out between the producer and the consumer to such an extent that it will make the business for the producer more profitable, and not be injurious to the consumer. This condition is so patent and manifest that it hardly requires an argument. When you stop to think that a beefsteak for which you pay a dollar in Washington is sold by the producer for less than a dime, gross, it does not seem that any argument made by man could make the matter more clear.

I am proud to be a Member of this House. The Sixty-seventh Congress will, in my judgment, take a most important place in the history of this country. This Congress has manifested and shown by its willingness to pass laws its interest in the man that is feeding the world to-day, that was never manifested by a former Congress. Conditions on the farm are bad. No law passed by the Congress can absolutely cure them, but we can, and we will, and we are showing the producer that such laws as are necessary and as will help and as are fair are going on the statute books. The farmers' cooperative act, which we passed, the tariff bill, which we have already passed, the grain futures act, now pending in the Senate, and this bill. which this House will pass within a very few hours, is a program of which any man representing an agricultural section of this country and having the cause of his constituents at heart can well be proud.

You must know we are going out there and buying that product. And I will leave it to the gentleman from California [Mr. Free] if that is not what happened this year?

Mr. FREE. Absolutely. It put us out of business this year. Mr. RAYBURN. The question that I was asking here was whether the gentleman was in favor of the business they were engaging in in gathering in other business that had nothing to do with the packing of meat?

Mr. TINCHER. Here is a man that comes along and says, "I am going to make them quit handling berries or apples, because if they handle them they will get a monopoly of them." I differ with that man. The only presumption is that that man wants a monopoly left on that which they now handle, and it will only increase the monopoly. I disagree with the ex-Attorney General, in that I believe we are going to regulate this business by law.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman is going to allow them, then, to stay in this business, and then regulate it? Is he going to regulate the little grocery or dry goods stores in the country that are in that sort of business?

Mr. TINCHER. I do not think there is any comparison at all between five institutions that have a monopoly upon certain few food products of the whole world and a little country grocery store.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is what I have been trying to get the gentleman to say.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Right there. I would like to suggest, that under this bill you regulate the packer and forbid him from entering into a combination as to the price of live stock. der this decree, they divorce them from the stockyards, the gentleman in favor of that when they can absolutely handle the cattle in the stockyards and they agree to that decree?

Mr. TINCHER. I believe that stockyards should be regulated by law, and it never did appear to me to make any difference as to who owned them. They are divorced from them by the decree. They can not get anyone to finance them. What difference does it make who owns the yards if you pass a bill like this, a constructive bill, that places them under the Government control?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Is it not easier for five men to fix the prices than it would be for 500 men?

Mr. TINCHER. I never knew how to make 500 men buy or own those stockyards. That is mere detail.

Mr. HUDSPETH. They have a certain time.

Mr. HUDSPETH. They have a certain time.
Mr. TEN EYCK. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TINCHER. I will.
Mr. TEN EYCK. Is the gentleman in favor of abolishing the entire decree?

Mr. TINCHER. I will say to the gentleman that I am absolutely against government by decree. I am against any set of men getting together that are interested in something and, in absence of law on that subject, entering into what is called in this case a consent decree to operate as a law of the people of this country.

Mr. TEN EYCK. The gentleman has not answered the question of whether he is in favor of repealing the decree in its entirety.

Mr. TINCHER. Well, it covers a good many pages and there might be a line here and there that would be all right. There might be something in it that is in accordance with law.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman is in favor of laws being enacted by Congress instead of by the Attorney General?

Mr. TINCHER. I surely am.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TINCHER. I will.

Mr. STEVENSON. On a good many occasions last summer I heard this expression, that "We want more business in the Government and less Government in business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does this bill-and I notice that was epitomized, and I rather approve it, in the inaugural address of the President-does this bill intend to have a little more Government in business now or a little more business in Government in the legislation? Is it driving-

Mr. TINCHER. This is driving in the right direction. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Which is the right direction? Mr. TINCHER. I am decidedly impressed and pleased with the interest the distinguished gentleman is taking in the welfare of the party that I think so much of. We never meant that we would not pass laws, for instance, against gambling in the Chicago grain market, although they used that same identical term and said it was too much Government in business. They did not mean in these platforms and declarations, as I understood them, that we would repeal any laws against larceny or burglary, or anything of that kind, although that is Government.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. TINCHER. Gladly.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does the gentleman mean to state that larceny and burglary are business? Is that his idea of "putting out of business "-the prohibiting of larceny and burglary?

Mr. TINCHER. I did not mean to say it was business, but there was considerable feeling that there has been a lot of it going on in the past four or five years of the past administration, and I did not mean that we were not going to stop that.

I will say to the committee that I think this is a good measure. I do not think anyone can say that it is radical. I think it is a tep in the right direction. I want to say to this House, that after that bill passed last week some people said, "What good will it do?" Has anybody noticed that when the time for delivery of May wheat is up it is admitted now there was a monopoly that had been manipulating the May wheat market until they got the wheat out of the hands of the farmers, and they put it up, and May wheat went 50 cents higher when the contract time was reached? Have any of you noticed that July futures are selling now at 50 cents a busilel less than cash wheat, and do you not know that if you can get that out of the hands of the farmers between now and July the wheat will come up to the option? There are farmers of this country that are not asking for special legislation, but simply want the law to give them a fair deal, and if they will receive it they will gladly

Mr. MANN. I do not want to take time to reply to the last statement which the gentleman has thrown out gratuitously. The gentleman discussed very interestingly a little while ago the subject of the consent decree. I do not understand, unless I am mistaken, and so I will ask the gentleman this: There is nothing in this bill relating to the consent decree? Mr. TINCHER. I will say to the gentleman that this bill was drawn without any reference to the consent decree. It is the duty of Congress to make the law. But I will say to the gentleman that the successful administration of this bill by the Department of Agriculture will, in my judgment, either necessitate the ignoring or the cancellation of that decree.

Mr. MANN. If this bill works successfully it may be necessary to change or modify or cancel the consent decree.

Mr. TINCHER. Yes. I had so much feeling concerning the consent decree since it was entered and since it has been going on that I wanted to say what I thought about it.

I do not think there should be any misunderstanding that this had any effect on the consent decree now.

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, no. Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman mean to say that carrying out the provisions of this bill would necessitate the repealing of the decree?

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, no. I think Congress makes the law and not the courts.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TINCHER. Yes. Mr. RAYBURN. If the decree had not been entered into by the Attorney General and the packers, is there anything in it that would be affected by this bill?

Mr. TINCHER. I do not recall anything now that is in the decree that in my judgment benefited either the producer or the consumer of this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the

nized for 10 minutes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I am frank to say that I had not intended to say anything about this bill during the general debate. But since the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] has taken ex-Attorney General, Mr. Palmer, down the road for making this decree possible, I want to make a few remarks in regard to that. I do not bear any brief for ex-Attorney General Palmer, but I want to say that I think he is not only a great lawyer but he was honest and conscientious in the performance of his duty, and I will say further that he is the only Attorney General that I know of that ever did go as far as to get even a consent decree in regulating these packers. I do not know of any Republican Attorney General that ever came down the road far enough even to get a consent decree, and therefore Mr. Palmer is the only Attorney General that has ever taken a partial step for the sole purpose of regulating these packers for the benefit of the consumers and the producers of this country.

Here is this decree that was entered into voluntarily between the Department of Justice while Mr. Palmer was Attorney General and these five packers. Now, as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Tincher] says, the main things the decree does are: It undertakes to divorce the packers from the ownership and operation of the stockyards, and it forbids them from dealing in any unrelated lines of products, and prevents the packers from retailing any of their products except to their own employees. I do not know whether this decree is a good one or a I am not qualified at the present time to say. But I say this to the gentleman from Kansas, that if it is a bad decree, if it needs remedying, his present Republican Attorney General can remedy it to-morrow. Why, one of the last provisions of the decree provides-

18. That the jurisdiction of this cause be, and is hereby, retained by this court for the purpose of taking such other action or adding at the foot of this decree such other relief, if any, as may become necessary or appropriate for the carrying out and enforcement of this decree, and for the purpose of entertaining at any time hereafter any application which the parties may make with respect to this decree.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.
Mr. ANDERSON. Is it not a fact that, with the consent of the packers, the Attorney General can effect a modification of any part of this decree on the order of the court to accomplish the modification?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Absolutely; and everybody knows he can get the consent, and the enthusiastic consent, of every one of these packers to-morrow. And everybody further knows that by getting their consent, with the consent of the present Republican Attorney General, the court would wipe it off its record; and, of course, everybody knows the packers would be glad to wipe it all off.

Mr. FREE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. FREE. I am perhaps more interested in that decree than any other man in this House, and I happen to know that one of the packers will not agree to the modification of that I propose, if this bill is carried, to ask this House to instruct the Attorney General to modify that decree.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I will say to the gentleman that he is letting this packer fool him on that proposition.

Mr. FREE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. KINCHELOE. No; I regret I can not yield further.

It is a question whether we will put anything in this bill which will repeal any part of this decree. So far as I am concerned, I am against repealing any part of this decree by an act of Congress. This decree was the get of the Department of Justice while Mr. Palmer was Attorney General, and the present Attorney General, Mr. Daugherty, can get rid of this decree tomorrow, and everybody knows it. As one of the members of the committee, I am not revealing any secrets of the committee when I say that when this question was pending before the committee we invited your Attorney General to come before us and give us his opinion. I desire to know what his opinion is. At present advised, I am opposed to destroying any of this decree entered into by agreement between the court and the five packers of the United States.

Mr. TEN EYCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.
Mr. TEN EYCK. Is it not a fact that if this bill is passed and all these regulatory powers are put in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, he can consult with the Attorney General and take into consideration the abolition of any part of that decree that is beneficial to the producers?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes. The Attorney General on his own initiative can modify any part of this decree, because he can always get the consent of the packers.

This is not a partisan matter. This is the first time any partisanship has ever developed among members of the Committee on Agriculture on anything.

And I say as an American citizen and as a Member of Congress and as a member of the Committee on Agriculture I am very deeply concerned in getting the opinion in executive session of the present Attorney General of the United States. The Committee on Agriculture invited him to come and meet them in executive session, and the answer came back that the Attorney General declined the invitation. Therefore we can get no opinion from your Attorney General. He can repeal the consent decree to-morrow, and until I hear a little more from your present Attorney General as to this decree of the court, which is a solemn judgment of the court, so far as I am concerned I am not in favor of repealing any of it by an act of Congress.

Therefore it is up to Mr. Daugherty, the Republican Attorney General, at least to give the Agricultural Committee in executive session a little light on the proposition; and as long as your Attorney General, representing the Department of Justice of the United States, refuses to say what he wants done, I, as a Member of Congress, will never vote to disturb a line, jot, or tittle of this decree until I can hear from him.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield for a

Mr. KINCHELOE. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. PARKS of Arkansas. The gentleman has this bill and the decree before him. In the gentleman's judgment is there a single clause in this bill that conflicts with the decree, or that would repeal it?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Absolutely not a word. It was the intention of the committee in drawing this bill as reported not to touch that decree one way or the other.

Mr. BOX. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. KINCHELOE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BOX. The gentleman heard the statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] that the proper enforcement of this act by the Secretary of Agriculture would require the cancellation or ignoring of the decree. Does the gentleman from Kentucky agree with that statement?

Mr. KINCHELOE. No; I do not think it would do that at all. There would be no conflict of authority at all, because this bill does not touch the decree one way or the other.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In order to be accurate, I think the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Tincher] said it would necessarily set aside some phases of the decree, not the entire decree.

Mr. BOX. I do not know that he said it would set aside all of it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Of course he can elaborate on that. I do not know what he had reference to.

Mr. JUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas. Mr. HUDSPETH. What is the difference between this bill and the Kendrick-Kenyon or Gronna bill which passed the Senate at the last session?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do not think there is any material difference at all, except that the bill which passed the Senate provided for the creation of a commission of three men to be appointed by the President to administer this law, and the present bill provides that the law shall be administered by the Secretary of Agriculture. I think that is a wise provision, and the reason for it is that the Secretary of Agriculture now has in the Bureau of Animal Industry, as I believe the hearings showed, about 800 men in the stockyards, 400 men in Chicago alone, enforcing the provisions of the pure food act which relate to meat inspection, and they have men in every packer's plant in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KINCHELOE. May I have three minutes more?

Mr. JACOWAY. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more. Mr. KINCHELOE. First and foremost, if you appoint a commission of three men you do not know whom you are going to They have no responsibility outside of their own duties. If this duty is devolved upon the great Department of Agriculture, it is only one of the hundreds of duties of that department, and naturally it will be the ambition of the Secretary of Agriculture not to destroy business, but to assist business in every way possible.

Mr. HUDSPETH. As a regulatory measure, regulating the packers, is this measure as strong as the Kendrick-Kenyon or

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do not know what the difference is,

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

RAYBURN. Does the gentleman think the packers would have withdrawn the opposition that they had expressed to the Gronna bill, and that the packer banks and some men who had borrowed money from those banks would have withdrawn their opposition to this bill, if the only difference had been that of the commission?

Mr. KINCHELOE. All I know about it is what I have learned from the hearings that I have attended since I have been a member of this committee, and everyone who represented the packers said substantially the same thing. Mr. Wilson, of the Wilson Packing Co., came himself, and I will say that I think he is one of the highest class men in the business, and I think he knows more about it than any of them.

Mr. RAYBURN. The packers know whom to send when they send him. He is a man of great ability.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes; I think he has more knowledge of the packing business than any of them. But they all had representatives here, and they all said that their main objec-tion to regulation in any bill was the question as to whose hands the regulation should be placed in; and not only the packers but the live-stock men and the farmers' organizations, all of them, according to my recollection, agreed that it was better to lodge this power in the Department of Agriculture than in any other department of the Government.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas. Mr. BLACK. As I understand it, the duties of these employees of the Bureau of Animal Industry are to inspect carcasses and food products and by-products with a view to determining whether or not they are sound and wholesome.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Under the present law.

Mr. BLACK. One provision of this bill virtually reenacts the interstate commerce law and makes it applicable to livestock yards.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Regulating fares, charges, rates, and so forth?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Will not that be a very different sort of duty from that of inspecting carcasses and determining upon their soundness and wholesomeness, and so forth?

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman refers to the personnel of the employees?

Mr. BLACK. In other words, can the employees in the Bureau of Animal Industry possibly fill the dual position of regulating rates and charges under provisions very similar to those carried in the interstate commerce act and also perform the duty of inspecting carcasses to see whether they are sound and wholesome?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Probably the present personnel could not, but I take it that the Secretary of Agriculture administering the law would delegate those qualified to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to state that there was a tacit agreement that the time should be divided between those who favored the bill and the opposition. So far the opposition has occupied 30 minutes. The gentleman from [Mr. HAUGEN], chairman of the committee, has used 111 minutes and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Jacoway], of the minority, has used 43 minutes, and the opposition has so far used 30 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. If the Chair will pardon me, several gentlemen are inquiring about the time. They thought when we went into the consideration of the bill there was as much of an agreement as could be made that the debate would run along all the afternoon. The gentleman from Iowa has been recognized for an hour and the gentleman from Arkansas has been recognized for an hour, and I want to ask if it is the intention of the Chair to recognize these gentlemen for an additional hour, or some other Member in opposition?

The CHAIRMAN. There was no definite agreement in regard to that matter. The Chair concluded that it would be better to recognize the chairman of the committee and a representative of the minority of the committee, and that they could so arrange it as to give the opposition time.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That was a part of the agreement, Mr. Chairman, where there was no limitation that such time should be controlled by the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HAUGEN. I said that we would divide the time equally between those in favor of the bill and those against. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr.

MADDENT

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent on behalf of my colleague [Mr. RAINEY], a member of this committee, who was obliged to go home on account of sickness in his family, that he may extend his remarks in the RECORD on

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. RAINEY] may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD on this bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce] is against Government control of business. He does not believe the Government has any right to annihilate a business, and he does not believe that the Government has any right to control one, according to his argument. The gentleman from Massachusetts has a different opinion now from what he has had in years past and what others of his friends in New England have had. I might call his attention to some of the constitutional provisions. The thirteenth amendment not only controlled a business but annihilated it. It put the slavery business out of the United States, and I approve of that amendment, although I am a southern Democrat. It has my hearty approval. Coming down a little later to the eighteenth amendment, we put the liquor business out of existence. And I heartily approve of that. But it seems that in Massachusetts alone there comes a protest against regulating and putting out of existence certain businesses. Because I note that day before yesterday our distinguished and beloved Speaker introduced in the House the following resolution, to wit:

[H. J. Res. 131, 67th Congress, 1st session. In the House of Representatives. May 24 1921. Mr. GILLETT introduced the following joint resolution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.]

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein). That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution of the United States, namely: " ARTICLE XVIII.

"Section 1. Polygamy and polygamous cohabitation shall not exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

"Sec. 2. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

Note, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that he designates it "Article XVIII" of the Constitution. We now have already in the Constitution an "Article XVIII," which is the eighteenth or national prohibition amendment.

I am in favor of that. But I am not in favor that even now our distinguished Speaker should do away with our prohibition amendment and substitute therefor an amendment prohibiting polygamy [laughter], though I am strongly against polygamy. I do not know why the Speaker of the House of Representatives apparently should be against our prohibition amendment simply because it regulates and absolutely controls private business to the extent of annihilating it, although he comes from the same State as does the other gentleman, Mr. Luce. Why, there is plenty of room in the Constitution for both these amendments. I hope that the distinguished Speaker of this House will reintroduce this resolution and change his Article XVIII to Article XX and then it will not supplant the prohibition amendment. We then will have them both. But that is not what I got up here to say. [Laughter.]

One of the employees of our Government Printing Office not long ago appealed to me, stating that he was forced to join a labor union down there in order to hold his position; that every other man who works down there with him is forced, after they come there from the civil service, to join the union or they can not continue to hold their jobs; that they have been assessed 5 per cent of their salary, and lately they have been assessed another 10 per cent by the union to maintain the strike now in the United States, and he says that it is more than he can stand, and he wants to know whether if he refused to pay the assessment and they kicked him out of the union and made him lose his job if Congress would stand behind him and help him hold the job.

I want to say right here that I greatly admire and respect the present Public Printer, who deserves great credit for what he is doing. I think a lot of him. He is bringing about lots of worthy reforms in the Public Printing Office. He is a splendid gentleman. I take my hat off to him. I wrote him to find out whether or not the state of affairs complained of by one of his employees would be permitted to exist in that department, and here is his letter:

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC PRINTER, Washington, May 25, 1921.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON, House of Representatives.

My Dear Mr. Blanton: I am pleased to acknowledge receipt of your letters of May 13 and 24, asking to be advised as to whether the Government Printing Office is run on the "open-shop" basis and whether an order was issued by the President making this office an "open shop." I regret very much that owing to the demand on my time by important investigations and personal illness during the past week I have been unable until now to comply with your request. I trust, therefore, that you will pardon my delay in this instance.

Every position in the Government Printing Office, except that of the Public Printer, his private secretary, and certain laborers employed under an Executive order during the war, is under the civil service. Accordingly, with these exceptions, every appointment has to be made from lists of persons who have passed the competitive examinations as held under the direction of the Civil Service Commission. As you undoubtedly know, the eligible list is made up by the Civil Service Commission in the order of the ratings made on the examinations, and the appointing officer has to make his selection from groups of three in the order that the names appear on such eligible list.

As far as I know, and to the best of my belief, the question of whether a person belongs to a labor organization or not is not considered by the Civil Service Commission in conducting its examinations or preparing its lists of eligible applicants for positions in the Government service. No inquiry is made by this office as to whether persons eligible for appointment are or are not members of labor organizations. Their eligibility for appointment is determined solely by the civil-service requirements. Nor is there any rule that an employee shall or shall not belong to a labor organization in order to retain his position in the Government Printing Office. If by the term "open shop" you mean a place where a person may be employed regardless of whether he belongs to a labor organization, then I presume the Government Printing Office and the civin of the various religious and fraternal organizations as we have to join the various religious and fraternal organizations that may seem beneficial to us.

In regard to an Executive order making the Government Printing Office an "open shop," I presume that you refer to the action of President Roosevelt which was prompted by the so-called "Miller case" in 1903. W. A. Miller, who was a bindery foreman in the Government Printing Office, was reported to have been dismissed at that time by the then Public Printer following Miller's expulsion from the local union of bookbinders. The Civil Service Commission refused to recognize Miller's expulsion as a just ground for his removal from the Government Printing Office, was reported to have been dismissed at that time by the then Public Pr that he is a Protestant or a Catholic, a Jew or a gentile, as being for or against him.

"In the communications sent me by various labor organizations protesting against the retention of Miller in the Government Printing Office, the grounds alleged are twofold: (1) That he is a nonunion man. (2) That he is not personally fit. The question of his personal fitness is one to be settled in the routine of administrative detail, and can not be allowed to conflict with or to complicate the larger question of governmental discrimination for or against him or any other man because he is or is not a member of a union. This is the only question now before me for decision, and as to this my decision is final."

Trusting that this statement furnishes the informations.

Trusting that this statement furnishes the information you desire, beg to remain, Very sincerely, yours,

GEORGE H. CARTER, Public Printer.

Therefore I want to say not only to the employee in the Government Printing Office who wrote me the letter but also every other employee of this Government, in the Government Printing Office and in all other departments, that, according to this ruling of President Roosevelt, which I take it will be upheld by the present great President of the United States, a man does not have to join a union or any other kind of organization against his will in order to hold his position as a Government employee, for we are to maintain the "open shop" in the Nation's Capital, and if there are employees in Washington in the Government Printing Office or elsewhere who think that the assessment of 10 per cent and 5 per cent or any other per cent is too great a burden upon them, they have a perfect right to get out of that union and still hold their jobs, and I believe get out of that union and still hold their jobs, and I believe President Harding will stand behind them and protect them just as the great Theodore Roosevelt stood behind and protected this man Miller. [Applause.]

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Black].

Mr. Black. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Tincher] in discussing this bill said that its regulatory provisions were so reasonable and framed in such way that he provisions were so reasonable and framed in such way that he thought there would be no serious objection to the bill. There is one provision in the bill that I think goes very far, and I think if Members will study it they will see that it goes very far in this respect, and I believe even the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Tinchea] will question the propriety of the Federal Government going that far in a regulatory measure entirely new and concerning a field of endeavor not hitherto undertaken in this day of multiplicity of regulations.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.
Mr. JACOWAY. If the people to be affected by the portion of which the gentleman complains do not complain, does the gentleman still think we are going too far?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; and I will show the gentleman why I think so. When the Esch-Cummins railroad bill was passed it carried a provision which gave the Interstate Commerce Commission power to alter, modify, or set aside a rate which it held to be a burden on interstate commerce, even though the rate applied wholly to traffic between points within the same The present bill virtually copies that section of the Esch-Cummins law and makes it applicable to stockyards. Let us compare the two sections and see if the present bill does not go just as far as the Esch-Cummins law goes as to railroads, though we have been regulating railroad rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission for many years. We are just beginning the experiment of Federal regulation of stockyards, and, in my judgment, it is going entirely too far as an initial step to give the Secretary of Agriculture at the very outset power to set aside orders of State tribunals. Here is the clause in the Esch-Cummins law to which I refer:

Whenever in any such investigation the commission, after full hearing, finds that any such rate, fare, charge, classification, regulation, or practice causes any undue or unreasonable advantage, preference, or prejudice as between persons or localities in intrastate commerce, on the one hand, and interstate or foreign commerce, on the other hand, or any undue, unreasonable, or unjust discrimination against interstate or foreign commerce, which is hereby forbidden and declared to be unlawful, it shall prescribe the rate, fare, or charge or the maximum or minimum or maximum and minimum thereafter to be charged, and the classification, regulation, or practice thereafter to be observed in such manner as in its judgment will remove such advantage, preference, prejudice, or discrimination. Such rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices shall be observed while in effect by the carriers parties to such proceedings affected thereby, the law of any State or the decision or order of any State authority to the contrary notwithstanding. standing which I have just read and inserted it as a clause in this bill:

Let us see what section 311 of the present law on page 22 of the bill provides, and I think Members will agree that the committee has virtually copied the section of the Esch-Cummins law which I have just read and inserted it as a clause in this bill:

Sec. 311. Whenever in any investigation under the provisions of this title, or In any investigation instituted by petition of the stockyard owner or market agency concerned, which petition is hereby authorized to be filed, the Secretary after full hearing finds that any rate, charge, regulation, or practice of any stockyard owner or market agency, for or in connection with the receiving, marketing, feeding, holding, delivery, shipment, weighing, or handling, not in commerce, of live stock, causes any undue or unreasonable advantage, prejudice, or preference as between persons or localities in intrastate commerce in live stock, on the one hand, and interstate or foreign commerce in live stock, on the other hand, or any undue, unjust, or unreasonable discrimination against interstate or foreign commerce in live stock, which is hereby forbidden and declared to be unlawful, the Secretary shall prescribe the rate, charge, regulation, or practice thereafter to be observed, in such manner as, in his judgment, will remove such advantage, preference, or discrimination. Such rates, charges, regulations, or practices shall be observed while in effect by the stockyard owners or market agencies parties to such proceeding affected thereby, the law of any State or the decision or order of any State authority to the contrary notwithstanding.

It will be seen there that almost the exact language is here

It will be seen there that almost the exact language is here used as was used in the Esch-Cummins law with reference to There is a question in my mind, even railroad regulation. granting the advisability of placing the live-stock yards of the country under jurisdiction similar to the interstate commerce law, as to whether we want to go to the extent of providing that if any State regulatory body should fix a rate or charge which the Secretary of Agriculture should say created an undue preference to one of the State's own communities or which, in the opinion of the Secretary, placed an undue burden on inter-state commerce, that he should have the power to enter and fix a new rate, charge, practice, or fare and thereafter that that rate shall be the rate to be charged, the order or decision of any State authority to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. ASWELL. Will the gentleman state what present State law or authority this will conflict with?

Mr. BLACK. I am not advised as to that. We have 48 States, and I do not know what regulations they may have on this subject nor what they might want to put into effect in the future.

Mr. ASWELL, Does the State fix the charges on these stockyards?

Mr. BLACK. I confess I have not had time to look up all the State statutes on the subject, but that is not necessary in order for me to have an opinion as to the unwisdom of this provision. I would not favor putting into a bill of this kind, dealing with a new and untried field of regulation, a provision which will take away the power of the State to deal with purely intrastate transactions in the matter of these stockyards.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I would like to ask my colleague if he has changed his mind as to the interference of this bill with State affairs since the passage of the Esch-Cummins bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACK. I will ask for two additional minutes. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] Chair hears none.

Mr. BLACK. Well, I will say to the gentleman that I voted for the Cummins-Esch bill, and I am not undertaking at this point to discuss the provision in it which gives the Interstate Commerce Commission power to alter and change State rates, but certainly the gentleman will recognize that the two provisions deal with very different subjects. The railroads are for the most part now parts of large systems extending from State to State, and the tendency is for still further consolidations. There is no such condition as to stockyards. So far as I know, each stockyard operates wholly within a separate State. We have had the interstate commerce law a good many years, and it was many years before Congress deemed the situation as complicated enough to justify giving the Interstate Commerce Commission power to have any control over State rates.

Mr. HUDSPETH. But up until the Shreveport case it has never interfered with the making of intrastate rates.

Mr. BLACK. That is true, and the section of the Cummins-Esch law to which I have referred is simply declaratory of the law announced by the Supreme Court in the Shreveport case, but the Supreme Court has made no such declaration of law as to stockyards, and I question very seriously whether Congress has the power to go that far, even if it is deemed wise to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. HUDSPETH. I agree with my colleague that we should not on this bill either.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHAELSON]

Mr. MICHAELSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I desire to use the time allotted to me at this time in discussing House resolution 95, which I introduced May 20, asking for information from the Secretary of State and the Secretary of War relative to the spread of foreign propaganda in the United States prior to the declaration of war by the United States against Germany and asking investigation of charges made in public records and public prints and calling the attention of Congress first to a statement made by former Congressman Callaway February 9, 1917, appearing upon pages 2947 and 2948 of the Congressional Record, in which he made the charge that—

In March, 1915, the J. P. Morgan interests, the steel, shipbuilding, and powder interests, and their subsidiary organizations got together 12 men high up in the newspaper world and employed them to select the most influential newspapers in the United States and a sufficient number of them to control generally the policy of the daily press of the

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield? Mr. BLANTON. Would the gentleman like to have a quorum here? If so, I will get him one.

Mr. MICHAELSON. I do not desire it. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. It is a point of order I am making. It does not require his yielding.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope the gentleman will not do that. Mr. BLANTON. I will withdraw it, but I am not in sympathy with the gentleman's speech.

Mr. MICHAELSON. I thank you, sir.

Mr. MICHAELSON. I thank you, sir.

These 12 men worked the problem out by selecting 179 newspapers, and then began by an elimination process to retain only those necessary for the purpose of controlling the general policy of the daily press throughout the country. They found it was only necessary to purchase the control of 25 of the greatest papers. The 25 papers were agreed upon; emissaries were sent to purchase the policy, national and international, of these papers; an agreement was reached; the policy of the papers was bought, to be paid for by the month; an editor was furnished for each paper to properly supervise and edit information regarding the questions of preparedness, militarism, financial policies, and other things of national and international nature considered vital to the interests of the purchasers.

This contract is in existence at the present time, and it accounts for the news columns of the daily press of the country being filled with all sorts of preparedness arguments and misrepresentations as to the present condition of the United States Army and Navy, and the possibility and probability of the United States being attacked by foreign foes.

This policy also included the suppression of everything in opposition to the wishes of the interests served. The effectiveness of this scheme has been conclusively demonstrated by the character of stuff carried in the daily press throughout the country since March, 1915. They have resorted to anything necessary to commercialize public sentiment and sandhag the National Congress into making extravagant and wasteful appropriations for the Army and Navy under the false pretense that it was necessary. Their stock argument is that it is "patriotism." They are playing on every prejudice and passion of the American people.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order we have not a quorum. I think it is time we should stop all this mess and put it behind us, and I make a point of order that there is no quorum.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman kindly withdraw the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw it, as there are very few here

Mr. MICHAELSON. If the information and charges contained in Mr. Callaway's statement are true and can be proven, then the most heinous crime in the world's history was perpetrated upon the peace-loving American people, and while hostilities have ceased and peace is sought by nations hereto fore at war, the destruction and desolation, the sorrow and suffering, and the debt imposed by that war are more crushing than ever to the hopes, aspirations, progress, prosperity, and contentment of our people; and, if it be true and can be proven that this Nation's participation and other nations' continuance in the war was founded upon fraud, intrigue, falsity, conspiracy, or manipulation, as charged, then that truth should be published to the world in order to make it impossible to repeat that crime in the future and that the blessings of peace may be more confidently assured to afflicted humanity everywhere.

In addition to the information and charges filed by Congressman Callaway in the foregoing statement, M. Gabriel Hanotaux, formerly minister of foreign affairs of the Republic of France, in his Historie de la Guerre, 1914, book No. 107, page 54, states, in effect, that France was ready to make peace in the latter part of the year 1914, but was dissuaded from doing so by three Americans, namely, Robert Bacon, of the financial house of J. P. Morgan & Co., fiscal agents for the British Government; Myron T. Herrick; and William G. Sharp, and that these men represented to French officials that if France would continue the war that these three men would organize a propaganda to put the United States into the war on the side of the Allies, and M. Hanotaux further stated that the sum of money which was provided to good the United States into the war was too large even for American comprehension.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHAELSON. I will not yield.

In this connection the following memorable statement was made by one of these Americans to the author:

There are in America 50,000 persons who realize that it is inevitable for the United States to enter the war without delay on your side, But there are 100,000,000 Americans to whom the thought is strange. Our object is to reverse these figures and to turn the 50,000 into 100,000,000, We shall succeed.

The charges filed by Congressman Callaway and the statement made by M. Gabriel Hanotaux would indicate, if true, that there was a definite and widespread conspiracy operating in the United States to plunge the people of the United States into war, and I believe it to be the duty of Congress to make this investigation forthwith in the interest of the welfare and education of the American people, that present and future generations may have insight into the operations of governments, money powers, and commercial combines, whose intrigues and corruptions foster and precipitate war.

In addition to the charges filed by Congressman Callaway and the statement made by M. Gabriel Hanotaux, Sir Gilbert Parker, a well-known English writer, says in an article on "The United States and the war" in Harper's Magazine, March, 1918:

From August, 1914, there was a considerable percentage of the public who believed that the United States should, in the name of civilization, have officially resented the invasion of Belgium. Personally, I believe that it would have been extremely difficult for the United States to enter the war six months before she did. I was in the United States for some months on this trip. I have been from New York to San Francisco. I was at Washington when President Wilson dismissed Count Bernstorff, and heard him do so, and I am irmly convinced of this, that President Wilson committed his country to this war at the right moment, neither too soon nor too late. He had stopped up every avenue of attack by the pacifists, and jurists, and the pedants, and the pettifoggers.

Perhaps here I may be permitted to say a few words concerning my wown work since the beginning of the war.

* * Practically since the day war broke out between England and the Central Powers I became responsible for American publicity. I need hardly say that the scope of my department was very extensive and its activities widely ranged. Among the activities was a weekly report to the British cabinet on the state of American opinion, and constant touch with the permanent correspondents of American newspapers in England. I also frequently arranged for important public men in England to act for us by interviews in American newspapers; and among these distinguished people were Mr. Lloyd-George (the present prime minister), Viscount Grey, Mr. Baifour, Mr. Bonar Law, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Sir Edward Carson, Lord Robert Cecil, Mr. Walter Runciman (the lord chancellor), Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Lord Cromer, Will Crooks, Lord Curzon, Lord Gladstone, Lord Haldane, Mr. Henry James, Mr. John Redmond, Mr. Selfridge, Mr. Zangwill, Mrs. Humphrey Ward, and fully a hundred others.

Among other things, we supplied 300 newspapers in the smaller States of the United States with an English newspaper, which gives a weekly review and comment of the affairs of the war. We established connection with the man in the street through cinema pictures of the Army and Navy as well as through interviews, articles, pamphlets, etc., and by letters in reply to individual American critics, which were printed in the chief newspaper of the State in which they lived, and were copied in newspapers of other and neighboring States. We advised and stimulated many people to write articles; we thillized the friendly services and assistance of confidential friends; we had reports from important Americans constantly, and established association, by personal correspondence, with influential and eminent people of every profession in the United States, beginning with university and college presidents, professors, and scientific men and running through all the ranges of the population. We asked our friends and correspondents to arrange for speeches, debates, and lectures by American citizens, * * Resides an immense private correspondence with individuals, we had our documents and literature sent to great numbers of public libraries, Y. M. C. A. societies, universities, college, historical societies, clubs, and newspapers.

No formal investigation of these grave charges has ever been undertaken by the Congress of the United States to determine their truth or falsity. To allow them to go unchallenged is to cause serious reflection on the purpose of the United States in entering the war, as a result of which this Nation is bowed in the core the death property of the core the death of the core the core that the core the core that the core that the core the core that the co grief over the death, maining, and ruined health of hundreds of thousands of its young manhood, and the people of our country are burdened with an unprecedented national debt, with resulting high taxes and living costs unprecedented in magnitude and oppression.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, what does the gentleman think about it? He is indicting the whole American people.

Mr. MICHAELSON. If it is true and can be proven that it was possible to end the war soon after it started and before much damage had been done to the world and its people, and if that chance was, blocked by selfish financial interests with a slush fund beyond comprehension to buy manufactured propaganda to be used and spread to excite the minds of the American people and to put hate in their hearts, resulting finally in plunging this Nation into the war, with such awful consequences, not only the people of this country but the whole world should know it. If the charges are not true, then the people should know that.

If these charges are not true, is it not strange that virtually from the day war was declared in 1914, backed by the British Government, a British subject, Sir Gilbert Parker, on his own statement, seemingly all unbeknownst to our Government officials and our President, conducted this gigantic propaganda in our country to scientifically inculcate into the hearts of the American people a hate that would finally plunge them into the World War, particularly when we are still mindful of the fact that in the early spring of 1916 Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, while making a tour of the Middle States and the great upper Mississippi Valley to deliver his message to the American people and to enunciate the policies upon which they should stand at that hour, in statements and in numerous speeches repeatedly insisted that the American people and the American Nation should remain neutral not only in deed but in thought? In every one of these speeches the President again and again reiterated that good Americans would remain neutral and do nothing that might involve this great liberty-loving, peace-loving American people in this terrible conflagration. And yet, Mr. Chairman and Members of this House, Sir Gil-bert Parker states to the world under his signature that at the very moment the President of the United States, speaking for the American people, in behalf of the American people, and as the mouthpiece of the American people, was urging them to remain neutral, he-Parker-was spending British gold from one end of this Nation to the other for the purpose of driving this Republic into the quarrels of European monarchies.

If these charges are true, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, and in view of the warfare still going on in Europe at this very hour, then the American lives lost were sacrificed not on the altar of universal democracy and freedom but upon the blood-stained, sacrificial stone of inhuman avarice and greed, and if these charges be true we must come to the conclusion that the American people were duped by an unscrupulous combination of wealth that, through its kept literary harlots, seduced the noble patriotism of the American citizenry in order to enrich themselves. Let us not shrink from facing and demanding the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield? I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cable].

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, the decrees in the case of United States of America against Swift & Co. and others, pending in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in Equity No. 37623, have been referred to several times this afternoon. For the information of the Members of the House I ask the unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the Record an application and decree relating to Armour & Co. The decree is dated April 12, 1921. The application and decree of Swift & Co. are substantially the same. The plan and decree of Edward Morris and others is dated March 2, 1921. I am interested in the passage of the bill now before the House, and for that reason obtained these copies from the Attorney General's office.

Mr. BLACK. Reserving the right to object, how many pages does that cover?

Mr. CABLE. It will take at least two pages of the RECORD.
Mr. BLACK. I would not object to that. Of course, these decrees are numerous.

Mr. CABLE. It may be a little longer.
Mr. BLACK. I have no objection, if they do not constitute a whole book.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Reserving the right to object, I would say that the decrees of that date are not the decrees about which there was a controversy this afternoon.

Mr. CABLE. I will say to the gentleman that these are later decrees, relating to the ownership of the various stockyards of Swift and Armour, and relate to the terminals of these plants.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is that a decree or report?

Mr. CABLE. An application and a decree,

Mr. KINCHELOE. Of April 1 last? Mr. CABLE. Of April 12. It is later than the decree read in the House.

Mr. KINCHELOE. That is under the present Attorney Gen-

Mr. CABLE. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DEPOSIT OF STOCK.

These defendants, within 30 days from and after the date of the approval of this plan by the court, shall deliver to the Illinois Trust & Savings Bank, of Chicago, Ill., hereinafter referred to as the trust, company, all evidences of stock ownership in said stockyard companies above mentioned (which includes the interests of these defendants in stockyard terminal railroad companies owned by said stockyard companies) upon negotiable receipts of said trust company therefor, except such of said stocks as may be now pledged. As to any of such stock as may be now pledged, the defendants will execute and deliver to said trust company an order signed by the defendant owning such pledged stocks, directing the pledgee thereof to deliver the certificates of stock held by the pledgee to said trust company in exchange for its negotiable receipt. In the event that any pledgee shall fail to exchange such pledged stock for the negotiable receipt of said trust company and such pledged stock shall thereafter be released from said pledge, the pledgor thereof shall, upon such release, deliver the certificate of stock to said trust company in exchange for its negotiable receipt.

Said depositary shall enter its appearance in this cause so as to be subject to the jurisdiction of the court in the discharge of its duties as such depositary.

In connection with deposit of said shares of stock defendants shall enter into an escrow agreement with said trust company, the terms of which shall be in accordance with the provisions of this plan and the decree entered herein on the 27th day of February, 1920, and all such stock delivered to the said trust company shall be held by it in escrow thereunder until disposed of by said trust company as hereinafter provided.

as may be requested of it either by the Actorney General of by these defendants.

As and when any of said stock shall have been sold pursuant to this plan and the sale approved by the court, the depositary shall, in exchange for its receipt, deliver the proper certificates of stock to the purchaser thereof.

If any pledgee of stock accepting the negotiable receipt of the said

If any pledgee of stock accepting the negotiable receipt of the said trust company shall find it necessary to foreclose the loan for which such receipt is held as collateral, said trust company shall upon proof thereof and surrender of said receipt, deliver to such pledgee the certificate or certificates of stock represented thereby, and said defendants will request the pledgee to give to the court and the Attorney General full information as to its final disposition of such stock.

Upon the sale of all of said stock or upon termination of this plan, by order of the court or otherwise, said trust company shall be discharged of all its powers and duties under this plan, and all certificates of stock or other evidence of ownership then held by said trust company hereunder shall be forthwith returned to the defendant depositing the same therewith upon surrender of the receipts issued by said depositary therefor.

The Armour and Swift groups of defendants assume the duty and obligation of making provision for the compensation of and expenses incurred by said trust company in the performance of its duties hereunder and in such manner as that said compensation and expenses will not be or in any way constitute a lien upon either the certificates of stock deposited with it or the negotiable receipts issued against the same.

INDIVIDUAL TRUSTEES.

Upon the approval of this plan by the court, these defendants will execute and deliver to Henry W. Anderson, of Richmond, Va., and George Sutherland, of Salt Lake City, Utah, as trustees, powers of attorney, irrevocable during the time this plan remains in effect authorizing said trustees jointly to vote all of the stock of said defendants in said last-mentioned stockyard companies and stockyard terminal railroad companies or such portion thereof as from time to time shall remain unsold pursuant to this plan.

Said individual trustees shall be charged with the duty of acquainting themselves with the conduct and operation of said stockyard companies and stockyard terminal railroads, but shall not vote said stock so as to interfere with the management and conduct of said public stockyard market companies or the stockyards operated by them or said stockyard terminal railroads unless both of said trustees shall be of the opinion that said stockyards or stockyard terminal railroads, or some of them, are being used in violation of the antitrust laws of the United States or the decree berein.

In case said trustees shall disagree as to the voting of said stock, they or either of them, or the petitioner, or the defendants, may apply to the court for an order directing how said stock shall be voted, with the right of either party hereto to be heard and to except to the order of the court and to appeal therefrom.

It shall be the duty of said trustees to keep themselves informed as to the progress made in the sale of the stock in accordance with this plan and report the same to the court as and when directed by it or upon their own initiative, and with such recommendations and suggestions as they may deem proper.

The said trustees in the performance of their duties hereunder shall their own initiative, and with such recommendations and suggestions as they may deem proper.

The said trustees in the performance of their duties hereunder shall not be liable except for willful misconduct on their part.

Said trustees shall be subject to removal by the court, in its discretion. If any vacancy in said trusteeship occurs, because of the removal or otherwise of said Henry W. Anderson, the court shall appoint as his successor a suitable person upon the nomination of the petitioner; and if such vacancy shall occur because of the removal or otherwise of said George Sutherland the court shall appoint as his successor a suitable person upon the nomination of the Armour and Swift groups of defendants.

Each individual trustee shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum and his reasonable and proper expenses, to be approved by the court and paid by the Armour and Swift groups of defendants.

Upon the sale of all of said stock, or upon the termination of this

Upon the sale of all of said stock, or upon the termination of this plan, by order of the court or otherwise, the said individual trustees shall be discharged of all their powers and duties under this plan.

REPORT OF SALES.

REPORT OF SALES.

These defendants will proceed with due diligence to sell the aforesaid stock owned by them as hereinbefore detailed, and they will make reports of sales to the court from time to time, furnishing copies thereof to the depositary and to the individual trustees, stating in said reports the name or names of said proposed purchaser or purchasers, the number of shares proposed to be purchased by them, the price to be paid, and the terms and conditions of such proposed gurchasers setting forth that such proposed purchaser is making the purchase for himself and not for any of the defendants in this action, and that none of said defendants has any interest whatever in said purchase; in what manner, if any, said proposed purchaser is connected with or related to, by blood or marriage, any of the individual defendants in this action, and what connection, if any, he has with, or what interest, if any, he has in any of the corporation defendants in this action, and also that he is not acting for or on behalf of any of the defendants or in concert, agreement, or understanding with any of such defendants. The form of such affidavit is hereto annexed as a part hereof.

No sales of said stock will be consummated until the same have been approved by the court.

If before sale of the said stock of any of the public stockyard companies hereinbefore mentioned a reorganization of such company shall be effected by a majority of the stockholders thereof whereby it shall become necessary and desirable to exchange any shares of the stock of said company so reorganized for shares or securities of any such reorganized corporation, the defendants shall have the right to make such exchanges, and the shares or securities received in exchange shall thereafter be subject to all the provisions of this plan for sale by these defendants as were the shares of stock surrendered in lieu thereof.

Each purchaser of stock in stockyard companies wherein defendants in this cause hold controlling interest shall agree as a condition of the purchase and holding of said stock by himself, his personal representatives, or assigns that said stock by himself, his personal representatives, or assigns that said stock shall be voted to effectuate the provisions of paragraph 13 of the consent decree herein entered.

In the event that stock shall be sold by these defendants on the instalment plan, the purchaser thereof shall have the right to vote, either in person or by proxy, said share or shares of stock, provided such proxy shall not be given to or voted by any of these defendants.

These defendants will, upon the request of the Attorney General of the United States, furnish him any information which he may request as to their progress in the sale and disposition of said stock and generally in the execution of this plan.

TIME FOR COMPLETION OF SALES.

These defendants and each of them will proceed with due diligence, in the manner herein provided and in accordance with the previsions of this plan, to sell their respective interests in the hereinabove described stockyard market companies and stockyard terminal milroad companies at fair and reasonable value, and in case the same can not be so disposed of within one year from the date of the approval of this plan said defendants may make a showing to this court of the diligence used and the best offers received for said stocks and may obtain from the court such extensions of time as the court may prescribe for the disposition of the same.

The approval of this plan shall not be construed so as to deprive these defendants of the right to petition or move the court at any time for a modification hereof.

TERMINATION.

The court shall have the power to terminate this plan, or any part hereof, on being convinced, after hearing, that these defendants are not proceeding with promptness and vigor in disposing of said stocks hereunder.

Wherefore these defendants pray that an order be entered in this cause approving the plan herein set forth for divesting these defendants of their ownership or interests as aforesaid in said public stockyard market companies and said stockyard terminal railroads.

Dated at Washington, D. C., this 12th day of April, A. D. 1921.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this - day of --, 1921. Notary Public.

[In the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, holding an equity court. United States of America v. Swift & Co. and others. In equity No. 37623.]

To the said court in chancery sitting:

equity No. 37623.]

To the said court in chancery sitting:
Your petitioners, Edward Morris, Nelson Morris, C. H. MacFarlane, L. H. Heymann, and H. A. Timmins, respectfully show unto the court:
That they are willing to accept in principle the plan approved by the Federal courts in the case of United States of America v. The Union Pacific Raiiroad Co. et al., and that the plan submitted herewith follows the Union Pacific plan, both in letter and spirit, in so far as the circumstances of this case will permit. If there is any provision in the Union Pacific plan applicable to this case which has not been incorporated in the plan submitted herewith, then such provision may be inserted and considered as a part of said plan.

In disapproving the second plan filed by petitioners this honorable court did not point out wherein such plan was or was not acceptable, but these petitioners submit that this plan squarely meets and contains the four conditions expressed by this honorable court as necessary for any future plan, to wit, (a) no consolidation, (b) an early and complete divestment by petitioners of their holdings. (c) complete control by the court of holdings pending divestment, (d) termination of plan by the court if petitioners do not proceed hereunder with promptness and vigor.

This plan concedes to the Government certain substantial rights not granted by the consent decree heretofore entered, and which consent decree devises and fixes the rights of the parties in this case. This is done solely that this matter may be wound up speedily and agreeably. If this plan is not approved, then these petitioners are not to be considered as waiving any of their rights under said decree or as extending the terms and provisions thereof.

The holdings of petitioners to be disposed of in this case (excepting only the Crescent City Stockyards & Slaughterhouse Co., Ltd.) are correctly set out in Exhibit A, attached hereto, expressly referred to and made a part hereof as fully as if copied herein, and a copy of the decree of cour

THE PLAN.

1. That a reputable and responsible trust company be appointed by this court to receive and hold as custodian and depositary of the court, subject to the terms and provisions of the consent decree entered in this case on February 27, 1920, all of the capital stock set out and described in Exhibit A, said trust company to be hereinafter designation.

described in Exhibit A, said trust company to be hereinafter designated as trustee.

2. All of the said capital stock shall, as soon as practicable, be assigned and delivered to the trustee hereunder.

3. The trustee shall execute, issue, and deliver to the petitioners receipts or certificates of interest respecting the shares of capital stock transferred to it hereunder by the petitioners respectively.

4. The trustee shall collect and receive all cash dividends declared by the different companies whose stock is deposited with the trustee hereunder, appertaining to the shares so held, which should be payable to the trustee as the registering stockholder entitled to such dividends. Such accumulative dividends shall go to and become the property of the purchasers of the capital stock on which such dividends have been declared.

Any interest realized or allowed by the trustee upon funds paid to it declared.

Any interest realized or allowed by the trustee upon funds paid to it as dividends shall be applied to the payment of the compensation of the trustee and the expenses of the administration of the trust, and any balance thereof remaining unpaid after applying such interest shall be paid by the petitioners.

5. The petitioners shall have no right to vote such capital stock or any part thereof from the time it is turned over to the trustee hereunder, but such stock may be voted by the trustee under order of this honorable court.

6. These petitioners will, upon the approval of this plan by this honorable court, immediately resign all offices and positions which they may hold in the stockyard companies or stockyard terminal companies involved in this case.

bonorable court, immediately resign all offices and positions which they may hold in the stockyard companies or stockyard terminal companies involved in this case.

7. The trustee shall be entitled to reasonable compensation, the amount thereof to be approved by the court, for all services rendered by it hereunder, which compensation with all other expenses incurred hereunder shall be approved by the court and paid as provided in section 4 hereof.

8. Within 30 days after the approval of this plan by this honorable court the trustee will file with the clerk of the court a report setting forth the amount of capital stock turned over to it by the petitioners, and at monthly intervals thereafter the trustee shall file with the clerk of the court a report showing the aggregate amount of stock certificates of capital stock disposed of by the petitioners hereunder and from time to time upon the request of the Attorney General of the United States the trustee shall furnish him with any information which he may require relating to the carrying out of this decree.

9. The trustee shall be accountable for its action hereunder only in proceedings in this cause, and any order of court entered upon notice to it and to these petitioners shall be full, protection to the trustee for any action which it may take pursuant thereto, and any action so taken by the trustee shall be inding upon these petitioners. The trustee shall not be liable to anyone for deferring to take any action until instructed by the court.

10. The trustee is hereby authorized to treat all funds deposited hereunder as general deposits and to allow interest thereon.

11. The trustee shall be subject to removal by the court in its discretion, and in the event of such removal the court shall appoint another trustee.

Petitioners pray that the foregoing plan be approved and that the decree of this court be entered to carry the same into effect.

EDWARD MORRIS. NELSON MORRIS. NELSON MORRIS.
D. H. MACFARLANE.
L. H. HEYMANN,
H. A. TIMMINS.

By M. W. Borders, Solicitor for Petitioners.

[In the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. United States of America, petitioner, v. Swift & Co. et al., defendants. In Equity No. 37623.]

This cause coming on to be heard upon the petition of Edward Morris, Nelson Morris, C. M. Macfarlane, L. H. Heymann, and H. A. Timmins, filed February 8, 1921, submitting a plan for the sale and disposition of their capital stock and holdings in stockyards and stockyard terminal railways under the decree filed herein on the 27th day of February, 1920, now upon said petition the objections of the petitioner thereto filed herein on the 16th day of February, 1921, and upon oral argument of said plan and objections had herein on the 24th and 28th days of February, 1921, whereupon the matter was taken under advisement and npon due consideration thereof it is on this 2d day of March, 1921, Ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said plan be, and the same is hereby, approved: Provided, however, That no sale of more than 250 shares of any of the stock mentioned in said plan shall be made without first giving to the petitioner notice of such proposed sale and not then without the approval of the court, if within five clear days after the receipt of said notice by the petitioner it shall file objections to such proposed sale; and further

Ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the defendants shall not consummate any sale of any of said stock, irrespective of the amounts thereof, without first filing in court in this cause an affidavit of the actual purchaser of said stock, which affidavit shall be entitled in this cause, setting forth that said purchaser is making the purchase for himself and not for any of the defendants in this action; that none of said defendants has any interest whatever in said purchase; that said purchaser is not in any manner connected with or related to, by blood or marriage, any of the individual defendants in this action, and that he has no connection with or interest in any of the corporation defendants in this action; and further

Ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that the said defendants, and each of them, shall proceed with due diligence to sell their respective interests at their fair and reasonable value, and in case some can not be so disposed of within one year from date hereof, said defendants shall make a showing to this court of the diligence used and the best offers received for said stocks, and may obtain from the court such extension of time as the court may prescribe for the disposition of same or any part thereof not disposed of within said time, in accordance with the provisions of said plan; and further

Ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said plan is further modified so that it shall provide that after making its report within 30 days from the date of the entry of this order the trustee need not report every 30 days thereafter, but must report only when sales are made or when requested to make report either by the court or the Attorney General; and further

Ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the Munsey Trust Co., in the requested to make report closes and further and further Ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the Munsey Trust Co., in the District of Columbia, is hereby appointed to act as trustee herein.

The annexed form of affidavit is hereby approved.

I am not acting for or on behalf of any of the defendants or of any of the stockholders of the corporation defendants or in concert, agreement, or understanding with any of them. Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that a point of order was made, although there are others who desire to go on this evening if such a point should not be made. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Towner, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. FAIRFIELD, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence on account of important business.

EXCLUSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. What is the parliamentary procedure by which remarks, delivered in the Committee of the Whole House, that do not come within the rule as reflecting on any individual, but reflect on the dignity and honor of the country, may be stricken out in the House? Does it simply require a motion or does it require a resolution? I will state that my inquiry is prompted by the fact that while we were sitting in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union this afternoon we were treated to one of the most scandalous, if not—

Mr. BLANTON. Treasonable—
Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will not use that language. I will say a most disgraceful reflection on the course the American Government and American people pursued during the World War that has lately come to an end. If there is no way under the rules of this House by which it can protect itself and the dignity and the honor of the country from such a slimy, slanderous, disgraceful, outrageous assault as was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHAELSON]-and that language is used only because parliamentary law requires its use-if there is no way by which the House and the country can be protected from these outrageous slanders on its dignity and its honor, there ought to be some way by which the House can exclude from its Record this slimy exudation [applause] of one who is not worthy to sit in this Chamber.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not a parliamen-

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I move that the remarks delivered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHAELSON] in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be excluded from the RECORD. That will raise a parliamentary in-

The SPEAKER. Of course, if no point of order is made-Mr. HAUGEN. The point of no quorum was made.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order. I do not know what the motion is. The Speaker suggested a point of order would lie, and so I make it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks whether it was in order or not, and the Chair said it was in order if no point of order

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. A point of order that has no point is no point of order.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, it seems that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Connains], my colleague, was merely trying to ascertain what the procedure would be, in order that he might preserve his right to-day to move to strike the remarks from the RECORD. The Chair, of course, will take cognizance of it, even in the absence of a quorum, even if the point of order is made. My colleague was merely undertaking to preserve whatever right he had at this time to protect the RECORD against the remarks that might be made against the honor of the Nation. That is what I understood the nature of his inquiry to the Chair to be.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the only time such action could be taken would be before the RECORD is printed to-morrow.

Mr. GARNER. That is what occurred to me, and I was thinking if they made a point of no quorum, and an adjournment was taken, there would be no chance to protect the RECORD against the statements made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHAELSON].

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, is it not true that under the rules of the House the Speaker has jurisdiction to control the RECORD, and in case a point of order is made can exercise the right to withhold those remarks until the House can take action in that regard? The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the Speaker has such control of the Record as would justify him in keeping a speech out of the RECORD.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 27, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

NAVAL BASES ON PACIFIC COAST.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the Record a few only of many telegrams in the nature of expressions of opinion of citizens of California concerning the naval program, the subject matter under discussion. The telegrams which I ask to have printed in the RECORD urge immediate action by the United States in approving preparations recommended by the Navy Department in the establishment of naval bases on the Pacific coast, together with the enlargement of bases already in operation.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the Record, as follows:

OAKLAND, CALIF., May 26, 1921.

Hon. Samuel M. Shortridge, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We feel very much concerned over recent action in Senate in respect to naval development on the Pacific. Alameda item should not be killed by the false charge that it is a real-estate deal. This site was selected by the various naval commissions. It was given to the Government by the city of Alameda on approval of State legislature. The only adjoining lands affected belong to the University of California. We feel that it is proper to insist that you make every effort to have a reconsideration on the ground that all things essential to the defense of the Nation should be given first consideration.

San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, by George C. Boardman, vice president; Livermore Chamber of Commerce; Hayward Chamber of Commerce, by A. W. Beam, president; Oakland Merchants Exchange, by I. H. Spiro, president; Pleasanton Chamber of Commerce, by C. Letham, president; Central Labor Council of Alameda County, by E. S. Hurley, president William A. Spencer, secretary; Building Trades Council of Alameda County, by S. J. Donohue; Oakland Chamber of Commerce, by J. H. King, president.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., May 17, 1921.

Hon. S. M. Shortridge, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Highland Park Chamber of Commerce, Los Angeles, Calif., requests you stand without compromise for full naval program favoring Pacific coast, for its protection and development.

L. V. Shephard, Secretary.

LOS ANGELES, CALIF., May 19, 1921.

Hon. Samuel M. Shortridge, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

As commander of the United Spanish War Veterans of the State of California, I respectfully urge your support for adequate appropriations for needed naval bases on the Pacific coast as set forth in the report of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives.

R. Morgan Galerette,

Commander Department of California,

607 Citizens' National Bank Building.

Los Angeles, Camber Senator Samuel M. Shortridge, Senate, Washington, D., C.:

We, Southern California Council, Daughters of the American Revolution, in regular monthly session assembled, do by unanimous vote respectfully urge your honorable body to approve without delay the appropriations recommended for the construction of needed naval bases on the Pacific coast as set forth in the reports of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mrs. W. H. Anderson,
Mrs. Lyman Stooket, Vice Regent,
Mrs. W. E. Labry, Secretary,
Mrs. J. F. Kent, Committee.

Miss Helen Wing.

Calif., May 19, 1921.

Senator Samuel M. Shortridge, Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: We, the Los Angeles Federation, Tenth District, California Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations, representing 20,600 men and women of Los Angeles, in executive board session this 18th day of May, voted to petition your honorable body to approve without delay the appropriations recommended for construction of needed naval bases on Pacific coast as set forth in report of joint committee of Senate and House of Representatives.

Very sincerely, yours,

Mrs. E. Flytcher, Scott.

Mrs. E. FLETCHER SCOTT, Corresponding Secretary.

WORLD WAR VETERANS, VETERANS OF ALL ALLIED NATIONS, Long Beach, Calif., May 16, 1921.

The Kitchener Post, World War Veterans, in meeting assembled, unanimously adopted the following resolution: That—Whereas we veterans of the World War, fully alive to the horrors and devastation caused in the great struggle, believe that at this period of the world's affairs the greatest surety of peace is to be prepared against aggression, and in view thereof would earnestly urge that the representatives of this people in the legislative halls in Washington unite in a vigorous effort to carry out the present coast-defense program and keep the Pacific Fleet intact on this coast.

That this resolution be forwarded to our representatives in Washington, with the assurance that we to a man will support them in this determination, and if necessary, again go over the top.

On the same evening this resolution was thrown on the screen at Loew's State Theater, which held a capacity house, and on a vote being called it was adopted unanimously.

On behalf of the World War Veterans, Kitchener Post, Long Beach.

Edward P. Balley, Commander.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I have also, Mr. President, a great

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I have also, Mr. President, a great many other telegrams and letters which I ask merely to file and to have noted in the RECORD. They likewise come from citizens of California and are along the same line as those printed in the RECORD, expressive of the views of the senders touching the naval program.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the telegrams will be received and lie on the table.

The petitions, memorials, letters, and telegrams presented by Mr. Shortridge were from the following citizens of the State of California, urging immediate action by Congress in approving preparations recommended by the Navy Department in the establishment of naval bases on the Pacific coast, with the enlargement of bases already in operation:

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 4) proposing to create a joint commission of agricultural inquiry, which shall consist of five Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate and five Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker, reported it without amendment.

PRESIDENT HARDING'S ADDRESS AT HOBOKEN, N. J.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, on Monday of this week it was my privilege to accompany the President to four different gatherings in New York City and vicinity, where he delivered addresses which, in my humble opinion, will rank with the public utterances of any President of the United States. The most notable one of these, to my mind, was that delivered at Hoboken, where he attended the funeral exercises for 5,000 soldiers who made the supreme sacrifice in the Great World War. He spoke in the presence of the dead, and his address was the most inspiring it has ever been my privilege to hear. I was deeply impressed by it and have read it over many times since. I feel that it ought to be preserved in the records of this body, and I ask therefore that unanimous consent be granted for printing the address in the Congressional Record of to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I am not going to object, but I think following that, because it was a very splendid address, there should be incorporated in the Record the speech of Col. George Harvey that he made in London recently, where he took issue with the President as to the reasons for our going into the war. So I couple with the Senator's request a request for unanimous consent that Col. Harvey's speech be printed in the RECORD also.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator may make his own request for that if he desires

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the request of the Senator from New York is not an amendable proposition and must be considered separately. there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The President's address is as follows:
"Officers and veterans of the American Army: I have come to-day thinking that perhaps I can give some slight expression to that counterpart in the heart of the Republic, to the thing that is felt in the heart of kinspeople and friends, in relation to this extraordinary event.

"There grows on me the realization of the unusual character of this occasion. Our Republic has been at war before, it has asked and received the supreme sacrifices of its sons and daughters, and faith in America has been justified. Many sons and daughters made the sublime offering and went to hallowed graves as the Nation's defenders. But we never before sent so many to battle under the flag in foreign land, never before was there the impressive spectacle of thousands of dead returned—to find eternal resting place in the beloved homeland. The incident is without any parallel in history that I know.

"These dead know nothing of our ceremony to-day. They sense nothing of the sentiment or the tenderness which brings their wasted bodies to the homeland for burial, close to kin and friends and cherished associations. These poor bodies are but the clay tenements once possessed of souls which flamed in patriotic devotion, lighted new hopes on the battle grounds of civilization, and in their sacrifices sped on to accuse autocracy before the court of eternal justice.

We are not met for them, though we love and honor and speak a grateful tribute. It would be futile to speak to those who do not hear, or to sorrow for those who can not sense it, or to exalt those who can not know. But we can speak for country; we can reach those who sorrowed and sacrificed through their service, who suffered through their going, who glory with the Republic through their heroic achievements, who rejoice in the civilization their heroism preserved. Every funeral, every memorial, every tribute is for the living-an offering in compensation of sorrow. When the light of life goes out there is a new radiance in eternity, and somehow the glow of it relieves the darkness which is left behind.

"Never a death but somewhere a new life; never a sacrifice but somewhere an atonement; never a service but somewhere and somehow an achievement. These had served, which is the supreme inspiration in living. They have earned everlasting gratitude, which is the supreme solace in dying.

"No one may measure the vast and varied affections and sorrows centering on this priceless cargo of bodies-once living, fighting for, and finally dying for the Republic. One's words fail, his understanding is halted, his emotions are stirred beyond control when contemplating these thousands of beloved dead. find a hundred thousand sorrows touching my heart, and there is ringing in my ears, like an admonition eternal, an insistent call, 'It must not be again! It must not be again!' God grant that it will not be, and let a practical people join in cooperation with God to the end that it shall not be.

"I would not wish a Nation for which men are not willing to fight, and, if need be, to die, but I do wish for a Nation where it is not necessary to ask that sacrifice. I'do not pretend that millennial days have come, but I can believe in the possibility of a Nation being so righteous as never to make a war of conquest and a Nation so powerful in righteousness that none will dare invoke her wrath. I wish for us such an America. These heroes were sacrificed in the supreme conflict of all human history. They saw democracy challenged and defended it. They saw civilization threatened and rescued it. They saw America affronted and resented it. They saw our Nation's rights imperiled and stamped those rights with a new sanctity and renewed security.

"They gave all which man and woman can give. We shall give our most and best if we make certain that they did not die We shall not forget, no matter whether they lie amid the sweetness and the bloom of the homeland or sleep in the soil they crimsoned. Our mindfulness, our gratitude, our reverence shall be in the preserved Republic and the maintained liberties and the supreme justice for which they died.'

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will now entertain the request of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I make a request for unanimous consent that following the speech of the President, just ordered to be inserted in the RECORD, the speech of Col. George Harvey recently made in London be incorporated in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi if he has an authentic copy of Col. Harvey's speech or whether it is only a newspaper report?

Mr. HARRISON. It is the copy that was published in the New York papers. I shall furnish it to the reporter.

Mr. McCORMICK. Which New York paper?
Mr. SMOOT. Then it is a newspaper report?
Mr. HARRISON. Yes; it is a newspaper report; but it has never been denied.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all I wish to know.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?
Mr. NEW. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 65) in relation to certain national cemeteries of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS AND PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. McCORMICK. I introduce a bill to create the department of public works and public lands, and for other purposes, as the four regiments composed of colored men organized under which I ask may be read twice and referred to the Joint Com- the provisions of the act of July 28, 1866, entitled "An act to mittee on the Reorganization of the Administrative Branch of the Government

The bill (S. 1896) to create the department of public works and public lands, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Joint Committee on the Reorganization of the Administrative Branch of the Government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD subsequently said: Mr. President, matters of morning business slip by sometimes without our realizing just what has taken place. With regard to the bill introduced by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick] a moment ago, I am not sure whether I understood the reference. Is it a bill to create a department? And did I understand the Senator to ask its reference to a joint committee?

Mr. McCORMICK. I asked that it be referred to the Joint Committee on Reorganization.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection to the Senator having his bill referred to the committee that he desires, but I do not see how we can refer a Senate bill for consideration to a joint committee of the two Houses. The committees that report on bills to the Senate are Senate committees, and unless some special action of the Senate is taken to authorize a joint committee to make a report to the Senate I do not see how we can properly refer a bill to such a committee. I wish to invite the attention of the Chair to the matter.

Mr. McCORMICK. Considering the circumstances under which the joint committee was created and the labor which it has in hand, to what other committee can bills be referred if they cover in great part the ground which the joint committee is

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not questioning the work of the committee or the purpose of the Senator in asking the reference of the bill, but I do not understand how we can receive a report to the Senate from a committee that is composed in part of Members of the House of Representatives. They may not represent the action of the Senate, and we have no control over such a committee. I think the reference of a Senate bill should be to a Senate committee and not to a joint committee of the two Houses. I desire to make the point of order that we can not refer this bill to a joint committee in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that it would at least require a suspension of the rules in order to refer the bill to the committee suggested by the Senator from Illinois

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it seems to me in order to get the measure before a joint committee of the two Houses it would require the joint action of the two Houses.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Illinois, but I do not desire to become involved in what would be bad practice in a matter we could not control. I have no desire to interfere with the reference of the bill to any Senate committee the Senator from Illinois may suggest, but I do not think we can send a bill to a joint committee over which we have no control. I understand the Chair sustains the point of order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point

Mr. McCORMICK. Then, I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to that committee.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment providing that of the $5,000,000 which the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, was authorized in the second deficiency act, approved March 6, 1920, to expend during the fiscal year 1921 for the construction of storage facilities for ammunition and components thereof, $100,000 be made available during the fiscal year 1922 for the development of a water supply for Ogden Arsenal, Utah; and that not to exceed $30,000 of the amount made available for this purpose may be expended for the purchase of such land and water rights as may be necessary to provide a suitable water supply for Ogden Arsenal, intended to be proposed by him to the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCORMICK submitted an amendment providing that the Secretary of War shall designate two regiments of Cavalry and two regiments of Infantry, established by the act of June 4, 1920, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice," to be composed exclusively of colored men, after January 1, 1922, under the same terms and conditions increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States," as amended by the act of March 3, 1869, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1870, and for other purposes," intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

REPUBLIC OF ARMENIA.

Mr. KING. I submit a resolution which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution (S. Res. S1) was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:
Whereas in the treaty of peace between the principal allied powers and Turkey, signed at Sevres August 10. 1920, to which the Armenian Republic was party, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan recognized Armenia as a free and independent State; and Whereas the Turks by the stipulations of articles 88, 89, and 90 of said treaty expressly recognized Armenia as a free and independent State, and agreed to accept the frontier delimited between Turkey and Armenia in the Vilaytes of Erzerum, Trebizond, Van, and Bitlis, and further renounced all rights and title over the territory of Armenia within said frontier; and Whereas the Turks continue to occupy the portions of the Vilaytes of Erzerum, Trebizond, Van, and Bitlis awarded to Armenia, pursuant to said treaty and to exclude the Armenians from their proper territories; and to said treaty and to exclude the Armenians from their proper territories; and Thereas the Turks since the signing of said treaty have committed unspeakable acts of massacre, arson, rapine, and other outrages against Armenians within the proper territories of Armenia and also against Armenians within Turkish territories, particularly in Cilicia; and

Whereas the United States on the 23d day of April, 1920, recognized the Armenian Republic; and Whereas the Government and people of the United States have a moral interest in the liberty and independence of Armenia and in the security and welfare of the Armenian people: Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Republic of Armenia as recognized by the United States on the 23d day of April, 1920, and which was a party to the treaty of Sevres of August 10, 1920, be recognized as the legal and de jure Government of United Armenia within the territorial frontiers prescribed by said treaty, and that no government be recognized de facto or de jure within the proper territories of Armenia as so prescribed, except said government be the lawful successor of said Armenia Republic; and that it is the sense of the Senate that the President address an identic note to the powers which are parties to the treaty of Sevres, suggesting that in the interest of peace and the liberty and independence of the Armenian State, that measures be taken to protect the frontier established between Turkey and Armenia pursuant to said treaty and to secure the evacuation by the Turks of any and all parts of Armenia occupied by them, and to respect said frontier and further to respect the rights of Armenians and other Christians within Anatolia.

HOSPITALIZING INCAPACITATED SOLDIERS.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, under date of April 27 I discussed at length in the Senate the inadequacy of the governmental agencies for insuring, compensating, and hospitalizing our ex-soldiers.

Since that time I have received numerous letters from various parts of the country expressing very deep sympathy and keen interest for our wounded soldiers. I find a universal sentiment in favor of Congress doing full justice by them.

PICTURE OF INCAPACITATED SOLDIERS HOSPITAL SITUATION AT PRESENT.

A typical letter was recently received from the citizens committee of Northampton, Mass., the home city of the distinguished presiding officer of the Senate, Vice President Coolidge, and accompanying this letter was a diagram showing very clearly and at a glance the hospital accommodations and needs for our disabled soldiers. I ask that this letter and diagram be inserted in the Congressional Record. The necessary authority for the printing and insertion of the diagram has been received from the Joint Committee on Printing.

There being no objection, the letter and diagram were ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, Northampton, Mass., May 23, 1921.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,

Senator from Massachusetts,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WALSH: The people of the country are awakening at last to the needs of the disabled ex-service men. of Northampton, the seat of the first preparedness meeting before the war, are now most eager to see justice done by Congress to the disabled.

Recently a group of citizens of this community met together and constituted themselves a citizens' committee to take action in behalf of the disabled men, and we wish to express our hearty approval of your work, to congratulate you upon your splendid recommendations, and to wish that your bills may receive strong and successful support in both Houses.

Very sincerely, yours,

THE CITIZENS' COMMITTEE OF NORTHAMPTON. F. A. FARRAR.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6300) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropria-

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has been informed that there is no amendment pending.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I wish to call up the amendment which I sent to the desk some days ago to be inserted on page 53 after the word "otherwise"; and I call it to the attention of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be

The Assistant Secretary. On page 53, line 14, after the word "otherwise" insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That all orders or contracts for work or material, under authorization of law heretofore or hereafter placed with Government-owned establishments, shall be considered as obligations in the same manner as provided for similar orders placed with private contractors, and appropriations for such work or material shall remain available for payment therefor as in the case of contracts or orders with private contractors.

Mr. KING. I should like to have some explanation from the Senator regarding the purpose of the amendment. The matter was up the other day. It seems to me that the amendment gives to the Government yards a great advantage over contractors. I do not know that I should oppose that if it results in benefit; indeed, I should not oppose it if it results in benefit to the Government.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am sure it will not have that effect. I do not think I would favor giving any advantage to Government yards over private yards in bidding for Government work. On the contrary, the effect of the amendment would be to put the Government yards and private yards on the same basis in the respects referred to in the amendment proposed. By the existing law, where a contract is made by the Navy Department with private yards under an appropriation made by Congress, that appropriation is available to pay for the contract until the work is completed, even though it should extend over the fiscal year; but with a Government yard if the work extends beyond the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made the money is not available.

The consequence is that in many cases Government yards can not bid and contracts can not be let to Government yards because the work obviously can not be completed within the fiscal The result is that in some instances which have been called to my attention, even though Government yards, such as the navy yard here in Washington, make a considerably lower bid, the contract has to be let to a private yard. The effect of the amendment would be to enable the department, in the interest of economy, to take advantage of the lower bid of a Government yard and put it on the same basis as a private yard.

Mr. KING. If that is the object of the amendment, I am in entire sympathy with it. May I ask the Senator whether there is also the purpose in view to save some yards which ought to be abandoned and keep them alive, although they might be unnecessary for the proper performance of the work incident to the building up of the Navy

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is certainly not the object of the amendment, and in my opinion it could not possibly have that Mr. KING. Upon the assurance of the Senator I shall offer no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is the bill now open for amendment, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and is open to amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is an amendment now pending, and I presume that should be first disposed of. I ask that the pending amendment may be disposed of before we take up any other amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to which the Senator from Washington refers has been disposed of; it has been agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not so understand.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina submits an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I inquire if the amendment referred to as having been disposed of is the amendment tendered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee was disposed of at a prior session of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I say to the Senator from Montana that the Vice President held that the amendment had been agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am surprised at the information that the amendment has been agreed to. I certainly try to fol-low the proceedings of the Senate, and I had a very distinct recollection that the amendment was pending at the time the adjournment of the Senate took place on Wednesday last.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. May I say to the Senator from Montana that the Record shows that the amendment was disposed of. A viva voce vote was taken, and the amendment was declared carried. A division was then asked for, which was not granted; a roll call was then called for, which was not granted. That is what the RECORD shows. I was of the same impression as the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. My impression is that, pending the demand for a roll call, a motion to adjourn was made, leaving the matter undisposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at that time.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I have stated what the RECORD shows as to the matter.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can say to the Senator from Moutana that I called the status of the matter to the attention of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pomerene] when it occurred, because the Vice President declared the amendment carried. quest was then made for a roll call, but the number of hands coming up was not sufficient and the Vice President declared that the demand for a roll call had not been seconded. That, of course, confirmed the viva voce vote. The matter, however, is still open, I will say to the Senator from Montana, for consideration in the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes. I have something further to submit in connection with the matter, Mr. President, and unless unanimous consent shall be given, under the circumstances, for a reconsideration of the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to, I shall reserve the right to have a separate vote upon it in the Senate. I think, however, that we might now very properly dispose of the matter finally, and I hope there will be no objection to a reconsideration of the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr.

OVERMAN], which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, at the end of line 8, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of any sum appropriated by this act shall be nsed nor shall any deficiency be created for the purpose of paying the salary or the retired pay of an officer in any branch of the Navy whose original commission antedates the act on whose provisions the legality of his appointment and antedated commission are based; unless and until the Secretary of the Navy shall refer to the Comptroller of the Treasury the case of any officer the legality and regularity of whose appointment and original commission may be challenged, nor until the said comptroller shall have decided, after consideration of all available information, that the appointment and the original commission so challenged were and are in all respects regular and authorized by law and that the officer is therefore entitled to the pay or the retired pay of his rank.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I will explain the amend-Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Before we go into the consideration of the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina, I should like to ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote whereby the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. My proposed amendment will only take a moment, I will say to the Senator from Montana. I think the Senator from Washington will let the amendment go to conference.

The amendment really explains itself, but here is the condition which the amendment is intended to remedy: been confirming en bloc hundreds of appointments in the Navy. I myself have frequently asked whether or not such appointments were regular, and have always been assured that they were regular. It has, however, occurred to me that, perhaps, in some instances, they may not have been regular. If any of them are not regular, then, by the amendment, the matter will be referred to the department to correct the evil, if such an evil exists. As I understand, in some cases an officer's commission has been antedated as much as four years before the law authorized his appointment. All that the amendment does is to provide that the department shall rule on the question.

I ask the Senator from Washington to let the amendment go to conference to see if the allegation I make is not true, and to let the matter be investigated. I do not think anybody will object to the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Has the Senator from North Carolina had his amendment printed? Mr. OVERMAN. No. Mr. OVERMAN.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have not been able to examine the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Caro-

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the appointment of naval officers is made by authority of the President, and after the utmost scrutiny and with the most particular care. personnel of the Navy itself is so interested in the relative rank in the several grades that there would be an immediate protest against an irregularity of the kind to which the Senator from North Carolina refers.

Mr. OVERMAN. There will be no harm in adopting the amendment, then.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There would be this harm, that it would put the Comptroller of the Treasury in command of appointments in the Navy

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I do not think that a question would be raised except, perhaps, in one or two cases.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It would require the Secretary of the Navy to get the permission of the Comptroller of the Treasury before he could submit to the President and the President could submit to the Senate nominations in the Navy.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the appointment is in all respects regular, it would not be necessary to submit it to the comptroller; that course would be followed only when there is a question as to the regularity of the appointment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask the Senator from North Carolina to present this matter as a separate bill and let it come before the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs. We are going to hold some meetings for the purpose of recommending legislative action, and I assure him that when the committee meets it will take up the question covered by his amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have submitted the amendment and made the appeal to the Senator because I want him to investigate it in conference. The adoption of the amendment can do no harm, and, on the other hand, if some officer has been appointed who was not entitled to the appointment, that fact should be known and the error corrected. The amendment can only refer to one or two cases, perhaps, and the Secretary of the Navy can determine the question whether, in his judgment and discretion, a given appointment should be referred to the Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The amendment reads as follows:

Mr. POINDEXTER. The amendment reads as follows:

Provided, That no part of any sum appropriated by this act shall be used nor shall any deficiency be created for the purpose of paying the salary or the retired pay of an officer in any branch of the Navy whose original commission antedates the act on whose provisions the legality of his appointment and antedated commission are based; unless and until the Secretary of the Navy shall refer to the Comptroller of the Treasury the case of any officer the legality and regularity of whose appointment and original commission may be challenged nor until the said comptroller shall have decided, after consideration of all available information, that the appointment and the original commission so challenged were and are in all respects regular and authorized by law and that the officer is therefore entitled to the pay or the retired pay of his rank.

That clearly substitutes the Comptroller of the Treasury with

That clearly substitutes the Comptroller of the Treasury with the Secretary of the Navy as the authority to determine the regularity of naval appointments.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; Mr. President.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It seems to me that that is the obvious effect of the language.

Mr. OVERMAN. The intent is that in any case where the Secretary of the Navy shall find that there is an irregularity he shall refer the matter to the Comptroller of the Treasury to determine whether the appointment has been legally made, and whether salary shall be paid to an officer on the active list who is not entitled to it or to an officer now on the retired list whose appointment and commission antedated by four years the law which authorized his appointment and retirement.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator from North Carolina has in mind any case of irregularity in connection with any appointment or has knowledge of any case where an impropriety has been committed, he would be conferring a favor upon the Senate, and especially upon the Naval Affairs Committee, by calling attention to it. There is no trouble about correcting irregularities of the kind to which he refers.

Mr. OVERMAN. I merely ask the Senator to allow the amendment to go to conference so that it may be investigated there. I do not know whether or not the statement that there have been irregularities of the kind referred to is true, but I have been informed that the statement is true. At any rate. the facts may be ascertained in conference, and this question may be settled, as it should be settled, because we have been confirming hundreds of nominations here en bloc.

I have asked the question myself whether there were any irregularities, and I have found the case of one officer whose appointment I did not think was regular. Now, what is the harm of letting the amendment go through to be considered in conference, and be passed upon by the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The harm is that the amendment goes away beyond the case the Senator from North Carolina has in mind. The amendment would establish a general law giving general authority to the Comptroller of the Treasury to supervise the Navy Department as to the appointment of officers.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think so. I merely ask that the amendment may go to conference for consideration, and I hope the Senator will not object to that course being taken.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am compelled to make the point of order against it, saying to the Senator from North Carolina that the committee will be glad to take the matter up and investigate it.

Mr. OVERMAN. The point of order will not lie, for the reason that the amendment is a limitation upon the appropria-

I put that in so as to make it in order tion itself.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make the point of order against the amendment on the ground that it changes existing law and is general legislation.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator can, of course, make the point of order, but it will not apply in this case, I think, because, I repeat, the amendment is a limitation on the appropriation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken, and it is sustained.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I will not argue with the Chair, but the amendment proposes a limitation upon the very appropriation itself. Would not that make it in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has observed that there is a limitation upon the appropriation; but, nevertheless, it does change or modify existing law, and the Chair is of the opinion that, although it is limited to one year, it is nevertheless general legislation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] was adopted may be reconsidered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to that at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote by which section 18, on motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar], was added to the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the vote by which the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered. The question now recurs on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few further observations upon the amendment. course of the discussion occurring upon Wednesday, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Spencer] observed that, with reference to midshipmen who fail in their studies, the course ought to be taken that is observed in colleges generally, namely, that when they fail they ought to be dropped back into a lower class and go over the work again, resulting in their course being extended for the period of one year. Mr. President, I do not understand that there is any such uniform practice among the private or public institutions of this country; indeed, my information is that the rule is quite strictly enforced in many of them that a student failing in his examinations and being conditioned, and failing again upon reexamination, is dropped; but, Mr. President, if the rule were otherwise it is not one that ought to be observed with respect to the Naval Academy.

The law fixes a limit of age within which boys may be admitted to the Naval Academy. They can not enter it after arriving at the age of 20 years. No such limitation ordinarily obtains with respect to matriculation in the ordinary college or university. Indeed, we are advised from time to time of men and women as old as 60 years of age being admitted to these institutions; so that if a boy goes in and fails, and is put back a year and fails again, and is put back another year, and continues to fail for a period of 5, 6, or 10 years, and remains in college a matter of 15 years, the interests of the college, perhaps, are in no way affected by that course, but we do not believe that that is a wise policy in preparing young men for service in the Navy, and we fix an age limit beyond which they can not enter.

But there is more, Mr. President. In the case of the ordinary college, either private or public, for that matter, it is a matter of no consequence whatever to the college whether the failing student remains for a period longer than the ordinary course or not. He pays his own expenses, or his parents or guardian pay his expenses while he is at college, whether it be for four years or for five years or for six years. In other words, the college is under no expense at all in the matter. in all private institutions he ordinarily pays a tuition, and he pays a yearly tuition, and the college acquires something, at least, in addition to what it ordinarily gets if the period of his study there is protracted. But in the case of the Naval Academy the Government of the United States pays all the expenses of the maintenance of the student while he is there. If he completes his course in four years, the Government is put to just four-fifths of the expense that it would be put to if he remained there for five years; and if he is put back a second time and stays there six years the Government is obliged to pay one and a half times as much for the education of a pupil who was deficient in his studies as it is obliged to pay for the student who is fully equipped in the first place and does efficient work after he arrives there. In other words, the cost is upon us. But more, Mr. President. In the case of the ordinary institution, after the student graduates all responsibility, so far as the institution is concerned, is gone; at least, all liability is gone; but in the case of the student at the Naval Academy the Government of the United States commissions him and agrees to pay him a salary for the whole period of his natural life. So the two cases stand upon an entirely different footing.

Moreover, Mr. President, it is not only the money that the United States will be obliged to pay him, but he is to be put in positions of very great responsibility; and if he has demonstrated that he has not the capacity of an ordinary student and has failed in his examinations, after giving him the opportunity to make them up, the presumption is that he will not make a good officer.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator will pardon me for just a moment, I realize the fact that some boys who are dull at school and do not get on very well eventually make a reasonably good success in life. That may happen, and a boy who does not do well at the Naval Academy may turn out to be marvelous naval officer; but the only means we have of judging whether he will be or not is the manner in which he does his work and the way in which he answers to the duties and responsibilities that are put upon him there.

I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was going to ask the Senator from Montana, who is a member of the committee, if it is not a fact that he was a member of the Board of Visitors that visited the Naval Academy this year?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; I was.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My understanding is that the Senator from Montana made some investigation of this matter at that time as a member of the Board of Visitors.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like the Senator to inform the Senate as to the circumstances of these cases; that is, the important and material features of them that he has discovered while acting as a member of the Board of Visitors.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I agree in principle with what the Senator from Montana has said. The purpose of the committee was to take this matter and examine into it and get more information than we have had.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I pointed out, or endeavored to point out, on Wednesday how disastrous this would be to the discipline at the Naval Academy, and how an important incentive to the boys to do the best they can would be withdrawn by such a procedure as this.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is it not a fact that the midshipmen referred to in this amendment had not only failed in their regular examinations, but they had been given a second or re-examination and had failed the second time?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is quite right. I might say in that connection that in connection with the first examination the daily standing of the midshipman is taken into consideration, as well as the results of his written examination, and consideration is given to his daily recitals, even though he does not meet the required standard in the examination, as is the custom in the colleges generally.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Some comment was made here the other day upon the large number of midshipmen that have been found deficient during the past session, and there was some intimation that it was due to resentment on the part of the Naval Academy authorities at the passage of a law as a rider on an appropriation bill requiring them to reexamine midshipmen who have failed in their examinations. Now, the fact of the case is this: I have personal recollection of previous years. I remember one year at the midwinter examinations at the academy, long before this act became a law, when there were over 200 midshipmen that were conditioned and found deficient and dismissed from the academy, and there was not any protest against it. Everybody realized that they had failed to come up to the required standards, and the result was accepted.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is quite right, and the academy has a very creditable record in respect to the percentage of those entering who actually graduate; and the record is so interesting that I offer the following for the information of the Senate:

In the class of 1874, 100 entered and 30 were graduated. In the class of 1878, 103 were entered and 36 graduated.

Let me give the percentage, simply, and I will offer the table for the RECORD.

In the class of 1874 only 30 per cent of those who entered graduated.

In the class of 1878, 35 per cent of those who entered graduated.

In the class of 1882, 50 per cent of those who entered graduated.

In the class of 1886, 40 per cent of those who entered graduated

In the class of 1890, 39 per cent of those who entered graduated.

In the class of 1900, 65 per cent of those who entered graduated.

And at the present time the percentage runs along about 60 to 65 per cent.

Mr. President, I ask to have the whole of this table printed in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the table referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Class of—	Entered.	Gradu- ated.	Percent- age.
1874 1878 1882 1886 1890	100 -103 -76 -63 -85 -95	30 36 37 25 34 62	30 35 50 40 39

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do.

Mr. PITTMAN. Are those percentages based on those who failed in the examinations and those who left?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; all cases. They are not segregated there. But let me point out to the Senate the inevitable effect of this legislation if it is enacted.

Here are these 110 boys who had their examinations and Two hundred and eighty-six, it will be remembered, failed upon the original examination. Additional instruction was given them in accordance with the law enacted a year ago so far as the law could be observed. I will speak about that in a moment. Upon the second examination, 176 of those who failed upon the first examination went through, and 110 failed on the second examination taking place something like a month after the original examination, the additional and special instruction having been given to all in the meantime.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My understanding was that they had

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I will give the exact date.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The only special instruction that these students received was that instruction which could be given while they were carrying on their classes and keeping up with their classes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is quite right.

Mr. McKELLAR. And they had no time during a vacation in which to take it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator is quite right. Mr. McKELLAR. Now, let me ask the Senator

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But before we pass that-

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not going to pass it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me show what the facts are. Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be delighted to have the Senator

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The facts are that there is just one day between the two terms, and that after the second term the entire force of the Naval Academy goes on its regular annual cruise. You would have to put off the cruise, or else those who passed the examination would go upon the cruise, leaving those who had failed at the academy. Moreover, the civilian instructors are hired for a period, and they disband at the end of the second term.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if out of the 286 all but 110 passed with that meager instruction given while they were performing their other class duties and all other duties connected with the academy, is it not reasonable to suppose that if these boys had been given additional instruction such as is required by the statute passed last year there would have been far fewer who failed in that examination?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is a mere matter of speculation. I could not venture to say either one way or the other as to that.

Mr. McKELLAR. We do know that over 50 per cent of them got through on the second examination, where they had virtually no special instruction as required by the statute.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not think that is in accordance with the facts, because they did have the special instruction; but before we pass that I want to know from the Senator Tennessee how else the instruction could be given them, and what he would like to have done? Now, take the end of the first term. There is one day between the two terms. would the Senator like to have done with respect to that?

Mr. McKELLAR. That could not be done.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well.

Mr. McKELLAR. But the terms ought to be so arranged that the intention of Congress in reference to this matter can be carried out. That is to say, they could arrange their classes and their studies in such a way that these boys should have the special instruction that Congress required the managers and the superintendent and the educators at the academy to give. In other words, all that I say should be done by the academy officials is to carry out the instructions of Congress in a reasonable and proper way and give these boys an honest chance to pass these examinations.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; the act ought to be carried out in a reasonable and proper way, and that is the way it has been carried out. How would the Senator have it done? Would he give 30 days or 60 days between the first term and the second term, the balance of the midshipmen kept back while those who are deficient are making up the deficiency? What would the Senator do if it was the end of the second term?

Would he suspend or dispense with the annual cruise, and devote the time that is given to that work to bringing up the deficient midshipmen to the standard acquired by the others?

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will yield, I will show him in just a moment what I would do. I would have the law carried out, which the Senator voted for, according to my recollection, because there was no dissent from it. I would just have the officials of the academy carry out the law in good spirit and in good faith, and in the way that Congress directed.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, that is a general answer.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will read the law.
Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield. Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will allow me to interject, would like to make a suggestion. Under the law as it existed prior to June 5, 1920, it was entirely within the discretion of the academic board as to how they should deal with this matter. Up until this last act was passed, the rule was that if a midshipman failed at his examinations, he was dropped back into the next lower class. After this act was passed, and it came to the first series of examinations which were held after it was passed, namely, in January, 1921, instead of following the course theretofore prevailing, of letting the midshipmen who had failed in a given class drop back into the next class, they were summarily dismissed after the second attempt.

Before, when boys failed in an examination, or were "found deficient," to employ the exact phrase used in the law, it was not thought that they were unfit to remain in the academy, but it was thought wise that they should not continue with their class. After the Congress had by this second act of June 5, 1921, provided for reinstruction and a reexamination and they failed in that, they were not thought fit to stay in the academy. That is the serious objection. There are others. I shall take my own time, after the Senator from Montana shall have concluded, to call attention to what I believe is the cause of the failures there. I will say very frankly that in my judgment it is partly due to the boys being deficient in study, and it is partly due to deficiency in instruction.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will allow me to answer, now, the question he propounded to me, I will be glad to do so. I read from the act of 1920:

That until otherwise provided by law no midshipman found deficient at the close of the last and succeeding academic term—

The Senator will recall that on January 30, when these resignations were demanded and received this law applied to the succeeding term, which is the present one-no midshipman * * * shall be involuntarily discontinued at the Naval Academy or in the service unless he shall fall upon reexamination in the subjects in which found deficient at an examination to be held at the beginning of the next and succeeding academic terms, and the Secretary of the Navy shall provide for the special instruction of such midshipmen in the subjects in which found deficient during the period between academic terms.

In order to avoid that provision of the statute they did not dismiss from the academy these 110 boys, because they knew that if they did they would be violating the very express terms of this statute; but on January 30 they sent a written statement to each one of the 110 and demanded that they resign.

Mr. POMERENE. And, if I may make a suggestion, that was sent one night and their resignations were required to be in the next morning.

They were required to be in the next day, Mr. McKELLAR. within 24 hours. They had no time to consult anybody. They had no time to take it up with their parents; they had no time to take it up with anyone. The resignations were demanded for the purpose of getting around or evading the law which Congress had passed.

The Senator does the academic authori-Mr. POINDEXTER.

ties an injustice, I think.

Mr. McKELLAR. If I do, I hope the Senator will correct me, because I do not desire to do anybody an injustice.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think that could be interpreted as any desire on their part to evade the law, because that is the universal custom. The procedure of asking for their resignations instead of summarily dismissing them is simply followed as a matter of courtesy to the midshipmen. The permanent law provides that no midshipman can remain at the academy unless he is considered satisfactory in all respects by the academic board. They have the authority to dismiss the midshipmen at any time, and the request for their resignations immediately is the invariable method by which midshipmen are separated from the academy.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from Montana will permit me just a word in answer to the statement by the Senator from Washington, Mr. President, if they had undertaken to discharge these boys without demanding and receiving their resignations, they would have been violating the law. It would have been an illegal discharge, as legally they had no right to discharge a single one of the 110 on the 30th of last January.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to say in this connection that the Senator differs from the Attorney General of the United States. The superintendent of the academy asked the advice of the Attorney General of the United States as to what he ought to do in the matter, and he acted on the advice he received:

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Attorney General gave him such advice as that, he was absolutely mistaken. I do not know whether he gave it or not, but if he did it was bad advice. The statute is perfectly plain.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I fully agree with the Senator from Washington that it is not a reasonable deduction at all to infer that what was done was done with any purpose whatever of evading the act. It was done because the act, in the language in which it is written, is incapable of literal fulfillment. is the plain situation.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Montana, I know, is one of the great lawyers of the country. Does the Senator himself believe that it would have been legal for them to disregard this statute and dismiss those boys without requiring their resigna-

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It would not have been legal, of course, to disregard the statute; I grant that very frankly; but inasmuch as the statute is exceedingly ambiguous in its terms and difficult, if not impossible, of exact enforcement, it becomes a question as to what the statute does mean.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, if the statute is doubtful and ambiguous in its terms, and an intent exists, as is shown by the statute, to give the boys reasonable instruction before they are dismissed from the academy, does not the Senator think that in common justice and in equity to these boys they should have the advantage of the ambiguity?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I think the boys were treated with entire fairness and entire justice. I do not think any injustice was done to them at all, and I do not think the application ought to be put upon any such ground.

The situation is perfectly and clearly understood. There are two terms. There is just one day between the first term and the second term. It becomes necessary, then, to give the instruction to the boys required by the act, and the instruction was given, at the end of the first term. Of course, it had to be given, as it is given in every college, while the other work was going on, during the succeeding term. Then the next term comes around, the second term of the year, and as soon as that term has expired the boys go out on the summer cruise. You have to conform to the actual condition of things.

Mr. POINDEXTER and Mr. McKELLAR rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield first to the Senator from

Mr. POINDEXTER. I had hoped that the matter would be disposed of without much debate, and I may be compelled to make a point of order against it; but as long as we have now gotten into a discussion of the merits of the question, I want to suggest to the Senator from Montana that this amendment applies only to midshipmen found deficient in the last session. So it would be of no benefit to midshipmen next year. It would select this particular class of midshipmen and give them an advantage and give them opportunities which would be denied to all the succeeding classes, thereby putting them in a favored class by themselves.

Furthermore, these men failed in a regular examination, and failed upon a reexamination, and it is proposed now that they shall be reappointed and come up in the succeeding class. Then if they failed again, they would be entitled, under the act of 1920, to another reexamination, and there would be just as much reason for reporting a special statute in their favor in some succeeding year as that they would receive by virtue of this legislation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Undoubtedly, and I was going to add when interrupted that the necessary effect of this would be to bring about exactly the result the Senator from Washington has now suggested. If we pass a special act to take care of these boys and permit them to be reappointed, how can we refuse next year to pass a special act to take care of the boys who fail next year? The fatal precedent can not be resisted, and the consequence will be that the midshipmen will recognize that if they do fail some friendly Congressman will introduce a special bill for their relief, and they will be admitted to the academy again, and thus one of the strong inducements to boys to do their very best at the academy will be almost, if not entirely, destroyed.

McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield right there, I want to say that if a manifest injustice is done in the future to any boys at the academy Congress ought to take their part,

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; if a manifest injustice is done, the injustice ought to be corrected.

Mr. President, let me call your attention to the record of one of these boys for whose relief this amendment is proposed, for the purpose of indicating that the ability of the men who go into the Navy will be deteriorated if the policy proposed is pursued. I omit the name, but one of these 110 has the following record in the academy:

1. Admitted to the Naval Academy the 15th of August, 1916.

Completed first year satisfactorily.

3. Failed the second year, and turned back into the class below at the end of that academic year.

One of them has already been put back a year. If he is now put back into the academy with a class lower, instead of his course being four years, his course will be six years.

4. Passed third year successfully, except that he was deficient in conduct for one term of the third year.

5. Was deficient in the semiannual examination for the fourth year, with the final term mark of 2.48 in electricity, having received on the examination the exceptionally low mark of 1.60.

I might say, in this connection, that 4 is perfect. This boy got 2.48 in electricity on his reexamination and upon his first examination he got 1.60.

In an effort to be sure that no injustice had been done, the reexamination upon which Midshipman — received 2.38 was re-marked by an entirely different set of instructors. This remarking gave him a lower mark than that previously assigned.

6. In accordance with the plan approved by the Secretary of the Navy, he was given extra instruction by instructors especially detailed for it, four days each week during the period from Monday, February 6, 1921, until Saturday, March 5, 1921. Was reexamined after the extra instruction noted above on March 7, 1921. Date of original semiannual examination, January 26, 1921. Failed on this reexamination with a mark of 2.38.

7. It is to be noted that the passing mark is 2.50.

8. In considering the case of Midshipman action of the academic board in this case, attention is drawn to the fact that throughout his whole time at the Naval Academy his conduct was not unusually good-in fact, during one term he was deficient in conduct and during each year accumulated more demerits than he should have done. Also, the examination mark on both the semiannual and the reexamination shows that Midshipman --, in spite of having spent four and one-half years at the Naval Academy, had a very slight knowledge of his subject and was in no sense prepared to graduate.

9. It is the deliberate judgment of the superintendent that the midshipmen who were dropped as a result of the examination held in March this year have had more consideration shown them and have had more opportunities to make a satisfactory mark than have any other midshipmen within his knowledge at the Naval Academy, and that knowledge extends back about 38 years.

I merely desire to add, in illustration of what I said before. that this is not the case of a student at an ordinary institution. The question is whether we shall permit this boy to go back and, if he happens to muddle through in some way or other, give him a commission in the Navy of the United States under which we shall be obliged to pay him a salary during the whole course of his natural life, in addition to placing great responsibilities in his hands.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly. Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Montana has very courteously given me the name of this young man, and it happens to be a case about which I have heard before. is made to the fact that during one year he failed. That is true, but that is not the whole truth about it. I am astonished that the naval authorities have not given the Senator the full facts about it. The fact is that the boy was stricken with appendicitis, and was in the hospital for four months of that year, and for that reason he had to fall back.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield for an observation?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator suggests that perhaps in this way a boy can muddle himself through. The Senator will recall that in our military history some of the greatest, or at least one of the greatest, generals the country has ever known muddled through the academy at West Point and just did get

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; that is true. As I said awhile ago, it sometimes happens that the man who makes a miserable failure in college makes a great success in life; but, of course, every father and every mother is proud to have his or her boy do well at college. Why? Because the chances are that he is going to do well in life if he does well there. A parent is humiliated when his or her boy fails in college. Why? Because it is an indication that he is going to make a failure in life. He may, of course, get through; but the only test we have, the only thing on which we can go, the only way the college authorities can proceed, is upon the assumption that the boy who fails will not make a good officer.

Mr. McKELLAR. In answer to that suggestion of the Senator, I happen to know a gentleman who is now a Member of this body who failed in one study at college and afterwards graduated with the highest mark in his class at that college, and I believe the highest mark any student ever attained at

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I have no interest in the matter either one way or the other. I think the adoption of the amendment would be a fatal precedent to establish. I think that the officers of the Naval Academy have shown every consideration for the boys and every desire to observe the letter of the statute. I merely desire to add that anyone who criticizes it must show how it would be possible to give anything like 30 days' additional instruction or six weeks' additional instruction before the reexamination between terms.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is general legislation and changes existing law.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will not do that. The amendment was agreed to in Committee of the Whole on day before yesterday and this morning there was a motion to reconsider it. There was no objection to that and I think that was entirely proper. There was no objection on my part to it at all, and I think that was entirely proper. It seems to me, however, that the Senator should, on so important a matter as this, permit us to have a vote and let it go to conference and be considered there. I think the Senator intimated, or I believe stated, day before yesterday that he himself thought that was the best course. I hope the Senator from Washington will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did that upon the assumption that it would be disposed of in that way, but it has now been taken up and there is apparently to be much discussion of it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, the Senator knows I am not responsible for that. The Senator himself agreed that it might be taken up in that way. He agreed by making the statement on the floor that a reconsideration might be had. He said he had no objection to it. I had none, and I thought the Senator was exactly right. I hope the Senator will not press his point of order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is the Senator of the opinion that we can get a vote upon the amendment within a reasonable time?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think we can very shortly. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pomerene] desires to make a few remarks on it, and then we can get a vote on it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will withhold the point of order for the time being

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope the Senator will not make the point of order at any time.

Mr. POMERENE obtained the floor. Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President-

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Nevada. Mr. PITTMAN. Before the Senator from Ohio begins his Mr. PITTMAN. Before the Senator from Ohio begins his remarks I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a ques-Did the authorities at the academy give the same instructions during the same period of time and the same reexamination to all the students to whom the amendment is in-tended to apply, that they gave to the particular students whom the Senator has discussed?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It was the same that was given to the 286 who failed. The same instruction was given to all.

Mr. PITTMAN. In other words, there was practically a month's special instruction upon the subject in which they failed?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is true.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then, as to the reexamination, they were requested to resign if they again failed in that study?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; having failed they were requested to resign.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I wish to assure the Senate that I am just as jealous of the record of the Naval Academy as any American can be or ought to be, and my interest in the relief which the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee provides does not measure the full extent of my interest in the subject. I am satisfied that certain practices have grown up in the academy that ought to be eliminated, and if I can bring it about I propose to do it.

The Senator from Nevada very properly asked the Senator from Montana what instructions the boys were given. It is true they were given instruction of the kind that prevails over there, but it must be borne in mind that the amendment of June 5 contemplated, though it was crudely phrased, that there should be instruction during vacation. It so happened, and in large part because of the form of the amendment, that there was just one day, namely, Sunday, intervening between the first term and the second term. Now, they concluded that they could not drop these men then, but that they would have to give to them instruction, so they gave them instruction during the term and not during vacation. It is true that there was an hour of instruction given between 5.15 and 6.15 each evening after the boys had been working hard all day on work that in contemplation of the academy, at least, requires all of the time of the boys. That is a part of the situation.

I wish to make this assertion, and I do it because I believe it. The authorities over there were determined that they were going to bring about the repeal of the provision of June 5, 1920. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to some of the ques-tions which were asked by Admiral Scales. It demonstrates conclusively his frame of mind. Under date of June 24, 1920, he sent a letter to the Secretary of the Navy. It contains certain inquiries, as follows:

1. In view of the provision of the Revised Statutes, sections 1519 to 1525, which says, "Midshipmen found deficient shall not be continued at the academy or in the service unless upon the recommendation of the academic board," and in view of its intent—

Now, note this-and in view of its intent, is the act of Congress referred to in reference (a)-

Which is this act of June 5-valid as against the provision of the Revised Statute above noted-

Which placed the power of putting these boys out absolutely in the academic board.

2. Provided it is

That is, provided it is valid-can the academic board drop a deficient midshipman at the close of the semiannual examinations without failure on reexamination?

They are still insisting that they should have the same arbitrary power, notwithstanding the fact that the Congress had declared they were entitled to reinstruction and reexamination.

3. Having recommended certain midshipmen to be dropped-

That is what they had done early in June-on account of their being deficient at the annual examination, 1920, can the academic board change that recommendation and turn these midshipmen back into the next lower class?

4. Having instructed the deficient midshipmen and reexamined them after instruction, according to the clause contained in the deficiency bill, can the academic board turn them back if they pass satisfactorily, in view of the fact that other better and more qualified midshipmen have already been turned back from the same class?

5. Unless the act of Congress referred to in reference (a) rescinds the action which was taken by the academic board under provisions of the Revised Statutes, sections 1510 to 1525, prior to the enactment of the clause contained in the deficiency bill, a decision is requested as to its validity in view of its possible retroactive provision.

I call attention to these things because there was a determination on the part of this admiral to leave the control absolutely where it was under sections 1519 to 1525, and a disposi-tion to disregard the act of June 5, 1920. The other day when this matter was up I inserted in the RECORD—and I am not going to do it again—the reply which was made by Admiral Coontz, who was then the Acting Secretary of the Navy, and his action was largely favorable to these boys.

Then the matter was referred to the Attorney General, and the Attorney General called attention to the obscurity of the law and suggested that before there would be another semiannual examination Congress could remedy the defect; but Congress did not do so.

Mr. President, if I felt that these boys had had a square deal, I would have nothing to say, but I observe that there has been a careful assumption here all the while that the instructors and the management of the academy are 100 per cent perfect, and that the fault lies wholly with the boys. A moment ago the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]-and I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Iowa

[Mr. Kenyon], because the Senator from Iowa was not present at the time-referred to a case in which the Senator from Iowa was interested, and a report was read here from the academy which showed that the boy had failed one year before and was turned back, and now, because in his first examination he was two one-hundredths of 1 per cent below the passing grade in electricity, and on reexamination was, I believe, twelve one-hundredths of 1 per cent below, he is turned out. I made the statement-and I ask the Senator from Iowa if I am not correct about it-that he was turned back the first time because for four months he was sick with appendicitis, was in the hospital, and was not able to pursue his studies. Is that correct?

Mr. KENYON. That is my understanding of the case.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, let me remark in that connection, let us assume that that is the case—and I have no doubt that it is correct-still there were five months of the year remaining for that boy; he had the benefit of at least five months of work in his succeeding year, and then he failed. He was in a very much better situation, as a matter of fact, to pass the examinations in the lower class the next year than the boys who came in to that class originally.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes, Mr. President, that is true; but they have a textbook on the subject of electricity which is written by an officer, which instructors as well as midshipmen tell me is so obscurely written that it takes an advanced student of the subject to understand it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Apparently, it has some resemblance to the questions asked by Mr. Edison.

Mr. POMERENE. I think that some of the instructors know about as much of the subjects they are teaching over there as Ford knew about some of the subjects as to which inquiry was made of him when he was on the witness stand.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Of course, if that is the case, we ought to investigate the Naval Academy.

Mr. POMERENE. Undoubtedly so; and before I get through with this subject I am going to present a joint resolution providing for the appointment of a committee, consisting of three members of the Naval Committee of the Senate, three members of the Naval Committee of the other House, and three eminent educators to be appointed by the President to investigate not only the course of study at the Naval Academy but the methods of instruction and of grading.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not mean to say that it would not be wise to take that course, but I observe that the law really now so provides. It provides for a board of visitors, consisting of three Members of the Senate, three Members of the House, and three eminent educators. Eminent educators spent a week at the Naval Academy this year. Among them were President Benjamin Ide Wheeler, of the University of California; Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale University; and one of the leading instructors and professors of the University of Illinois, and other men of similar character, who spent a week at the academy, going carefully into all of its methods of instruction.

Mr. POMERENE. I believe the Senator from Montana was a member of that committee. Did he examine the method of instruction at the academy?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I did not. It is a long time since I professed to know anything about teaching school, and that part of it I really left to the other members of the com-

Mr. POMERENE. Did the Senator investigate the method of grading there?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No.

Mr. POMERENE. Did the Senator investigate the course of study there?
Mr. WALSH of Montana. I, of course, followed the course of study.

Mr. POMERENE. That is, the Senator accepted it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but I would not like to say that my examination was very thorough.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask, in the case of a commission of that kind, if the social duties are not so great that the commission does not have time to attend to much else?

Mr. POMERENE. I do not want to ask a question of that nd. However, Mr. President, some reference has been made to the method of instruction at the academy, and I am going to give the Senators who do me the honor to listen to me some information on the subject. The midshipmen in some of the departments are assigned their lessons one day and the next day they go into the lecture room. They are required to go to a blackboard and write out the lesson. Repeatedly this occurs: When a midshipman has reached some branch of the subject which he does not understand and he asks the instructor a question, he is met with this kind of an answer, "Have you not read your lesson? It is in the textbook." That is the instruction they get. When the so-called instruction to which the Senator refers was being given to these boys, after they had been at work all day, they were sent into the classroom between 5.15 and 6.15 o'clock, and instead of being given instruction in some instances the alleged instructor was sitting at the table reading a newspaper.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me inquire of the Senator what is the source of his information about these matters?

Mr. POMERENE. The source of my information is partly, from some of the midshipmen, in part from instructors, and I have a letter here that is not, for obvious reasons, signed, which I am going to read, and I am going to paraphrase it just to the extent of trying to conceal the identity of the writer and one of his fellow midshipmen. I will be glad to let any Senator see it if he wishes so to do.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. Merely for the purpose of trying to acquire information, I will ask the Senator what disposition would be make of a midshipman who failed at his mid-term examination? Mr. POMERENE. I think the purpose of the act was that instruction should be given at the end of the year.

Mr. DIAL. In the summer time?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes. Of course, there may be cases in which the deficient midshipman ought to have been summarily dismissed; but, on the other hand, as has been the practice under section 1519 et sequentes, if a midshipman fails, ordinarily he drops back into the class below.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Let me inquire of the Senator how he would give the instruction at the end of the summer term, in view of the fact that the cruise immediately ensues?

Mr. POMERENE. There are methods of giving instruction, but the instructors want a vacation.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, what was bothering me was that a boy, having failed, would he not then drag along until the end of the next term?

Mr. POMERENE. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. DIAL. What was troubling me was if the midshipman had failed at the mid-year examination, he would then drag along in his class until the summer time.

Mr. POMERENE. Under the rule that prevailed heretofore he could have been dropped back into the next lower class, and there would have been nothing said by me if that had been That was the practice; it only ceased to be the practice when the amendment of June 5, 1920, was adopted; and I think I will demonstrate before I shall have finished that some of the authorities over there have deliberately undertaken to bring about the repeal of that provision, which was intended for the benefit of the boys; but, instead of that, the authorities at the academy have construed it against the boys; in other words, it was the purpose of Congress to permit the boys to have reinstruction so that they could go on with their class, and while Congress saw fit to do that, Admiral Scales and the academic board insisted that because of the act of Congress they should not even be permitted to go on with their class; and, more than that, they should not even be permitted to remain at the academy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Washington? Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. How could they go on with their class if the course which the Senator from Ohio suggests of giving them instruction during the succeeding vacation were followed?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I made that as a suggestion. There would be an alternative course; either they could be permitted to go on with their class or they could be turned back to the next lower class; but it so happens that the young man in whom the Senator from Iowa is interested failed in the subject of electricity, which is a continuous study for two years at the academy. Would it have hurt the dignity of the Navy to have permitted the boy who failed by two one-hundredths of 1 per cent on the regular examination and on the second examination by twelve one-hundredths of 1 per cent in his class to continue for a few months more? Let me remind Senators that one of the ablest admirals in the Navy, one of the men whom we all love and honor, when he was a boy failed twice; but if Admiral Scales had been there at that time we would not have had this admiral in the Navy.

I said I was going to read a letter from a midshipman. He is not a tyro.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him there in reference to the question asked by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL]?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from South Carolina asked what would be done if a young man, for instance, failed in electricity at the end of a term that concluded on the 30th of January and there was only one day in which he could be given the special instruction authorized and directed to be given by the statute. He could continue in his class until the end of June, and during the June vacation arrangements could be made by which he could be given instruction and, upon reexamination, either put back into his class, if he stood an excellent examination, or allowed to fall back in the next lower class, and thus to continue in his studies. That is done in every college in the country, without exception.

If a student fails in one study, he is not dismissed from the college. In this instance the law provides just exactly what has been done. It is said, however, that the midshipmen have to go on their cruise. They do not, however, cruise for the entire time, or if they do, under present regulations, the authorities could easily direct that 3 weeks or 30 days be allowed for special instruction, and the boys could then go on their cruise. It is true that, perhaps, the professors would then get a little shorter vacation, but still they would have more than Senators of the United States get.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio permit a further interruption?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not understand whether the Senator from Tennessee apprehends the situation or not; but how could a boy who has failed be given 30 days' or 6 weeks' instruction and then go on the cruise? The entire Corps of Midshipmen go together on the cruise.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know that. Mr. WALSH of Montana. And if some remain behind the authorities will either have to fit out a separate cruise for the deficient midshipmen or such midshipmen will have to stay at the academy and not receive the advantage of the cruise.

Mr. McKELLAR. How long would they go on the cruise?
Mr. WALSH of Montana. The cruise extends practically during the entire summer vacation—from the end of the summer period to the fall period.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes, Mr. President; but while, of course, I am not a naval man, it impresses me that it would not be impossible to have some of these instructors go on that cruise. They might learn something, too, as well as instruct the midshipmen.

Mr. McKELLAR. The suggestion that the Senator has made is a very excellent one.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me say a word about the method of grading over there. They have daily marks—oh, yes! If a man is asked 1 question or 30 questions, he gets 1 grade; if the examination lasts 5 seconds or 30 seconds, he gets 1

The instructor has to be making and recording the grades all the while. His mind is on keeping the records rather than on the instruction of the youths that are before him. At the end of the week it is averaged and put on the midshipman's card; at the end of the month there is another average, and so forth.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator whether that is unique in the academy?

Mr. POMERENE. No; it is not unique in the academy. That is the trouble.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Is not that the system that is pursued in every college?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, there has been a little bit of advancement in some of the universities of the country when it comes to the question of grading. Of course, over there in the academy you would not expect any advancement. adopted a system years and years ago, so long ago that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, and they still stick to it. Oh, we must stand by these precedents!

Let me tell you: In the great universities of the country—and I am not speaking of all of them—they have what they call a group system. There is a first group, a second group, a third group, a fourth group, which includes those who may have failed in one study, a fifth group, lost of whom as I understand are retired if they have failed in a given number of subjects; but their grades and their standings are made up at the end of the year, or, it may be, at the end of the term. I do not pretend to be entirely accurate about this; but I have talked with instructors who have had experience in other universities as well as in the academy, and they tell me that the system over there is absolutely archaic.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator has referred to a sort of educational hospital, where parents who are paying the expenses of their children can keep them after they have failed in the regular course. The Senator would not advocate establishing that sort of an institution at a Government academy, where the education is at public expense, and where the object is to make officers of the Navy?

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President; if I were establishing an educational hospital, I would put an entirely different set of instructors there, I assure you.

I have been told of this situation, when it comes to the grading of these papers: The instructors begin at 7.30 in the morning; at least they did last Sunday, because they had to speed up. They were kept constantly grading papers from 7.30 in the morning until 11 o'clock at night. One man goes over the paper with a red pencil and underscores the words that are wrong, Another man goes over them with a blue pencil, and he underscores those that No. 1 has missed; and this work goes on until these men, under the strain of constant work, are expected to discriminate between a grade of 2.50 and a grade of 2.48 and not make any mistake against the boy. Oh, it is a wonderful system that we have over there!

Now, let me read this letter. It has the carmarks of truth; and I may say when I am reading it that I have talked to some of the instructors and some of the boys over there, and they indorse every word that is in this letter:

DEAR SIR: I am a midshipman at the Naval Academy-

Then he speaks of his friend, and I am going to omit that sentence.

I have read your statements in the papers, and so far you have not shown a knowledge of the real causes of the trouble here.

This was after I had made some remarks on this subject in the Senate. I am learning something every day about this situation.

I could not make this an official statement, because I would be dismissed from the academy; nor can I sign my name, because that also would mean my death as a midshipman. However, I can not help but write this letter for the good of this institution.

Then he speaks of his friend as a good fellow, with fair training. I am omitting the rest of that sentence, which might serve to identify him.

His bilging was altogether due to the fact that he never got any teaching all the time that he was here except in two departments. If you knew how the teaching staff was organized here you would be able to put your lingers at once on the real trouble.

The faculty is composed of about 300 instructors. Two-thirds of these are officers detached from the fleet to teach here for one or two years. They are not selected because they know anything about the subject, but because they are due shore leave and want a good billet. They come here absolutely ignorant of the subject which they are going to teach and make no effort to learn the subject or to teach it. Besides, they are not professional teachers. How could they be expected to know how to teach? The way they teach is as follows.

Now, note this:

You get a lesson assignment. You come to the class and they send you to the board to write during the whole hour what you have studied. They mark you on that. If you ask for an explanation they either refuse to answer by asking you, "Didn't you study your lesson? It is right there in the text."

Now, imagine any one of us who has children going to the grammar school submitting to a teacher of that kind in the lowest-grade schools of the country, or the highest.

And they tell you that in such a way as to discourage any further effort to get an explanation. Besides, we are not foois, and we know that they do not know the subject and can not explain it. Some are frank and admit that they do not know anything about it. Last term one of the instructors told the class frankly that he did not know a "damn thing" about the subject, but that he would try and be a fair umpire between us and the textbook.

Oh, yes; they get instruction!

Last term, during the so-called special instruction for those who had failed in the first examinations, they actually detailed one of the savvy midshipmen—

That is a slang expression over there for the "wise ones" in the class. Let me read that again, so that you get its full import:

Last term, during the so-called special instruction for those who had failed in the first examinations, they actually detailed one of the savvy midshipmen who stood at the head of the class to give special instruction along with the instructors.

Now, note: He had not even graduated yet.

And his classroom was filled to overflowing, because the midship-men knew that they could get there at least some explanation and some teaching.

I think if you would turn out some of the instructors and put some of the midshipmen there, you would improve conditions.

Mr. Senator, the only remedy for the trouble here is for the authorities to get the best professional teachers in the country to teach us, instead of getting officers who come here only for a year or two and take their teaching jobs like they do a junket billet. It is a crime to go into one of the classrooms and listen to the kind of instruction that we get here. Of the 300 instructors here, only about 100 are professional civiliar teachers, and they are the only ones that do any teaching, but their subjects are English, languages, and mathematics. Even those civilian teachers have officers over them as heads of departments, and those officers direct the teaching. I am surprised that they stand for this indignity. I believe, Mr. Senator, that this is the only educational institution in the world where students are expected to be educated without being taught.

Now, just let that soak in for a little while.

The system here is worse than the Spanish inquisition. The qualit of the teaching staff is a joke among the midshipmen who come her from any of the good schools in the country. The quality

Then he says of his friend:

He would never have bilged out of the academy if he had been taught

He would never have bright out of the standard for anything.

We need an investigation here, but it should be the kind that will investigate the method of instruction in use and the kind of instructors that do the teaching. There is where the real trouble lies. If a boy comes here with a good foundation, and will bone his studies, he gets by. But if he comes here and needs teaching and instruction, he may as well resign right away, because he will never get through. I am sorry that I have to communicate this information in this way.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, is it not true that a great many boys, who have only had a high-school education, pass these examinations?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; but, fortunately, they have had instruction

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, in view of the awful condition at the Naval Academy, I am curious to know how it has ever produced the remarkable naval officers that we have in our Navy

Mr. POMERENE. Why, Mr. President, I am satisfied that it has not always been in the condition that it is in now, as compared with the instruction elsewhere.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understood the Senator to say that the method now pursued is that which had been pursued in the past, at the time these remarkable naval officers came from the academy.

Mr. POMERENE. I said "the method of grading," out of which these failures are brought forth.

This letter continues:

I am sorry that I have to communicate this information in this way, but that is the only way that you could get it. If I made a statement through the regular channels, I should probably be put on the ship for doing so, and if I signed my name I would surely be bilged at the beginning of the next term.

Mr. President, I have another letter which I am going to read, and I am going to give the name. This comes to me under date of May 23, 1921, and it is written by Mr. William B. Zimmer, of Rochester, N. Y., who gives the experiences of his nephew in the Naval Academy. The letter reads:

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 23, 1921.

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: A clipping from the New York Times has just come into my possession relative to your asking for investigation as to wholesale dismissals and resignations demanded by Admiral Scales of the United dismissals and resignations demanded by Admiral Scales of the United States Naval Academy.

I am at present a lieutenant commander of the Naval Reserve Force and, in fact, at the head of the list. I have served in two wars and performed other duties in the Navy when emergencies arose. I am glad to see some one take this matter up, as your point is well taken.

A nephew of mine, whom I have reared and educated, owing to the fact that his mother died when he was a day old, was one of the unfortunate victims of this so-called new rule of the academy. This young man is about 6 feet tall, welghs about 170 pounds, is athletic, and long before entering the academy spent most of his leisure moments in saling boats, swimming, and other aquatic sports.

He graduated from high school here in the honor class, having finished the four years' course in three years.

Until he met Admiral Scales his people had a right to think he would make a good sailor.

He took the entrance examinations to the Naval Academy upon receiving the appointment from Congressman Dunn, of Rochester, N. Y., and succeeded in passing these. He was what is known as a second-class man, or one who has spent three years at the academy. He never failed in any examinations and was above the average in his class, being especially high in navigation, which is the bugbear to most of the midshipmen. A year ago he was in the hospital for a month with the "flu," and in spite of this handicap passed all of his examinations.

At this mid-year examination he failed in French, which is a minor subject and which is only given two hours a week. Upon reexamination he failed by two-tenths of a point. One night after taps he with a rumber of other midshipmen were summoned to immediately dress and report to the office. Upon reporting there they were instructed to hand their resignation in at once or be dismissed. The boy accordingly resigned, notwithstanding that his daily marks in French since this examination were well above the passing mark. To give you an idea of the caliber of the boy, a midshipman is allowed 150 demerits a year; this young man had only 5. This is a remarkable showing, when you stop to think that 50 demerits are given for some offenses. If you desire this boy's record at the academy, I will gladly forward it.

I went to Annapolis and had an interview with Admiral Scales, and was informed that the boy's record was satisfactory in every respect, except for the failure on this examination—in French, two hours a week, two-tenths of 1 per cent.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I think the Senator has misinterpreted that part of the letter, when he says two-tenths of 1 per cent. I think a very great deal of misapprehension might arise if that were not corrected.

Mr. POMERENE. If I am wrong, I want to correct it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I will try to correct the Senator. The midshipman failed, as it is stated there, by two one-hundreds of 1 per cent. The marking is on a system of units, the perfect mark being 4.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; that is right.
Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the student is perfect, he is marked 4, and 2.5 is the passing point. If he failed by two one-hundredths of 1 per cent, he got a marking of 2.48, which would be 52 per cent perfect; that is, on a scale of 100 this student got 52

Mr. POMERENE. Got what?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Got 52. Mr. POMERENE. Fifty-two what?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Fifty-two per cent. Mr. POMERENE. This says he failed by two-tenths of a I think I have misconstrued that. point.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly. That is two-tenths taken from 2.50.

Mr. POMERENE. That would make it 2.3. Mr. WALSH of Montana. Two and forty-eight one-hundredths is what it would be.

Mr. POMERENE. If it was two one-hundredths?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Two and five-tenths is the passing point.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. He got 2.3.

Mr. POMERENE. That is what I said a moment ago. Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is correct. But it is not 2.3 per cent.

Mr. POMERENE. No.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. He got 2.3.

Mr. POMERENE. He should have 2.50 to pass, and he had 2.30, I take it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But not per cent. Mr. POMERENE. Two-tenths of a point.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, that would be 574 per cent that he got. Four points making a hundred per cent, 2.50 is the passing point, and if he failed by two-tenths he got 2.3 parts of 4, which is 571 per cent. That is what the boy received.

Mr. POMERENE. It may be that I misconstrued that. If so, the Record will show. Mr. Zimmer's letter continues:

I went to Annapolis and had an interview with Admiral Scales and was informed that the boy's record was satisfactory in every respect except for the failure on this examination. I called his attention to the fact that French was a continuing subject; that this was the last year this boy would have that subject and this was his last examination; that if this mark were added to his previous examination and the result divided by 2, or if this mark were added to an examination taken by him in June and then the result divided by 2, being 2,50 or above, he would have passed. This has always been the practice at the academy.

Admiral Scales admitted this, but said that it was all up to Congress; that they passed this law and he had nothing to say about it.

Just think of that situation, when before under the law they could be dropped back into the next class. This law, which required two examinations and reinstruction, a law which was meant as a shield for the boys, Admiral Scales has turned into a sword against them. I continue reading:

I then suggested to him that for such a minor failure as this that he could do, as had been done in the past, have the boy set back for a year. This he refused to do, saying that he could not do so by virtue of the law which Congress had passed.

That is not in accord with the opinion of the Attorney General.

In short, his attitude was that, owing to the fact that Congress passed this law, there was nothing to do but dismiss the midshipmen or permit them to resign. At the time of this interview with Admiral Scales Congressman T. B. Dunn was present.

This action of Admiral Scales or the academic board has impressed me as being most unjust, unfair, and autocratic. Congress is endeavoring to save money. Thousands of dollars are spent educating officers for the Navy. The Navy is crying for officers. And then by one stroke the Annapolis authorities wipe out 110 men who have given three years of their life in preparing for the Navy—

That is not accurate as to that. There were 110 in all the three classes-the only pretense being that in some minor subject they have failed by two-tenths of a point. This action is all the more flagrantly unjust because it was the first time in the history of the academy that such a drastic rule has been put into force.

I explained that before.

Your attention is also called to the fact that when a midshipman ordinarily resigns and personally takes the papers to various departments and also to Washington and back that the speed record is that of three days. Here the resignations were put through overnight, with the apparent approval of the Secretary of the Navy, when the Secretary of the Navy was reviewing the Atlantic Fleet at Guantanamo,

Of course, some one else acted instead of the Secretary of the Why was this matter rushed so? Was it to prevent these boys from consulting Congress or their elders to inquire if this act of Congress was so drastic as claimed by Admiral Scales? If you will investigate, I think you will find that Admiral Scales resents the passage by Congress of this act in question.

I have read you the form of the questions which he put to the Secretary of the Navy. They indicate that he was determined to get away from this act of the Congress if he could.

The letter concludes:

If you desire any further information, I shall be pleased to have you communicate with me. However, I wish to congratulate you upon having the courage to attack this autocratic and unjust action of the Naval Academy authorities. I hope that your efforts will be crowned with success, and that as a vindication these boys, who have spent three years in the academy, may be permitted, through appropriate legislation, to reenter the academy, thus deciding forever that the career of a young man should not be blasted by two-tenths of a point.

Very truly, yours,

Now, Mr. President and Senators, that seems to be the situation over there. There is not a word in either one of those letters-and I am speaking of the principles involved-that has not been stated to me, I will put it, by several instructors over there and a number of the midshipmen, as well as their friends who have investigated it.

They talk about instruction in French. I heard a little about their instructor in French a year ago. They had one man at the head of the modern-language department who insisted that when a boy came in and was called up to recite he should stand with the fingers of his left hand touching the seam of his trousers, the thumb of his right hand in the book, the four fingers outside, and the book was to be held 9½ inches from his nose while he recited. While they were receiving instruction the boys must sit perfectly erect, with their heels clicked together, for one hour, if the lecture lasted that long.

If they would give one-half the training to the brains of those boys that they try to give to their physiques, they would be helping matters along somewhat. I am advised that the man who is at the head of the department of modern languages now can neither speak French nor Spanish, though he was a good Young officers who have had no special training along lines of instruction are made instructors and put in charge of very important subjects, such as electricity and other branches, and you expect to get first-class instruction in what ought to be the best institution of learning in the United States. Most of these boys, as I am informed, failed in classes where they have these subordinate officers as instructors.

Perhaps I have gone further than I ought to have gone in this matter. I will be corrected if I am wrong, but I should like to have an examination of conditions of the academy. Meanwhile it seems to me that when the Congress of the United States sought to legislate for the benefit of the boys it ought not to be in the power of the authorities of that institution to "kaiser" the boys out of the service in that kind of way.

I hope that the Senator from Washington will not make the point of order, but will give these boys a chance, these boys who failed by a few tenths or a few hundredths of 1 per cent, when the Government already has an investment in them covering several years, some of them three years, some of them two years, some one year, some a part of a year. One of them is credited with five years of instruction, during four months of which he was in the hospital, but they say nothing about that. It might be an excuse for his failure a couple of years ago, but we do not get that information from the academy authorities.

Mr. President, I wish to appeal to Senators to give these boys another chance and let them go back into the next lower class. They did pass their examinations, otherwise they would not have gotten out of the next lower class. The Government has an investment in them and because, for sooth, it may interfere with discipline, because it might offend the dignity of a few naval officers, these boys are to be decapitated and turned out into the cold world—a blight on their career, a discouragement which will take time for them to get over. That is what it means. If there is one provision in the bill that is better than another, it is the attempt to do justice for these boys.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I do not know Admiral Scales and I am not undertaking to defend him, but from what I can gather here there seems to be a good deal of autocracy existing at the academy. I agree with the Senator from Ohio that there should be some investigation, and if any wrongs exist they should be corrected.

However, we all know that hard cases make bad law, and to my mind it would be very unfortunate for Congress to pass acts allowing reexaminations. We all have but one object here to accomplish, and that is the good of the boys, the good of the academy, and the good of the people of the United States. occurs to me that our purpose would be accomplished by amending the general law which has been referred to and make clear what Congress intended. Of course, we all realize it is unfortunate for a boy to go to school a while and then have to drop out. Possibly he should have a reexamination, but when he fails it would be very unfortunate if he should think he could run down to Washington and get us to pass a special law every year allowing a reexamination. We all know that boys naturally kick against constituted authority, and they should not have any encouragement along that line. We further know that there can not be two masters over one institution. authorities there should rule the institution under the law which we establish. I think if we would amend the general law and have it clear that the reexamination should be had in the summer time, we would accomplish everything that would be necessary

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate at all on this matter. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pomerene] has covered it so thoroughly that I supposed it was over. I appeal to the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexten] to permit the amendment to be adopted. It can go to conference and possibly be worked out there. It certainly can not do any harm.

I have felt, as the Senator from Ohio has well expressed the thought of many Senators, that a very grievous wrong has been done these boys. I do not believe they have had a square deal. Of course, on the face of it when a man has had two examinations and failed it would apparently seem that something was the matter, but we all know in a way how the second examina-tion is carried on. The boy is laboring under a condition of nervousness. He should have plenty of time to cool off and get ready for the second examination.

When we passed the act back in June, 1920, providing for a reexamination I think it was not the intention of anyone that that should be used in any way to curtail the privileges or the status of the boys in the Naval Academy. Prior to that time, under section 1519 of the Revised Statutes, where a boy failed he dropped back a year in the classes. That seems fair. That is the method that was then in vogue. The Congress, in order to make it easier or better for the boys, provided for this additional examination. It does seem to me that the authorities at Annapolis have used this act not as an aid to the boys but as a sword of Damocles held over their heads, and there has been more or less of an attempt on the part of the authorities over there to spank the Congress for passing this second statute and interfering with their self-assumed prerogatives

What can be the harm of an amendment providing that these men can be reappointed? The amendment can go to conference, the conference committee can learn more about it and reach a The appointments would have to be made by just conclusion. Senators or Members of Congress or the President. If those boys were unfit, they probably would not be reappointed.

I am not going to take any further time on it. The acting chairman of the committee is anxious to get through. I appeal for this amendment solely in the interest of a square deal to the men, whose friends, at least, feel that they have not had it, and the amendment would certainly do no harm to anyone.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if the method of instruction at the Naval Academy is wrong, it ought to be corrected; but the object of correcting the course of instruction at the Naval Academy can not possibly be effected by reappointing to the Naval Academy 110 "lame ducks" who have failed twice in their examinations. There are other boys there who passed the examinations, as I said a moment ago, many of whom only attended high school, which conclusively demonstrates that the examinations are not too severe for boys who have the requisite ability and apply themselves in the various subjects involved.

My opinion is that the adoption of the amendment instead of saving money for the Government would add an enormous expense to the Government, taking these boys again into the academy at public expense and possibly perpetuating them in the service of the Navy at salaries that will have to be paid to men who have been shown to be unfit. I trust the amendment will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I reserve a separate vote in the Senate upon the amendment.

ADDRESS BY AMBASSADOR HARVEY.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this morning at the instance of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] there was inserted in the RECORD the very splendid address that was delivered by the President of the United States in Hoboken the other day, paying a very just tribute to the American soldier and stating very succinctly the reason for America's entrance into the war. I ask unanimous consent that the remarks I shall now make touching that address shall be placed in to-morrow morning's Congressional Record following the insertion of that address.

Mr. SMOOT. To what address does the Senator have reference?

Mr. HARRISON. I am going to discuss the President's address at New York, and I should like to have my remarks follow his address as contained in the Congressional Record, his address having been inserted at the instance of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER].

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know that there is any reason why it should not be done, but generally remarks appear in the RECORD in the order in which they are delivered in the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I think it would probably be better in this instance to have my remarks follow that address, because it is such a splendid address. Has the Senator any objection? Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not object to it, but I do not see the object of it.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator will see in a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. I doubt that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I object. The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. HARRISON. I am sorry. In the course of that address which will appear in the Congressional Record the President employed, among other very beautiful passages, this sentence:

These heroes were sacrificed in the supreme conflict of all human history. They saw democracy challenged and defended it. They saw civilization threatened and rescued it.

I asked unanimous consent this morning, following the insertion of that address in the RECORD, that the address of the new ambassador to the Court of St. James be inserted in the RECORD, referring to the address which he recently made wherein he stated, among other things, the reasons why the United States went into the late war.

I shall not trespass upon the time of the Senate by reading that address, the publication of which in the Record was objected to by the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. New], but I shall read one passage from the address of the new ambassador to the Court of St. James which takes issue with the speech of the distinguished President of the United States as to the causes that led us into the war. It may be that the President felt it his duty, in view of the recent speech of the ambassador to the Court of St. James, to make the speech that he did to the American soldiers in New York recently.

Here is what Col. Harvey said, in part, in that speech, so different from the splendid sentiment expressed by the President of the United States recently:

Even to this day at rare intervals an ebullient sophomore seeks applause and wins a smile by shouting that "We won the war!" Far more prevalent until recently was the impression—and this was and still is in a measure sincere—that we went into the war to rescue humanity from all kinds of menacing perils. Not a few remain convinced that we sent our young soldiers across the sea to save this kingdom and France and Italy. This is not the fact. We sent them solely to save the United States of America, and most reluctantly and laggardly.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

Mr. CALDER. I submit the amendment which I send to the Secretary's desk

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 16, at the end of line 22, it is proposed to insert the following:

Upon original enrollment in the Naval Reserve Force all members, other than officers of the various classes and members of the Fleet Naval Reserve, shall be confirmed in the lowest rating of their respective branches of the service: Provided, That upon reenrollment such members shall be confirmed in such rating as they may be found qualified to fill, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided further, That members of the Naval Reserve Force who have been reenrolled, or who may reenroll in the Naval Reserve Force who have been reenrolled, or who may reenroll in the Naval Reserve Force within one year from the date of this act, shall be entitled to all the benefits and privileges provided for members of the Naval Reserve Force who enroll within four months of the date of the termination of their last term of enrollment: And provided further, That hereafter members of the Naval Reserve Force, including officers, who perform active service for periods of less than 15 days on board vessels assigned for the purpose of training the Naval Reserve Force shall be entitled to subsistence or commutation thereof at the value of the Navy ration for each day's active service so performed; and such active service for periods of less than 15 days for maintaining efficiency is hereby authorized: And provided further, That retainer pay withheld and credited to the appropriation for organizing and administering the Naval Reserve Force, as required by section 9 of the act approved June 4, 1920 (41 Stat., p. 887), shall be available for the purposes provided by said act until the end of the fiscal year next following that in which it is so withheld and credited.

Mr. CALDER Mr. President—

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President-

Mr. KING. I raise the point of order against the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from New York,

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator withdraw the point of order until I can explain my amendment? If he will do so, I feelcertain that I can induce him not to make the point of order.

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New York for that

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the amendment relates to the provision of the bill which refers to the Naval Reserve Force. It is recommended by the Navy Department; in fact, the amendment was drawn in the Navy Department. It is intended to encourage men to retain their service in the naval reserve. During the war a great many men, in fact, I am under the impression that perhaps a majority of the nearly 600,000 men who served in the Navy of the United States came in through the Naval Reserve. The real purpose of the amendment is to encourage these men to remain in that service.

If the Senator from Utah will examine the amendment closely he will find that it permits subsistence, among other things, to be furnished to the Naval Reserve men who serve with the colors for a period less than 15 days.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from New York mean that subsistence is to be furnished to them when they are not in the Navy?

Mr. CALDER. Oh, no.

Mr. KING. When they are not on the active list?

Mr. CALDER. When they are serving in the Naval Reserve, go out on a cruise with the Navy as naval reservists for a period of less than 15 days, the amendment provides that they may have their subsistence furnished them. To-day in such case they must furnish their own subsistence. If the Senator from Utah will inquire into the operation of the Naval Reservesystem, he will find that it is only with great difficulty that we are keeping up the interest in the Naval Reserve on the part of the men who were attached to it throughout the country: We have our National Guard in the several States, who are a part of the reserve of the Army. The purpose of this amendment, I repeat, is to keep up the interest on the part of the members of the Naval Reserve. I think if the Senator carefully examines my amendment he will agree that it is a very necessary one if we hope to maintain a reserve at all for the Navy.

I may say, Mr. President, that when the recent war came the Naval Militia of the country, as I recall, furnished something like twenty-odd thousand men almost immediately to the Navy. My own State furnished 6,000 men. I am anxious, after conversation with members of the Naval Militia and those who have taken an interest in the Naval Reserve, to perpetuate it and to make it as strong as it can be made. The amendment I have offered tends in that direction.

I dislike very much to insist on my point of order, Mr. KING. but this legislation is very important. It involves the consideration of many questions. It seems to me that the practice of attaching to important appropriation bills proposed legislation of great importance is unwise and is fraught with a great deal

I can not see all of the implications that may arise from the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from New York; I doubt whether a half dozen Senators upon the floor, aside, perhaps, from some of the members of the Naval Affairs Committee or those who have examined the matter, know the full implication and obligations which would be entailed upon the Government by the adoption of the amendment. I therefore insist upon my point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator state the grounds for his point of order?

Mr. KING. My point of order is that the amendment proposes general legislation upon an appropriation bill; that it involves expenditures for which no estimate has been made; and that it has not been referred to nor reported by any committee of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has to rule that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to occupy merely a minute or two of time to make a statement in reference to the pending bill. I am going to vote for the bill notwithstanding it contains some provisions that I do not like. Of course, it is an appropriation bill for the Navy, and we must appropriate for the Navy. The bill is for the most part a proper bill, and it is our duty to vote for necessary appropriations. However, to that provision in the bill increasing the personnel of the Navy I object very seriously, and if it were not for the fact that I believe in conference it will be, in a large measure at least, stricken out, I would be inclined to vote against the bill; but I feel sure that the House will not agree to the very large addition to the personnel provided for in the Senate bill.

Mr. President, in order to show the reason why I feel the personnel is entirely too large, I wish to read for a moment from page 48 of the House hearings on the naval appropriation bill of 1922:

STATEMENT ON BRITISH NAVAL ENLISTED PERSONNEL,

The following information, based on information as to the British figures from Admiral Niblack, naval attaché at London, under date of January 11, 1921, compares the United States and British enlisted personnel as of January 1, 1921, the United States figures being based on the latest compiled data.

Then follows the table, which I ask to have incorporated in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The table referred to is as follows:

Character of duty.	United States personnel.	British per- sonnel.
Seagoing vessels¹.  Training².  Hospitals³.  Recruiting  Aviation⁵  Communications⁵.  Other shore activities.  Coast Guard.	75,636 30,842 2,012 2,019 3,444 1,260 11,167	82,000 5,000 1,200 70 None. None. 16,930 3,009

Mr. McKELLAR. The figures set forth in the table show that the present personnel of the United States Navy is 126,380 men, while the present personnel of the British Navy is 105,100 men.

As we all know, the British Navy is at least half as large again as that of the United States, and it may be somewhat larger; and yet they have only 105,000 as against 125,000 men provided for in the pending Senate bill. If Great Britain, with a navy very much larger than that of the United States, can get along in these hard times with a personnel of 105,000, it stands to reason that the United States, with her smaller Navy, should get along with 100,000 men, as provided for by the House bill.

I am not an expert on naval matters at all, but I am informed that the additional personnel carries with it an additional appropriation of about $43,000,000. I think that $43,000,000 could be saved and ought to be saved to the American people. would not vote for the bill with that provision in it if I did not believe that the House would correct what I regard as a serious defect in that respect. I believe the House will correct it, and for that reason I am willing to vote for the bill, although at present it contains that provision.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and adopted by the Senate is an additional reason why I shall take pleasure in voting for the bill. Under that amendment the President of the United States is authorized and empowered to call a conference of the representatives of the Governments of Japan, Great Britain, and the United States to discuss measures looking to disarmament. I sincerely hope that he will carry out that provision of the bill, and I feel confident that he will do so; I am sure that this evidence on the part of Congress of its desire that we should take steps toward disarmament will be heeded by the President of the United States and carried out. For these reasons I shall support the pending bill.
Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter], who has the bill in charge, if midshipmen when they enter the Naval Academy are credited with a sufficient sum to enable them to purchase The reason why I ask the question is that their equipment? I notice that in the House, during the consideration of the Army appropriation bill, at the present session a provision was inserted, which I will read, as follows:

Provided further, That hereafter each new cadet shall, upon admission to the United States Naval Academy, be credited with the sum of $250, to cover the cost of the initial clothing and equipment issued, to be deducted subsequently from his pay.

Of course, the reason why the House of Representatives very appropriately inserted that provision was that in practically all instances the young men who enter the West Point Military Academy-and the same statement applies to those who enter the Naval Academy—are poor but deserving, and it becomes necessary for them, in order to enter the academy after they have qualified by passing the requisite examinations, to borrow the money with which to equip themselves with clothing, and so forth, for their entrance. It seems to me that if that rule should be applied to the West Point Military Academy, certainly it should also be applied to the midshipmen who enter the Naval Academy. My information is that there is no provision of law under which the Government may advance $250 to the young men who enter the Naval Academy, even though it will in the future in all probability advance such a sum to those who enter the Military Academy, the amount afterwards to be deducted from their pay.

So I am propounding the question to the Senator from Washington and asking if my information is correct; and if it be correct, what objection would there be to adopting an amendment that would confer the same advantage on the young men who enter the Naval Academy as it is intended to confer upon those who enter the Military Academy at West Point?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It would cost the Government that much more money. Objection has never been raised; there has been no complaint with the present situation. I think $250 is deposited by the midshipmen for the purpose of providing their equipment.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. If $250 were to be advanced to them, it could afterwards be deducted from their pay. In a sense, it is purely an advancement. The question that I was anxious about was whether or not my information was correct that the Naval Academy did not advance the $250 to purchase the original equipment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to amend line 1, page 30, after the figures "$37,023,859" by inserting the following:

Provided, That the sum of $250 shall be credited to each midshipman who entered the Naval Academy since May 15, 1920, and to each such midshipman discharged since that date to the extent of paying any balance due by any such midshipman to the academy on account of initial clothing and equipment issued to him: Provided further, That hereafter each new midshipman shall, upon admission to the Naval Academy, be credited with the sum of $250 to cover the cost of his initial clothing and equipment issued, to be deducted subsequently from his new

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I merely desire to say this in support of that amendment: I would not have offered it if the Senator from Washington had not borne out the correctness of the information that had come to me, that the academy did not advance this $250 to these boys who enter.

The Government, as I understand, loses nothing by it. It is deducted afterwards from the pay. It merely provides that instead of these young fellows who need it going out and borrowing the money, the Government advances it to them, and afterwards deducts it. If the rule should apply to those who enter the West Point Military Academy, certainly it should apply with equal force to the midshipmen who enter the Naval Academy. The language of the amendment is in the exact form of that in the Army appropriation bill; so I hope that the Senator will let it go to conference.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand that the amendment which the Senator proposes provides that the amount advanced to midshipmen for the purchase of their equipment, in case it should be adopted, shall subsequently be deducted from their pay, so that the Government would be reimbursed. Is that the effect of the amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. That is the object of it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. With that understanding of it, I will not make the point of order against the amendment. However, I will say to the Senator that we shall have to inquire into it if it goes to conference.

Mr. HARRISON. I should expect the conferees to do that.

of naval prisons.

Jan. I figure. Now being rapidly reduced.
British have separace air service, and it is understood that shore communications are in civilian hands. Under any circumstances, such enlisted men as are ashore are fully listed under next to last item, except where otherwise specifically listed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have had no opportunity to give it mature consideration.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from Washington, as well as the Senator from Mississippi, whether the amendment increases the obligations upon the part of the Govern-

Mr. HARRISON. It does not. It merely makes an advancement of $250, to be deducted afterwards from the pay of these men.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is my understanding.

Mr. HARRISON. It is the same rule that applies now, or will be applied, to the West Point Military Academy. Mr. McKELLAR. It does not apply now to the Military Academy, but it will apply if the bill as reported out by the Senate Military Affairs Committee is passed by the Senate, as I have no doubt it will be.

Mr. HARRISON. And which has already been passed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated. I should like to have it appear as an additional section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill a new section, to be numbered section 19, and to read as

Sec. 19. That the paragraph in the act of August 29, 1916, which reads as follows:

"One-half pay director with the rank of rear admiral to 4 pay directors with the rank of captain, to 8 pay inspectors with the rank of commander, to 87½ in the grades below pay inspector "—

Be amended to read as follows:

"One-half pay director with the rank of rear admiral to 6 pay directors with the rank of captain, to 12 pay inspectors with the rank of commander, to 81½ in the grades below pay inspectors: Provided, That after July 1, 1922, no vacancies as pay directors with the rank of captain, and pay inspectors with the rank of captain, and pay inspectors with the rank of captain, and pay inspectors with the rank of commander, shall be filled until the numbers have been reduced to those authorized by the act of August 29, 1916."

Mr. KING: Mr. President I reserve the point of order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I reserve the point of order against the amendment tendered by the Senator. I will not state the point of order until the Senator has an opportunity to make such explanation as he may care to make.

Mr. PITTMAN. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Utah raises the point of order?

Mr. KING. I do, Mr. President. I will, however, withhold the point of order until the Senator from Nevada makes such statement as he may care to make.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the object of this amendment is to have the percentage of officers of the higher ranks in the Supply Corps the same as the percentage of officers in the line of the Navy.

Mr. KING. Why should they be?

Mr. PITTMAN. The reason is this: They find that it is essential for officers in the Supply Corps performing various important duties under great responsibility on board ships where there are line officers to hold the same rank as the line officers performing a comparative service, of course in a different way.

The Navy Department found that they are handicapped by not being able to promote the officers in the Supply Corps at the same time that they promote the officers in the line. You take the running mate of an officer in the Supply Corps, and by length of service and the character of service they should move along to promotion equally; but the percentage of offi-cers allotted to the Supply Corps being less than in any other corps, there are not the positions to fill. An officer in the Supply Corps starts out with an officer of the line, and they are running mates. They serve on the same ship. They enter the service at the same time. They serve, we will say, for 10 years, and then a promotion comes to the line officer, and the promotion does not come to the officer of the Pay Corps. These men who have been cooperating on the ships together, one, we will say, in the Paymaster's Department, the other in the line. find themselves not of a common rank where they have been operating together, but the line officer of a higher rank than the

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. KING. Does not the Senator recognize that the same condition might be urged with respect to the promotions in the War Department? For instance, there may be graduated the same year two or three hundred from the Naval Academy, and in the course of a number of years promotions come. It is impossible to give the same promotions to all who graduated at the same time, regardless of their merit. The size of the Army might preclude that; reductions in the personnel might preclude that; and if, as we contemplate doing certainly within the next year or two, we reduce the personnel of the Navy from 120,000 perhaps to 50,000 or 60,000, if the Senator's amendment should prevail and that philosophy were to obtain and to be carried through all of the legislation, you would have admirals and vice admirals and commanders and captains for a Navy of one or two hundred thousand seamen.

While I can appreciate the point the Senator is making, that injustices may arise, and that two men of equal efficiency and equal ability and equal devotion to the service may not get the same promotions-indeed, one may be promoted and the other not promoted-it seems to me that is one of the fates incident to the service.

Mr. PITTMAN. Of course this amendment does not change the method of selection. The Senator is entirely right that the length of service does not always govern the propriety of promotions, nor does this amendment attempt to change it; but in the Navy we have so many officers to so many enlisted men. There is a proportion. That proportion has been agreed upon, and uniformly agreed upon, in all of these corps except this one. It was an oversight, apparently. For instance, if you will read here what the Paymaster General has to say on it you will understand. He says this in a letter addressed to the chairman of the committee:

My Dear Senator Poindexter: I may venture to remind you of the matter of readjusting the ranks in the Supply Corps of the Navy so that instead of 4 out of every 100 officers of the Supply Corps being pay directors with the rank of captain, there may be 6 pay directors with the rank of captain, and instead of 8 out of every 100 officers of the Supply Corps being pay inspectors with the rank of commander, there may be 12 inspectors with the rank of commander.

In other words, he seeks to have this corps, which has been neglected in some way, simply placed in the same condition as the other corps of the Navy, with the same proportion of officers to the same number of men as you find in the line, but not in any way to affect their method of selection. It does not increase the number of officers. I wish to impress that on the Senator. It does not increase the number of officers.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, it would give them higher rank.

Mr. PITTMAN. It does this: It increases the number of cap-tains in the Pay Corps and the number of commanders and proportionately decreases the number of lower officers. other words, the officers of the Pay Corps are unbalanced. They have too many lower officers and not enough higher officers to conduct the business of that corps. This does not increase them, but it is simply a readjustment.

Mr. KING. Why would it not do to bring down the number of the higher officers in the various other branches of the service? Instead of bringing them up, let us bring some down. There are more officers, anyway, with the higher ranks than are necessary for the service in the Army and in the Navy.

Mr. PITTMAN. That has been, of course, a matter of discussion time and again in the past, and undoubtedly will be again in the future; but this amendment does not attempt to change any existing law except with regard to the Pay Corps, and it seeks to put them on a parity with the other corps and nothing else. In other words, if there are so many captains to so many sailors or marines, we will say, or whatever the corps might be, they want the same number of captains proportionately in this corps that they have in all the others; and then when any general act is passed for the purpose of reducing the number of officers, this corps will go down with the others. That is the real object of this amendment.

It was sought by the former administration, but it was not acted on. It is sought by the Secretary of the Navy at the present time and it is sought by the Paymaster General. I have a letter here from Secretary Denby, addressed to the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, which it might be well to have read. I have also a letter addressed by the Paymaster General to the acting chairman of that committee, which possibly also should be read. I simply read an excerpt

It seems to me that the efficiency of this corps will be greatly benefited by this readjustment. I look upon that of more importance than doing justice, I might say, to these men. A number of these officers in the Pay Corps come from civil life, instead of coming from Annapolis, and I feel that, now that the line officers are willing that they should be treated just the same as line officers are, we should embrace this opportunity to take advantage of that consent, because it has been contended very often that the line officers rather obstructed the advancement of those coming from civil life. Whether that be true or not, we find paymasters of the Navy and pay directors who have been there for many, many years, some of them serving 10 or 15 years, who have performed a service of equal dignity and responsibility with the line officers, but the line officers have received preference in the past, because of these supply officers coming into the Pay Corps from civil life. It seems to me that now we have an opportunity to remedy that without any great obstruction-because the obstruction seems to have died outwe ought to take advantage of this opportunity. The increased cost of this to the Government will be only $25,000.

I will also read a part of the amendment the Senator from Utah naturally did not pay attention to or would not get the exact meaning of from hearing it read hastily. This proviso was placed in for the purpose of limiting the number of these captains and commanders. I will read the proviso:

Provided, That after July 1, 1922, no vacancies as pay directors with the rank of captain and pay inspectors with the rank of commander shall be filled until the numbers have been reduced to those authorized by the act of August 29, 1916.

In other words, this is a temporary act to cure a condition that exists right now that has grown up through years and years of time. The Secretary of the Navy originally presented it without that proviso, but Senators on the Naval Affairs Committee did not want this to become permanent, so they limited it to July 1, 1922. But by that time, or prior to that time, no doubt, we will take up the general question of officers in all branches of the service.

I ask to have these letters read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read. The reading clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 7, 1921.

Hon. Carroll. S. Page,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
United States Senate,

Hon. Carroll S. Page,

Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,

United States Senate.

My Drar Senator: I have the honor to invite your attention to a serious shortage in the Supply Corps of the United States Navy with respect to pay directors with rank of captain and pay inspectors with the rank of commander.

In attempting to make a redistribution of these officers as between shore duty and sea duty, it is found necessary to assign Junior supply officers to places of financial and administrative responsibility which for the best interests of the service require officers with rank more commensurate with such duty.

It is also found that officers who would be eligible for promotion to pay directors and pay inspectors would not receive any undue preferment by such promotion, for all of them are now far behind their fellow officers of the Supply Corps, which made such a splendid record in the war, have received no promotion whatever during or since that emergency, and opportunity should be offered to provide these necessary pay directors and pay inspectors in order to afford an equality of opportunity for advancement, which is essential to the efficiency of the service. The expense involved thereby is small.

It is therefore recommended that the paragraph in the act of August 29, 1916, which reads as follows:

"One-half pay director with the rank of read admiral to 4 pay directors with the rank of captain, to 8 pay inspectors with the rank of commander, to 87½ in the grades below pay inspectors."

So far as can be ascertained the above amendment, if enacted, will not give the Supply Corps any advantage over other corps for years to come, but if in the judgment of your committee it is deemed desirable to provide only for the temporary increase in the percentages of such pay directors and pay inspectors, the same could be accomplished by the addition of the following provise to said proposed amendment:

"Provided, That after July 1, 1922, no vacancles as pay directors with the rank of captain, and pay inspectors with EDWIN DENBY, Secretary of the Nacy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS,
Washington, D. C., May 25, 1921.

Washington, D. C., May 23, 1921.

Hon. Miles Poindexter,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator Poindexter: May I venture to remind you of the matter of readjusting the ranks in the Supply Corps of the Navy so that instead of 4 cut of every 100 officers of the Supply Corps being pay directors with the rank of captain there may be 6 pay directors with the rank of captain; and instead of 8 out of every 100 officers of the Supply Corps being pay inspectors with the rank of commander there may be 12 pay inspectors with the rank of commander? I understand that you have full information at hand, including the phrase-ology necessary to accomplish the above result, if handled as a Senate amendment to the naval bill.

You will remember that Secretary Denby and Admiral Coontz and Admiral Washington are all in favor of this amendment, and that its adoption is of great importance to the efficiency of the Navy. I know you understand also that the total additional expense involved is only a little over $25,000, and that the amendment does not increase the number of officers in the Supply Corps or in the Navy. Since I saw you the last time five of the officers of these higher ranks have been ordered to sea, correspondingly reducing the number of those in responsible positions ashore. For the proper conduct of the business of the Navy it is highly desirable that the grave responsibilities involved be assumed by officers of suitable rank.

Yours, sincerely,

David Potter,

Paymaster General of the Navy.

DAVID POTTER,
Paymaster General of the Navy.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, was a point of order reserved?

Mr. KING. I reserved the point of order. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. This seems to be a very important matter which it seems to me really should be considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and if the Senator from Utah does not make the point of order I will.

Mr. PITTMAN. May I suggest to the Senator, with regard to his statement that it should be considered by the Naval Affairs Committee, that I think the acting chairman will agree with me that the matter has been under consideration off and on for a year, at various times, by the Naval Affairs Committee. There has been, I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin, but one objection to this legislation, and that was that it was not terminable, that it was continuous, and the proviso added to the amendment terminating it on July 1, 1922, was supposed by the committee to cure that defect. I have spoken to a number of members of the committee with regard to it, and they had no objection to the amendment, so long as the proviso terminating the provision on July 1, 1922, was accepted by the Senate. The matter of this particular amendment was never brought directly to the committee while considering this bill, but the question of the injustice done to the officers of the Pay Corps and their lower percentage has been a subject of discussion for a long time.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator I would say that when he offered his amendment I did go to a member of the committee on this side and ask him whether the matter had been considered by the committee, and he said there had been some talk about it at various times, but no action had ever been taken. The very fact that it has been before the committee and no action taken, it seems to me, is an added reason why action should not be taken in this way. I make the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator state his point of order?

Mr. LENROOT. I make the point of order that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken. Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amend-

The READING CLERK. Amend section 1 by adding, after the word "otherwise," on line 14, page 53, the following:

That no part of the appropriations made in this act shall be available for new construction at the naval plants at Portsmouth or Boston, and that when the construction or repair work now being done at said yards is completed, further work therein shall be discontinued; and the Secretary shall, upon completion of said repairs or construction, close said plants and sell or otherwise dispose of the same upon such terms and conditions as will be most advantageous to the Government of the Injudy States. United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will be defeated. There can not be any money spent for construction either at Portsmouth or Boston unless special provision is made for it in the bill.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think there is any item in the bill for improvements at these navy yards. The Senator certainly would not intend the amendment to have the effect of preventing the Government from carrying on such work as these navy yards are adapted for, as long as we are at the expense of maintaining them, in the way of ship repair and ship building

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if that is intended as an interrogatory, permit me to say that the amendment is not aimed at the termination of work which is now being performed in either of the yards, but it is aimed at the discontinuance, when the present work shall have been completed, of any further governmental activities in either of the yards. It is based not only upon the theory but upon what I think an examination of the facts indubitably establishes that there are entirely too many yards and naval bases, docks, and governmental plants and works, and that their maintenance calls for the annual expenditure of tens of millions of dollars. If we would get rid of some of these useless excrescences, the vast expenditures called for in naval bills might be materially reduced.

We can not defend the wanton waste in governmental expenditures. An efficient Navy of the strength of our Navy could be maintained at a cost of very much less than that now incurred. If we would discontinue the use of a number of plants and yards and docks and cut down the civilian employees and reduce the personnel of the Navy to proper limits and scrap scores of obsolete ships, there would be millions saved and the bill could be reduced at least $200,000,000. This course would not impair the efficiency of the Navy nor prevent the creation and building up of a modern and efficient Navy.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senafor if he has any special reason for designating the discontinuance of the navy yards at Portsmouth, N. H., and Boston, Mass. It seems to me if the Senator really wanted to curtail the expenditure of the public funds for naval expansion he might have made his amendment a general one, leaving it to the Secretary of the Navy to choose the particular navy yards which should be closed up.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the inquiry of my friend is pertinent, and the implied criticism in his question is perhaps warranted. I disclaim having any antipathy toward Boston. Far be it from me to say anything against "the hub of the universe." I have only the waymout faller a state of the manner faller as the hub of I have only the warmest feeling for the State of New Hampshire and the city of Portsmouth. But I do not think Portsmouth is a suitable place for a navy yard; nor do I believe the Government needs a navy yard at that point. yard should be abandoned as soon as the work there being performed is finished. I will say frankly that I am not so sure about the situation at Boston. But I have some information that leads me to the view that it would be for the best interests of the Government if the navy yard there should be closed.

I do know that the Navy Department is burdened with too many yards and docks and plants, and the taxpayers are compelled to pay annually millions and tens of millions of dollars to support this wasteful policy. The Senator knows that we have plants at Portsmouth, Boston, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Norfolk, Charleston, New Orleans, Mare Island, Bremerton, and many other points. I will have to call the acting chairman of the committee to my assistance if I attempted to enumerate all the places where naval bases, docks, yards, plants, and stations have been established. Many are entirely unnecessary and impose great burdens upon the Government.

By this amendment I am challenging attention to this evil. I desire to emphasize the fact that there must be retrenchment. Speeches have been made repeatedly concerning the enormous cost of the Navy, but none of the replies have controverted the position of those who have pleaded for economy. There is merit in the view which is to be implied from the question of the Senator from Massachusetts that there ought not to be a discontinuance permanently of work at any yard without further For that reason I propose to follow the amendexamination. ment which I have just tendered with another, and if the acting chairman of the committee will accept this latter amendment I shall not press a vote upon the one which I have just offered. May I read the proposed amendment, which I shall submit?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. As a substitute for the other

Mr. KING. I shall withdraw the other amendment if the acting chairman of the committee will accept this one I am about to offer.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I thought the Senator was not serious.

Mr. KING. The Senator is mistaken. I am very serious. I propose the following:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to submit to Congress at the earliest practicable date a full and detailed report as to the number, kind, character, and description of all naval bases, yards, plants, docks, machine shops, including the armor factory at Charleston, W. Va., and all other real or personal property under the control of the Navy Department, together with the cost thereof, the purposes for which the same are being used, the cost of the upkeep and maintenance of the same, whether or not armor plate is being produced by the Government plant at Charleston, W. Va., and also the cost of production; and said Secretary is further directed to report whether any of said naval bases, yards, plants, docks, machine shops, or other real or personal property under the control or jurisdiction of the Navy Department can be abandoned, dispensed with, or sold, or otherwise disposed of by the United States without disadvantage or injury to the Government of the United States; and, further, to submit in said report recommendations concerning the disposition to be made of said plants and properties herein referred to.

It does seem to me that the committee should accept this amendment

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President— Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am under the impression that similar reports have recently been made, and I have an idea that the data, or most of it, which would be required to comply with such a provision is at hand. Personally I have no objection to the amendment at all. I think it would be very desirable to have accurate and complete information as to the various naval stations. I have no objection to the amendment which the Senator has just read.

Mr. KING. I have before me what I believe to be the last report made by the Navy Department upon the matter referred to by the Senator, but it does not supply all the information which is sought in the amendment just read.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I call the Senator's attention to the Helm report and to the so-called Daniels report, made by the various naval officers who accompanied the Secretary of the Navy last year on a tour of inspection of the yards, in which is contained a complete history of each yard, its present equipment and activities, as well as the nature of all the improvements which have been made.

Mr. KING. I am familiar with the report to which the Senator refers, and I concede that it does contain much information. That report, however, in my opinion, seems to proceed upon the theory that all plants, yards, docks, and bases must be continued and others constructed.

It seems to be in harmony with the navalistic policy proposed by Secretary Daniels that the United States was to have the greatest navy in the world if our Government did not enter the League of Nations. That report seems to be predicated upon the theory that we are to continue indefinitely the building of battleships and that there is to be no reduction in the instrumentalities employed in preparation for war. We are to go on forever in this mad race for naval supremacy. resources are to be wasted in the building of battleships and developing a military and naval program.

Moreover, there is nothing in the report with respect to Charleston, W. Va., where a large amount of money has been expended in the construction of an armor-plate plant. told, but I have no definite information, that notwithstanding the vast amount expended there they have cast one ingot. should like to know whether we ought to continue that plant or what disposition should be made of it. I should like a specific report upon all these matters mentioned and whether we can not without any injury to the Navy abandon some of the many plants and yards now operated by the Government. believe that a number of yards and docks upon the Atlantic coast should be closed or sold to private persons or corporations, who might employ them in their marine business.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I have no desire to prolong the debate. I merely wish to say to the Senator from Utah that one of his declarations will be seriously challenged on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. KING. I have no doubt about that. I know that whenever any attempt is made to abandon any of the forts or arsenals or military or naval establishments, no matter how useless and unnecessary they are, immediately an army of defenders will be mobilized and fierce resistance developed. That is the reason why we have in the United States to-day scores of military posts and military establishments, and many yards and docks and naval works, which the United States does not require. All efforts to abandon them prove futile, because of the pressure brought by local interests.

I read in the report of the British Admiralty and in the discussions in Parliament that they are "scrapping" docks as well as ships. Great Britain is practicing economy, while we are becoming more prodigal in our expenditures. It does seem to me that the time has come, as was so forcefully stated by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenroot] a few days ago, when there should be economy practiced in the operation of the Navy.

I appeal to Republican Senators to follow the admonition and sound advice of the Secretary of the Treasury. He sounds a serious warning concerning the rocks that are in the pathway of the Nation. He challenges attention to the extravagance in the departments and to the enormous appropriations carried in recent measures. He mentioned two fields or activities in which retrenchment could be made. He referred to the war and naval bills. But there is no retrenchment, and no promise of reform. Indeed, the majority party will enact measures calling for nearly $1,000,000,000 for these two departments for the coming year. The burden will rest upon the Republican Party for the increase of taxes, or at least for failure to reduce taxes, and for these enormous expenditures provided for in Republican legislation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President-

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. As bearing on the phase of discussion now before the Senate, I wish to read just a few words of colloguy from the Congressional Record of February 17, 1909, when a naval appropriation bill for that year was pending. Charleston, S. C., was then under discussion, as was also Pensacola. The then Senator from South Carolina, Mr. Tillman, a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, responding to something which I had said, made this declaration:

to something which I had said, made this declaration:

Mr. TILLMAN. I want Pensacola built up and I want Charleston built up. I do not want all the money we pay in taxes to go north.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator now has simply furnished proof, as he has heretofore in this Chamber, of the fact that there is a struggle locally for this money; and that is the basis of my criticism of the plan of the bill. He does not want the money to go north. He wants it to go south

Mr. TILLMAN. I want my share, and no more.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; that is it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am tired of seeing the South treated as though the war ended last year. I is 43 years since the war ended.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That was the position the Senator took here some time ago, when he said if this money was to be—

Mr. DINON. I have it here.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator has the exact quotation, I will use it.
Mr. TILLMAN. I will tell you what I said.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have it right here.

Mr. TILLMAN. I said if stealing was to be done, I wanted my share of it; and I do.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have right here what the Senator said. That is not all the Senator from South Carolina said. On the 1st of March, 1899, speaking of one of these naval appropriation bills, he said—

This is quoting from Senator Tillman—

This is quoting from Senator Tillman-

"This bill is loaded down with expansion in every navy yard. I am trying to get a little for Port Royal; because, if you are going to steal, I want my share."

Mr. TILLMAN. Is that contrary to the human nature which obtains

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I forbear to express any opinion about the morals and ethics involved in that kind of statesmanship, but I repeat what I said a moment ago, that there are too many navy yards and too many naval bases and too much money spent for the Navy. The bill carries at least $200,000,000 more than it should. I can not vote for it, much as I wish to vote for a reasonable and proper naval bill.

I wish to serve notice upon my good friend from Massachusetts on my left [Mr. Walsh] and the distinguished leader of the Republicans upon the other side of the aisle [Mr. Lodge] that though I withdraw, if the acting chairman accepts the last amendment which I have tendered I shall, before the next session of Congress, have something in a concrete way to present with respect to the Boston Navy Yard and Portsmouth and other yards and plants. I hope I shall be able to convince Senators that there must be retrenchment and that we must reduce the number of active yards, bases, and plants under the control of the Navy Department.

In view of the statement made by the Senator in charge of the bill. I withdraw the amendment just offered and submit the following, and move its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment last proposed by the Senator from Utah and which he read.

Mr. POMERENE. Let it be reported from the desk. The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The reading clerk read Mr. King's proposed amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, in the debate the other day upon the Alameda item certain statements were made in respect to the grant made of lands there and regarding the contemplated project which have made the people of Alameda County justly indignant. I have received many telegrams concerning those statements, and because those statements are without foundation and do a gross injustice I wish to read one of the telegrams and then to insert some of the others. One of the telegrams is as follows:

OAKLAND, CALIF., May 26.

HIRAM W. JOHNSON, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We feel very much concerned over recent action in Senate in respect to naval development on the Pacific. Alameda item should not be killed by the false charge that it is a real estate deal. This site was selected by the various naval commissions. It was given to the Government by the city of Alameda on approval of State legislature. The only adjoining lands affected belong to the University of California. We feel that it is proper to insist that you make every effort to have a reconsideration on the ground that all things essential to the defense of the Nation should be given first consideration.

San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, by George C. Boardman, vice president; Livermore Chamber of Commerce; Hayward Chamber of Commerce, by A. W. Beam, president; Oakland Merchants' Exchange, by I. H. Spiro, president; Pleasanton Chamber of Commerce, by C. Letham, president; Central Labor Council of Alameda County, by E. S. Hurley, president William A. Spooner, secretary; Building Trades Council of Alameda County, by S. J. Donohue; Oakland Chamber of Commerce, by J. H. King, president.

Telegrams of like import have come to me from Hon. Joseph R. Knowland, a very well-known citizen of Oakland, Calif., and from Arthur H. Breed, a senator from the county of Alameda.

I ask that I may insert these telegrams in the Record without reading them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission to do so is granted.

The telegrams referred to are as follows:

OAKLAND, CALIF., May 26, 1921.

Senator Hiram W. Johnson, Washington, D. C.:

Washington, D. C.:

Citizens of East Bay region feel that the charge made in Senate that Alameda naval base proposition was real estate deal wholly unjustified by facts. The land was donated by the city of Alameda, and there are no tracts on sale in the vicinity of this proposed site; only land near it owned by University of California, which is, in fact, the State of California. Alameda in donating this land deprived itself of revenue that could be obtained by taxation were it sold or leased to private industry. We feel that this fact should be presented to the Senate. It is the earnest wish of overwhelming majority of people of this vicinity that there may be an opportunity to reinsert the Alameda item, knowing the crying need for naval facilities of the Pacific coast, as recognized by the Navy Department and by published statements by Admiral Rodman, recently in charge of Pacific Fleet. We feel positive that, realizing these facts, you will give your active and energetic support to the item should it again be voted upon in the Senate.

J. R. KNOWLAND.

J. R. KNOWLAND.

OAKLAND, CALIF., May 27, 1921.

Hon. Hiram W. Johnson,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Regarding Alameda naval base matter, the press reports that one of the principal arguments made on floor of Senate was that Alameda naval base was a real estate proposition. Nothing could be further from the truth. While the people of Alameda County naturally desire the naval base to be located in this county, they honestly feel that it is a proposition for the proper and necessary defense of the west coast of America. The naval base should be located where the engineers have determined, and it can not be commenced too soon. Will you not refute false statements and do everything you can to expedite the entire matter? Am also wiring Senator Shortridge.

With sincerest regards and best wishes,

ARTHUR H. BREED.

Mr. JOHNSON. Alameda resents and we all resent the charge that this item constituted a real estate deal. It does nothing of the sort. The selection of the site was made, as I assume Senators know, by the committee appointed by the Senate and House of Representatives and was made unanimously. The committee making the selection consisted of L. Heisler Ball, Miles Poin-DEXTER, HENRY W. KEYES, KEY PITTMAN, and T. J. WALSH, of the Senate, and Fred A. Britten, Frederick C. Hicks, A. E. B. Stephens, L. P. Padgett, and D. J. Riordan, of the House of Representatives.

In addition to that, what is endeavored to be given by Alameda to this naval site consists of something like 5,400 acres of land, 500 of which are not at all submerged and are of the value of many millions of dollars. Nearly 5,000 acres otherwise are given, and their value is very great indeed.

This was a selection, I recall to you, made by a committee of the Senate and of the House of Representatives after due investigation by them.

I state these facts thus very briefly in justification to Alameda and in justification of the project relating to Alameda. I do not ask a reconsideration, because investigation has convinced me that it would be utterly useless, and because that investigation has demonstrated to me what all here have known since the commencement of discussion of the naval bill, that if the item were passed, the House would refuse absolutely to concur, it would be eliminated in conference, and it would be no part ultimately of the present naval appropriation bill. That the appropriation for the Alameda base could not go through in the present naval bill has been conceded for many weeks. But in justice to the people of Alameda and in refutation of the false statement that this was a real estate deal. or that there was anything sinister connected with it, I place these telegrams in the RECORD and for their signers and for our people generally resent the unjust and unfounded charge.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the pending bill and ask that it may be inserted immediately following the amendment which was presented by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], and which has been adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The READING CLERK. At the end of section 17 it is proposed to insert the following:

That the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to delay for a period of six months, in whole or in part, the building program provided for in this act, in order to enable him to arrange for a conference with the Governments of Great Britain and Japan, with the view of reducing substantially the naval building programs of the several Governments so participating in said conference, and if they agree upon such plan of reduction, the President is hereby further authorized to suspend, in whole or in part, the said building program in order to enable him to carry out any agreement thus made.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I beg the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments. The Senate the other day adopted unanimously the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borahl], which simply requested the President to invite a conference with Great Britain and Japan looking to the adoption of some program of disarmament and to present that to the Congress. The amendment which I now propose is simply supplementary to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho, which, I repeat, has been unanimously adopted. I take it that when Senators voted for the Borah amendment they all honestly hoped and prayed that some step would be taken which would look to the adoption of some dis-It seems to me that this Government is subarmament plan. ject to some criticism in that for long years we have been professing to the world that we believed in disarmament. fess that I am not quite able to see how we can make such professions before the world and at the same time on every occasion when the Congress of the United States is called upon to vote upon the subject we are recorded as not in favor of disarmament but in favor of a greater armament.

It seems to me that when the President of the United States approaches Great Britain and Japan and asks them to send representatives to discuss with this Government the question of disarmament, the President ought to be in a position to say to them, if necessary, "I will suspend a part of the present program of construction pending negotiations." Bear in mind, please, Senators, that this amendment loes not say he shall suspend it in whole or in part. It is left to his discretion to do it or not. I conceive that the situation may present itself when our commissioners meet with the other commissioners that the foreign representatives might well say to ours, "Well, you adopted a certain program of construction in 1916; you are still carrying it out; you are adding day by day new tonnage to your Navy. Are you serious about negotiating for disarmament? Will you not even suspend work while we are in conference?

The House has passed a bill appropriating nearly $400,000,000, about one-half of which, I believe, was for new construction. We are adding to that $100,000,000; if the Senate bill should pass and become a law, then about $200,000,000 of the amount appropriated will be for new construction. What position will our commissioners be in if the commissioners representing the foreign Governments were to say, "Here you are talking about disarmament and the limitation of armaments and at the same time you are building as rapidly as you can"

Under the circumstances, would it not add to the influence of the President and would it not reflect better faith on the part of this Government if the President were to say, "For a reasonable time-any part of the six months-I will suspend a given part of this program, hoping and praying that we may get to-

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President-

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the President should do so, would that operation suspend the building programs of the other countries covered by the amendment of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, knowing his views on the subject as they are expressed through the press, I take it that the President would not agree to an immediate suspension of this construction in whole or in part unless the other Governments should also consent to suspension on their part.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But, Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator whether the other Governments would not respond, "You are acting under the direction of your Congress and by authority conferred by your Congress, but we have no such power; our program is not thus conditioned and it must go forward"?

Mr. POMERENE. Is the Senator simply propounding to me a hypothetical question, or does he know whether or not the other powers would confer that authority upon their commissioners?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not know; that is what I want to know from the Senator. Is there any arrangement or any understanding by which a reciprocal suspension may be brought

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not know. Our purpose here is to invite this negotiation. When we adopted the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] we did not know authoritatively whether the other powers would meet us or not, but we believe they will. I saw a statement the other day purporting to come from an eminent citizen of Japan to the effect that he had been discussing this question of disarmament in different Japanese cities, and that in his audiences he took a poll, and that the expression of the people was almost unanimous in favor of some plan of disarmament. We have seen repeatedly statements coming from Japanese statesmen-Count Ishii, for instance—to the effect that they were eager for disarmament, but that they were compelled to go on because the United States had adopted its program of armament.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, let me say that I hope the Senator has very correctly estimated the sentiment prevailing in Japan, and likewise that we may be able to get an agreement; but the situation would be rather embarrassing it we suspended our building program while the negotiations were pending and they went on with theirs.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think my distinguished friend from Montana is anticipating a situation which is not likely to occur. We have the right, I think, to believe that there is a very substantial sentiment not only in Japan but in Great Britain in favor of disarmament, or at least a limitation of armament, and I know that they are under greater necessity for disarmament than we are.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Does not the Senator think that the chief Mr. WILLIAMS. trouble now being experienced by the ministry in Japan who would like to disarm, and by Lloyd-George in Great Britain who would also like to disarm, is from the militaristic element of their countries threatening them that if they disarm navally before America does they will be visited with political punishment?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I suspect there is a good deal of force in the statement which the Senator from Mississippi has made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And now, if we use the same argument here, it is an endless chain that will never quit, and nobody will ever disarm.

Mr. POMERENE. Undoubtedly so; and I do not propose by this amendment to suspend construction. I simply propose that President of the United States shall be vested with the authority in his discretion to suspend our operations in whole or in part, and I take it that he is going to use his sound. discretion; and I want to say, Senators, that if there is one subject in which the people of this country are more interested. than another, it is the question of economy in connection with this naval program.
Mr. OWEN. Mr. President-

Mr. POMERENE. I recognize the fact that there are certain elements of society that are always speaking in favor of greatarmies and great navies; and I confess at the same time that if there is no disposition on the part of these different nations. to meet us halfway, then I am in favor of our equipping our-selves for whatever the situation may require.

I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I merely wanted to ask the Senator if he did not find the opinion as to the attitude of the people of Japan fully confirmed as to the opinion of the people of the world in what was done at Versailles in the treaty and in the covenant. of the league?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh. Mr. President, there is no doubt about it.

Mr. OWEN. The whole world has agreed upon the need for it.

Mr. POMERENE. We did not ratify that treaty, but 42 nations did ratify it, and by so ratifying it they agreed to enter upon negotiations for some plan of disarmament,

Mr. President, I think this proposition is so simple that it is waste of time to discuss it further.

The other day I received a letter from the Oberlin League of Women Voters. Oberlin is one of our splendid college towns. Perhaps three-fourths or four-fifths of the people there are Republicans, but I dare say the sentiment that was expressed by this league is the sentiment that you will find in every substantial locality in Ohio. I am going to read it:

DEAR SENATOR POMERENE: The following telegram has been sent to resident Harding, and we ask that you give him your support in this matter:

"This evening the people of Oberlin, Ohio, in mass meeting assembled, under the leadership of the League of Women Voters, and representing church, college, and town organizations, unanimously voted as follows:

"'We urge the President and Congress to take the leadership in calling a conference with other governments for the purpose of securing the reduction of armaments at the earliest possible time, and pending this conference we urge a half in the 1916 naval building program and deprecate any increase in the Army."

Sincerely, yours,

Eduzabeth Crayath Millers.

EDIZABETH CRAVATH MILLER, Secretary.

Mr. WILLIS: Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to his colleague?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. WILLIS. I want to get some information about the specific provision of the amendment offered by my colleague. The amendment that was offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], and for which everybody voted, provided that-

The President is requested to invite the Governments of Great Brit-n and Japan to send representatives to an international disarmament conference.

Does the Senator propose to request the President, or to irect the President, or to authorize the President? What is direct the President, or to authorize the President? the specific thing that he undertakes to do?

Mr. POMERENE. I shall be glad to read my amendment to the Senator. It provides as follows:

The President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to delay for a period of six months, in whole or in part, the building program provided for in this act in order to enable him to arrange for a conference with the Governments of Great Britain and Japan with the view of reducing substantially the naval building programs of the several Governments so participating in said conference; and if they agree upon such plan of reduction, the President is hereby further authorized to suspend in whole or in part the said building program in order to enable him to carry out any agreement thus made.

I do not want to tie the hands of the President in the least. I want him to be able to go to these other powers clothed with a plenary power in this respect, so that he will not be handicapped in any of his negotiations; and if it comes to naught, then I take it we shall at least have done our part by our own people and by the people of the world. If he is successful, we will all be glad that we have adopted this course.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President The VICE PRESIDENT. Does th Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Illinois. Mr. McCORMICK. Does the Senator intend that the President shall be authorized to suspend construction before the conference begins, and while the other powers are still building?

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President. He is given absolute power. He can do this or not. He can do it when he chooses, or not do it.

Mr. McCORMICK. Precisely. I asked if the Senator intended that the President should be authorized to suspend construction before the conference began and although the other powers might still continue to build?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, Mr. President, of course I think under this amendment he would have that power, but I do not anticipate that he would exercise that power at all. I am willing to trust the President, and I hope my Republican brethren on the other side are willing to trust him. I think he is always amenable to reason, and I think he would not suspend the carrying out of this program unless he felt that the other powers were meeting him at least halfway.

Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. KING.

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. By way of reply to the observations of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick], permit me to say to the Senator from Ohio that France has discontinued all work upon her capital ships and is doing very little upon smaller and auxiliary craft. Great Britain is doing absolutely no work upon any capital ship and broke up three that were upon the stocks. Japan, according to the testimony of an admiral before the committee, is at work upon one capital ship. formation which we have is very imperfect as to what other work she is doing; but the best information, in my opinion, which is obtainable shows that Japan is merely working upon a program that was outlined some 12 years ago; so that in all the world there is no material work being done upon war vessels except in the United States and some little in Japan.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator from Utah for his contribution to this discussion. simply confirms me in my faith that we ought to adopt this amendment. It will enable the President to meet the commissioners from the other countries in the proper spirit and clothed with the proper authority. Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I rather deprecate the habit which seems to have developed of comparing the military programs of the United States and Japan, which constantly recurs; but I am compelled to say, in response to the statement made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. King], that in so far as Japan is concerned-and it is not necessarily with any hostile attitude toward the United States-she is spending onethird of her entire national income on her naval program. Japanese naval policy is based upon what she calls the eighteight program; that is, that in 1928 she will have eight battleships and eight battle cruisers, none of them more than eight years old; and the statement that is made by authoritative naval officers in Japan whose statements I have is that in their opinion when that program is completed Japan will have the most powerful navy in the world.

So much for the reference of the Senator from Utan to the statement that Japan has entered into a naval construction

Mr. KING. Mr. President— Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator to give us that information in another form? He has just stated that Japan was expending about one-third of her resources on her naval program. Will the Senator give us the amount which she is expending, and then give us the amount which the United States is expending, so that we can judge as to whether Japan's program is greater or less than ours? My understanding is that the amount that she is expending is about one-third of what we are expending.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is an entire misapprehension, Japan is appropriating this year 538,522,859 yen for her navy, and when the Senator takes into consideration the fact that material and wages in Japan are lower than they are in this country, that the pay of the navy is negligible, Japanese seamen receiving practically no pay, he can readily appreciate the fact that their appropriation is practically as potential as ours.

Furthermore, Mr. President, inasmuch as reference has been made to armies, permit me to say that Japan is maintaining and providing for a regular army of 296,000 men and 1,845,000 trained reserves. The United States has undertaken to maintain an adequate Navy upon the theory that, having sufficient power at sea, she will be enabled thereby to reduce her land forces to a minimum.

On the contrary, in France, for instance, which has been mentioned by the Senator from Utah, an army of 800,000 men, approximately, is being maintained. In Great Britain a regular army of 416,000 is maintained, with territorials numbering 250,000 and trained reserves of 300,000, all of which should be taken into account in the general estimate of the amount expended for military purposes for national defense; whereas preparations are being made for the reduction of the Army of the United States to 170,000, possibly to 150,000 men.

Senators who are raising these questions have themselves on repeated occasions since the debate upon this bill began called attention to the new building program of Great Britain, and I am not questioning it; I am citing it in contradiction of the assertion which is now made that other military and naval powers have ceased to build navies, whereas it is only a few hours since we were told, by the Senator from Utah and others, that Great Britain has entered into contracts for four of the greatest battleships in the world, super Hoods, a combined battle cruiser and battleship, which, to use the expression of the Senator from Utah himself, will be superior to anything of the kind in the world, combining speed and power.

But, Mr. President, we have already adopted a provision looking toward a conference of the naval powers for the purpose of bringing about a limitation of naval armaments. 1916 Congress declared its policy upon that subject by attaching a provision to that effect to the naval appropriation act of that year, which has been in effect ever since and is in effect In the Sixty-sixth Congress, when the naval appropriation bill was pending, the Senate repeated an expression to the same effect by adopting an amendment to the bill requesting and authorizing the President to bring about a conference of naval powers looking toward a limitation and a reduction of armaments. We have repeated the same thing in this bill, and nothing can be gained by adding another amendment covering the same subject, repeating the same request to the President, duplicating the authorization, with the added provision that he shall have discretion to bring about a suspension of our entire naval construction program.

If Congress proposes to put a stop to the work which it has authorized and which is now in progress, Congress ought to do The discretion and the determination of the question whether or not this naval program should be suspended ought not to be vested in any other power except the branch of the Government which has control over the making of war and the declaration of peace, which is Congress. To vest in the President the discretion to call a suspension of the construction program now under way would mean the loss of hundreds of millions of dollars to the United States by the disorganization of the industrial forces which are now at work upon these ships and which could not be reassembled and reorganized after a suspension of six months. It would leave in a state of utter wreck and confusion construction upon all of the ships of the program which was authorized in 1916 and which is now considerably advanced.

Mr. EDGE, Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. I draw attention to the fact also that in the amendment presented by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Bonan] it is provided, in the last three lines, that if the nations agree upon terms, such understanding or agreement is to be reported to the respective Governments for approval. In that event it seems to me it would be entirely without force or effect for the President to have additional power to stop the program, because under the Borah amendment, if an agreement is reached by the other nations, the nature of the agreement must be reported to the respective Governments, and then the Congress of the United States, in agreement, would naturally provide the necessary legislation looking to disarmament. Just what could be gained by the President having that additional power when he must, in any event, report to Congress the nature of any agreements that are reached?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I think the suggestion made by the Senator from New Jersey is very timely.

I submit to the Senate the question of whether or not it would be discreet, diplomatic, good statesmanship, in entering into a conference with other naval powers looking toward a limitation of armament, to begin that conference by suspending our building program, while they go on with theirs, with the result that at the end of six months they would be immeasurably stronger than they are at the present time, while our entire program would be in such a state of chaos that it would be impossible ever to restore it. The information the Committee on Naval Affairs had from the Bureau of Construction, presided over by Admiral Taylor, was that the loss would be so great that it could not be estimated, and anybody who is familiar with industrial organizations can see the difficulty and the practical impossibility of resuming the work at the point where it was left off, after the forces have been dis-integrated and the material has deteriorated, as would be the case after a suspension of six months.

I do not think any such authority ought to be vested in the President, and it does not indicate any lack of confidence in the President for Congress to decline to vest in him the discretion to determine whether or not there should be a suspension of the naval program. It might as well be said that the enactment of any legislation by Congress is an indication of a lack of confidence in the President. Under our form of government the shaping of great policies of State, the preparation for war and national defense, falls under the control of the legislative branch, and that is where it ought to be kept; and that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio changes the existing law, that it is general legislation, is shown by the fact that he insists upon using this language, and enacting it, in order to bring about the condition which he desires. If that can not be done without the adoption of this amendment, it shows conclusively that the adoption of the amendment would create an authority in the President which does not exist now, and consequently that it is general legislation.

I think it is objectionable, further, for the reason that it is a delegation of legislative power. I doubt very much whether, under the Constitution of the United States, Congress has the authority to vest in the President of the United States the power to determine whether or not existing laws shall be carried out, or whether they shall be suspended, or whether this policy or that policy, which in its nature is of a legislative character, shall be adopted.

Therefore, Mr. President, upon the ground that it is a change in existing law, that it is a delegation of legislative power to an executive authority, and that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill, I make the point of order against the

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, unless the Chair wants to consider the point of order right now, I wish to be heard upon the substantive legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Chair indulge me for an observation on this subject?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. This is simply amendatory or supplemental to something which has already been adopted, namely, the Borah amendment. It can not be anything more or less than a limitation upon the appropriations which are made herein. It is not in that sense general legislation. If it is general legislation, then there can be no limitation placed upon an appropriation without meeting the same objection.

The Senator from Washington makes the suggestion that it is vesting in the President the power of legislation. Under the bill these expenditures are to be made by the executive department, and by this amendment we are only conferring the power upon the President to suspend the expenditures which are to be made by the executive department. I do not care to discuss the matter further, but it does seem to me it is not general legislation within that sense.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as the Chair has ruled already, and, as I believe, correctly, I desire to say only a word. It is perfectly clear on the face of this proposition, to my mind, that it is a change of existing law and that it is general legis-Whether we have a right to delegate the power or not is another question; but it does delegate and authorize power. There is no question in my mind that it is subject to the point

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. The Borah amendment originally was subject to a point of order, was it not?

Mr. LODGE. I think so.

Mr. HARRISON. Since it was adopted, why is not this amendment to the Borah amendment in order?

Mr. LODGE. The fact that an amendment is allowed to go in without objection, sub silentio, does not make everything else that is offered in order.

Mr. HARRISON. I submit that there are precedents which hold that when a matter is subject to a point of order and the point of order is not made an amendment to such an amendment is germane.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I understand that the President has decided that the amendment is subject to the point of order.

I did not rise for the purpose of expressing any confidence in the efficacy of the amendment even if it had been adopted. I have no degree of confidence in the efficacy of the Borah amendment, although it has been adopted. The President of the United States has the power by initiative to negotiate treaties with all peoples upon all subjects. It can not be a change of existing law to express the desire that he should do it. But however that may be, I want to submit some remarks upon the general subject itself, knowing that what I have to say will not count in the present, and if it will count at all will count in the future.

The Senator from Washington has made a talk which merely means, reduced to one English sentence, "Keep it up; keep it Keep what up? The old endless game of rivalry in socalled self-defense. Under each plea of self-defense there has lain for half a century, more or less concealed, the desire to be dominant and predominant. The plea of self-defense is a mere piece of legislative hypocrisy. There is not a man in the United States who does not know that the United States needs no naval self-defense by increasing naval appropriations at this time. When you take the position that you can not set the example of taking your pistol out of your hip pocket for fear some one else will not take his pistol out of his hip pocket, you merely say by it that you want to have the advantage of your pistol in your hip pocket. That is God's honest truth, and that is all there is to it.

The Senator closed his speech by saying he imagined there was no one upon this floor would say that it was wise or righteous upon the part of the people of the United States to suspend their appropriations for naval warfare until everybody else had done it. Well, so far as his defiance is concerned, although I seldom take a mere dare, I accept it. I say that it is wise and that it is righteous for the United States of all nations upon the surface of the earth to set the example and to take the first step, and I say it for these reasons:

First, this is in area, with the exception of one other now disorganized country, the greatest country in the world. It is in population, with the exception of one other now disorganized country, the greatest in the world. It is in wealth, without exception, the greatest in the world. It is in power of immediate mobilization and setting the hearts of its people afire with patriotism the leading nation of the world. It is in geographical isolation from foreign attack the best protected nation in the world.

I have lived, as has the Senator from Washington, in countries where men went armed to the teeth all the time, and where the time finally came for disarmament. Who disarmed first? The coward? No; it was the bravest man in the community.

Mr. POINDEXTER. He did not do so until they had policemen in the neighborhood.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But in the countries where they were always carrying pistols and each man was taking care of his own right, as happened in the country where the Senator lived in his early days and as happened soon after the war in the country where I lived, there were not any policemen except the policemen of one's self on the one side or no policemen at all, or where there were policemen nobody paid any attention to them and did not obey their orders. Finally men said to themselves, "This thing has to stop"; as was said by the Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] in connection with some election. The Senator understands that situation as well as I do.

When the time came and men asked who was going to disarm, I repeat, was it the coward who said "I" first? Never! It was the bravest man in the community who said it first. The coward nation is not the nation that disarms with the hope that the common sense and common conscience of the world may follow its example. It is the brave nation, it is the leading nation whose people are at the forefront; and no other sort of nation is capable of that degree of courage and that degree of altruism and that degree of idealism, which is a very much cursed word here lately since you Republicans won the election upon the idea that an ideal must be a crime. That is about the size of it—that idealism is a crime, which is tomfoolery, nonsense; that you can govern the world by materialism when you can not.

The world is governed by its imagination, by its sentiment, by its theories, by its ideals, by its aspirations, by the memory of its traditions. Never was the world governed for 100 years at a time by materialism, and never will it be as long as there is a God in heaven—and perhaps a devil in hell, though I do not know.

Suppose you go on the idea that each nation has to keep itself prepared to whip everything it comes in touch with. If you are going to do that, then why did our boys die in France and in Flanders? I read lately a pronunciamiento from an ambassador to the effect that they died for American interests. So far as any mere American interest is concerned we could have stayed over here away from France and Flanders forever and have been infinitely better off to-day. No boy that laid his life upon the aitar of his country or proposed to lay it there for one moment thought that he was fighting for nothing higher or nothing better than that. Everybody understood that he was making war in order to stop war, to the utmost extent that human nature can stop it, of course.

If you make your naval arguments that you want each naval country to have the biggest navy, where are you? Great Britain says, "I have the lead and I am going to keep it." The United States says, "I have the money and I propose to take the lead." Japan says, "I am helpless unless I keep up to the best of my poor little financial ability, so I will go to the extent of bankrupting my people, if necessary, in order to have some sort of an equality on the high seas."

When you come to consider the interests of the people back of it all, not the Government, not the military, not the idea of predominance, but the idea of self-defense, what do you find? You find that it is neither necessary for Great Britain to have a bigger fleet than we have nor necessary for us to have a bigger fleet than she has nor necessary for Japan to have a bigger fleet than either one of us or for either of us to have a bigger fleet than she, All that is necessary is for the three nations to agree, if we can, that we will conserve the peace of the world. That could have been done by our entering into the League of Nations, which you have refused to enter into, of course, so that much that might have been accomplished is not now accomplishable—immediately, at any rate.

But what of the people behind all these Governments in this old, old game? I can not go out on the public square unless I am better armed than B. B says, "I can not go unless I am better armed than A and C." C says, "I can not go unless I am better armed than A and B." Where are we going to end? What is the interest of the people behind it all who pay the taxes and furnish the body for the holocaust of war? Where is it going to end? Two million American boys in France and as many million more over here getting ready to go hoped that it would end in a new era and a new consensus of agreement among the civilized nations of the world at the end of the last war; and now instead of it so ending Great Britain is, as the Senator said, building super Hoods, whatever they are; I do not know. Japan is spending one-third of her revenue to increase her navy, if I take the Senator's word for it, and I do because I suppose it to be true. We are spending God knows how much of ours for the same purpose. What for? For civilization? What for? To make democracy safe? What for? To give the common people of the world happiness and safety and protection? We are starting over the same old fool game again-domination on the seas to be followed up on the land.

I was one of the men who stood for the war here against the insults and the injuries of Germany to such an extent that I had a perfect heartfelt contempt for the men who differed in opinion with me; but I say now that if that is all we fought the war for, I wish to God I had never taken that position. If we fought the war merely to keep up this endless rivalry of so-called hypocritical defense, that merely means an endless rivalry of armament for offense, then the war was fought for nothing. We might have had peace of some sort under the agency and domination of Prussia. That would be better than this sort of thing if it is going on for another hundred years, Where is the end to it?

I said I had no confidence in the amendment of the Senator from Ohio and its efficacy. I have not, except that it would show the world what the state of feeling is in the United States Congress, and that is all. It could not give the President any power that he has not already. Without either of them he can do everything contemplated by either the Borah resolution or the other that he could do with them, except that he could not suspend appropriations, and that is all, and in that far the point of order is good because it is a change of existing law, but otherwise it amounts to nothing except it is psychological. It says to the world that we, the legislative representatives of 105,000,000 people of the strongest and richest country in the world, say to them, "We are not cowards enough to be afraid to set the example of disarmament. You are making out of our position excuses for further armament. We deprive you of the excuse."

The Senator said we could enter into negotiations upon a stronger footing after we had acted than we could if we keep our poker hand concealed or in our hand. I say, yes. We could enter into negotiations with Great Britain and Japan and the balance of the world on a much better footing if we could go there and say we have proven the sincerity of our intent by our example.

Mr. President, I have not such a contempt for the American people as to imagine they are afraid of either Great Britain or Japan. One of them might, in a sudden ouslaught, whip us for six weeks or maybe six months, but, as a great American now dead once said, the foreigner never lived who will in a foreign uniform water his horse in the Mississippi River. Everybody with a particle of sense knows that. It is reduced to this: Do you want peace or do you want endless expenditures for war in peace times, to be followed, as certainly as the dawn follows the night, by actual and real war, with still further increased scientific instrumentalities for destruction? Which do you want?

If you want the first, how are you going to get it? By waiting until somebody weaker than you are sets the example of making himself helpless in your presence or by yourself, being stronger than he is, setting the example?

I do not see, Mr. President, anything in the conduct of Great Britain or even of Japan—although the rulers of Japan have very much less wisdom than have the rulers of Great Britainto indicate that either one of them has or will have any inten-tion of attack upon the American people. If Japan should have it, by the unwisdom of her rulers, she would be bankrupt within six weeks after she started it. Everybody knows that; I think the men of Japan who have any sense know it. And if there is a thing which the British statesman has nursed to his heart for 50 years as nearly as the Czars of Russia have nursed the idea of the possession of Constantinople, it is that, above all things in the world, the British Empire, controlled by their branch of the English-speaking race, must never have another serious quarrel with the United States of America, representing the transatlantic branch of the same race. We have had statesman after statesman who twisted the British 'ion's tail to the extent that they would hardly have twisted the Mexican jaguar's tail, and have gotten off with it, simply because the statesmen of Great Britain have laid down as a fundamental principle that there must not be a war between the two great branches of the English-speaking race.

It is not only the principle of the aristocracy of Great Britain and the ruling element, but it has gone down amongst the people everywhere. They have not even remonstrated at the State Department when we have passed resolutions indorsing rebels against the British Empire, giving them the honor of various cities, welcoming them with great plaudits, and assisting them in raising immense amounts of money to enable them to buy bombs to blow up customhouses and to destroy the lives of British subjects. Why? Because they realize that above all things for the good of the world and of humanity was the necessity of no breach between the two great branches of the English-speaking race, one in Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, and Great Britain, the other here. They are not going to do it. I do not believe that there is a man in this body who would be so false to every idea of intellectual integrity as to rise in my presence now and say that he thought there was anything short of an attack of ours upon the British flag or upon a British force that would lead Great Britain to war with the United States. I know that no man who knows world politics would say so.

My second objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] and that offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pomerene] is that they merely take in two other nations. If we are going to have a conference upon the subject of disarmament, it ought to include Italy, France, and the balance of the maritime nations as well; it ought not to be confined to three.

Mr. President, I sometimes think the Senate may get tired of me, as I am sometimes tempted to get tired of myself when I constantly talk about the peace of the world. It has become fashionable to designate a man who loves the peace of the world as a "pacifist." It is a new word and is supposed to carry with it great contempt. I think I have proven that I am not a pacifist in the sense of being a peace-at-any-price man; I was never that individually or nationally; but I do think I do not waste my time, for ultimate good, at any rate, when I raise my voice upon every opportunity to raise it against the idiotic, insane, senseless, suicidal mania of rivalry upon the hypocritical pretense of self-defense. Germany armed to the teeth in selfdefense against an encircling movement; France armed to the teeth in self-defense against Germany; Russia armed to the teeth in self-defense against Germany; poor little Belgium armed what it thought was to its teeth, at any rate, in selfdefense against anybody who came.

The only part of the world that did not support great immense conscript armies was the two branches of the English-speaking race. They said, "For generations our fathers have taken their chances when war came, and we will take ours.' They took them, and they won the war; one by sea power and the other by throwing in their last weight upon the balance on land. If the war has proven anything, it has proven that the two great English-speaking races, who are not armed to the teeth, are the most powerful influence on this earth in war. Why? Because by not robbing their people generation after generation to keep armed they left them wealth enough to be able to fight when war came.

Sometimes, I say, I feel sort of ashamed to talk about it, but when I remember that back of government, back of armaments, back of army officers, back of naval officers, back of munition manufacturers, and back of all the incidental business interested in the success of munition manufacturers and war procedure are the great American people-preachers, teachers, and farmers, carpenters, blacksmiths, and shoemakers, and the hands in the factories, for whom the very highest good on earth, the very highest good outside of heaven itself, is peace. I do not believe there is any risk or sacrifice for peace throughout the world that any brave people can not afford to take, and I figure that it is only a coward nation that will not take it. Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to be inserted immediately after section 17.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I understand a point of order was raised against the amendment offered by me. Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understood that matter to have been disposed of.

Mr. POMERENE. I understood that the Chair had ruled upon the point of order, but I asked the privilege of submitting a few observations, which the Chair kindly accorded to me. Do I understand that the Chair's ruling is the same as heretofore?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair ruled that the amendment offered was general legislation and was out of order under Rule XVI.

Mr. POMERENE. And the Chair still adheres to that ruling?

The VICE PRESIDE T. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. Then, if I may be permitted to pursue this matter a little further, while I thought that the amendment was not subject to that objection, I realized that the question probably would be raised, and on May 17 I presented a notice to suspend the rule. I ask for a vote upon that notice.

Mr. HARRISON. Before that is done, may I propound a parliamentary inquiry?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. The Chair has ruled that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is subject to the point of order. I thought the amendment had been offered as a proviso to the so-called Borah amendment, but I see from a reading that it was not, but that it was merely an amendment to be added following the Borah amendment. If the amendment in the form of a proviso to the Borah amendment should be offered when we get into the Senate, would it then be subject to the point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Why not?

Mr. HARRISON. If the Chair is asking me the question, if it is offered as an amendment to the Borah amendment, even though the Borah amendment was subject to a point of order in the first instance, which was not made. I do not think that the point of order ought to be sustained if the amendment should be offered when the bill gets into the Senate. I do not think that the rule should be applied even as in the Committee of the Whole. Of course, if it is a separate and distinct amendment offered to the bill, it would be subject to a point of order.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I should like to make a suggestion to the Chair. Chair asked why not. I am sure the Chair would not hold, if an amendment was offered that was not in order, but by unanimous consent was made in order by a point of order not being made against it, that it would not then be in order for the Senate to perfect that amendment by any proper germane amendment that related to it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to suggest to the Chair, if I may, that a parliamentar inquiry is supposed to relate to some matter that is before the Senate; but to insist that the Chair shall state now how he would rule under a supposititious state of facts in the future, for a different proceeding in another place, can not properly be considered a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Connecticut realizes that the motion to suspend the rule that is now proposed by Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. If, on the other hand, the Chair should hold that the amendment would not be subject to the point of order when the bill gets into the Senate, it would require only a majority vote.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that.

Mr. HARRISON. That is why I am propounding the parliamentary inquiry at this time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not object to the Senator's attempt, out of ample precaution, to extract all the advance in-formation he can obtain from the Chair. I was simply suggesting to the Chair that he was not obliged to be corkscrewed in that premature manner unless he desired to have the cork taken out.

Mr. HARRISON. I am sure the Chair understands the situation very well.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I suggest the absence of a quorum, The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I now move, under Rule XL, to suspend paragraph 3 of Rule XVI, in order to present the amendment which was just before the Senate, notice of this motion to suspend the rule having been given by me on May 17, page 1513 of the Congressional Record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On this question the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, before this vote is taken I desire to say that I am very much in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio. I do not believe, however, that it is going to accomplish any good, because those who must administer it should be whole-heartedly in favor of it. We have seen, since the beginning of this discussion touching disarmament and the consideration of the naval bill, quite a change effected by a great many of the Members of the Senate, as well as other persons in high places.

In this connection I desire to read from the official journal of the administration an editorial that appeared in the Washington Post of this morning that expresses the views of one who is very close to those who now direct the affairs of the Government. It is touching the very question that is now under consideration; and in this connection I desire to congratulate the distinguished senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] upon wielding his great influence upon the other side of the aisle and effecting the enormous change that has come about touching his amendment. When it was first presented, if I am correctly informed, every member of the Naval Affairs Committee belonging to the majority party voted against incorporating his amendment in this bill. It received the support of those members of the committee representing the minority party. I understand, if the newspaper reports are correct, that the distinguished acting chairman of the committee, the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter] and his lieutenant, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], went to see the President and talked with him touching this matter, and the President's influence was so great that they came back to this body and carried the information to the Members on the other side of the aisle that the President would not stand for the Borah amendment, and consequently the impression prevailed in this body for some time that the Borah amendment was dead; that they did not want to incorporate in this bill the plans for disarmament. So I read from this very splendid paper. Most of you Senators have read this editorial. I know that it was very edifying to the distinguished leader of the majority, and a very correct portrayal, perhaps, of the true situation now.

It is headed:

The disarmament amendment to the naval appropriation bill adopted by the Senate reads thus:

"That the President is authorized and requested to invite the Governments of Great Britain and Japan to send representatives to a conference which shall be charged with the duty of promptly entering into an understanding or agreement by which the naval expenditures and building programs of each of said Governments, to wit, the United States, Great Britain, and Japan, shall be substantially reduced annually during the next five years to such an extent and upon such terms as may be agreed upon, which understanding or agreement is to be reported to the respective Governments for approval."

Article 11, section 2, of the Constitution, outlining the powers and duties of the President of the United States, says:

"He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, providing two-thirds of the Senators present concur," etc.

It is obvious, therefore, that the Senate proposes to authorize the President to enter into an agreement with Great Britain and Japan, something which the Constitution specifically gives him sole authority to do, and by adding a "request" to the grant of "authority" the Senate seeks to convey a veiled instruction to proceed with the business at once. It might be added that not only does the "authority" granted relate to the exclusive prerogative of the Executive, but the "request" is for an act which the President has already stated he intends to perform.

The Senate, to be more consistent in its inconsistency, should have intruded further upon the President's functions. It ought to have specifically "authorized" him to name new ambassadors to Great Britain—

You would perform a pretty good function if you would do

You would perform a pretty good function if you would do and Japan and to fill the vacancy upon the United States Supreme Court caused by the death of Chief Justice White. True, the Constitution gives to him alone the power to do these things, but why should the Senate hesitate to instruct him in his duties.

This is one of the most conspicuous examples of supererogation of which the Senate has ever been guilty, and whether or not it remains in the bill as finally enacted, it will stand as an amusing instance of legislative surplusage, if nothing more. Thus it is quite natural that those unfamiliar with legislative tactics may be puzzled that opposition to this superfluous dictum should have collapsed and that the disarmament clique in the Senate should have been permitted to work its will.

The naval appropriation bill, in which it is proposed to insert this amendment, provides the funds for the Navy Department during the fiscal year which begins July 1, a little more than a month hence. Not only is it necessary that these funds be available on that date, but it is also highly desirable that the department shall know some time in advance what the appropriations for various purposes are to be, in order that plans may be made accordingly.

The insertion of the amendment "authorizing and requesting" the President to negotiate a treaty for reduction of armaments was not favored by the Executive.

Here is the mouthpiece of the administration, the official organ of the powers that be, saying to you Senators that the insertion of the amendment authorizing and requesting the President to negotiate a treaty for a reduction of armaments was not favored by the Executive.

He preferred to be left free-

I am glad that the distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] sees fit to hurrah on that, because the President told the distinguished Senator from Maine and his friend, the acting chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, when they visited the President, that he was against the proposition. I am wondering if the Senator from Maine will deny that proposition. I take it that this official organ is only carrying out the views of the President, that he was against it; but all of a sudden a change is effected, the vote is taken, and 74 Senators vote for the proposition—a change on the proposition all around on the part of every member of the majority.

This editorial continues:

He preferred to be left free to exercise his own judgment as to the time and manner of procedure, instead of having the subject become a matter of politics in Congress. But the determination of the disarmament faction in the Senate to put it through threatened to result in a fillbuster against the bill, which might easily have postponed action beyond the beginning of the new fiscal year, and thus seriously interfere with the efficiency of the Navy Department. To avoid a prolonged contest endangering the public interest, the opposition to the amendment vielded.

I imagine that not much good will come from it, because those who speak for the administration have discerned already that the resolution merely says that-

The "authorization" and "request" are not in any way binding upon the President, and he is left free to use his own judgment as to when and how to act. They are absurdities and do not even represent the wishes of the Senate. They serve no purpose except to cater to the pacifist element which is bombarding Congress with ill-considered resolutions.

So we can imagine, if this article is correct, that the President, while he is authorized and requested, will ignore the authority and spurn the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. The year and nays

So the Senate rejected Mr. Pomerene's motion to suspend the rule.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted after section 17, which is the amendment generally known as the Borah amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Assistant Secretary. Add, after section 17, the following:

The President is further requested to express to the council of the League of Nations the earnest desire of the Government of the United States to cooperate with the commission by the said council appointed charged with the formulation of plans looking to a general reduction of armament for submission to the several Governments for their consideration and action; and that he be, and he hereby is, further requested promptly to designate, with due authority, representatives to sit with such commission in a consultative capacity pursuant to the invitation heretofore extended by the said council to the Government of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the Borah amendment contemplates the assembling of a conference of the three leading maritime powers of the earth. This contemplates the continuance of the work of a conference already assembled for the purpose of preparing plans for general disarmament throughout the world of the land as well as naval forces maintained for international war.

I desire to express the very great gratification I feel at the adoption of the amendment tendered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah]. I do not take the same view as that expressed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison]. I feel very confident that it must be that the President of the United States has changed his mind about this matter since he expressed himself upon the subject some time ago, as reported in the public press when the Committee on Naval Affairs, by a party vote, rejected the amendment which was unanimously adopted the other day. I have no doubt that the President will faithfully carry out the will of the Senate of the United States as thus so definitely expressed.

But I want to call the attention of the Senate to just exactly what it is contemplated shall be accomplished by the so-called Borah amendment, for the purpose of showing how little progress we do make if we go only so far as that amendment carries us. This is the way it reads:

That the President is authorized and requested to invite the Governments of Great Britain and Japan to send representatives to a conference, which shall be charged with the duty of promptly entering into an understanding or agreement by which the naval expenditures and building programs of each of said Governments, to wit, the United States, Great Britain, and Japan, shall be substantially reduced annually during the next five years to such an extent and upon such terms as may be agreed upon, which understanding or agreement is to be reported to the respective Governments for approval.

Mr. President, if the entire building program were thus discarded, and we should save everything that the building program contemplates, the amount, considered with the total that we expend for war purposes, would be practically inconsequential.

The pending appropriation bill as it came to us carried about $400,000,000. With the Army appropriation bill we are asked to expend during the ensuing year something like $900,000,000. The building program as appropriated for in the pending bill extends only to the amount of $105,000,000; that is to say, about 11 or 12 per cent of the total amount we are asked to appropriate for military purposes.

Referring to the very impressive diagram upon the wall, it is easily open to computation that if that reduction were accomplished the best that is hoped for under the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho, after the lapse of five years, is that it would reduce the total by just 2 per cent, and our total expenditures for war purposes to meet the obligations and debts of past wars and to meet the requirements of future wars would be 90.83 per cent, instead of 92.83 per cent. So much we can hope to accomplish if the plan is carried out successfully.

Now, I hope and I entertain no doubt that if a conference is arranged for and the agreement such as is contemplated is carried out, it will make less likely a war between ourselves and either of the two rivals that we have in naval power. That is an end which ought to be sought after by every Member of the Senate. But I call attention to the fact that so far as relieving our country or relieving the world from the burden of disarmament, it is not a drop in the bucket.

I do not think that the present session of Congress ought to end without a declaration of some kind in favor of a general reduction of armament, such as would effectively relieve the world from its awful burden. These burdens arise rather from the expense of maintaining land forces than from maintaining naval forces. It is true that those nations which are least able to bear the burden of sustaining great armies are endeavoring to maintain huge, if not disproportionate, armies. France, for instance, with a population of 40,000,000 people and a national debt of $40,000,000,000, is endeavoring to support an army of 800,000 men, and only a day or two ago it was reported that it would be necessary for that Republic to borrow $6,400,000,000 in order to meet the expenses for the current year. Italy, whose national debt is almost is not quite equal to its national wealth, is endeavoring to support an army of 350,000 men.

Mr. President, the people of this country are coming to realize that the paralysis of industry in this country is a result almost directly of the collapse of the purchasing power of Europe, due to war and the conditions that have followed the war, and that we can not hope for a general restoration of prosperity in this country and a rehabilitation of industry here until conditions in Europe are stabilized, until the great amount they are expending in an endeavor to support great armies is turned into industrial avenues and they rehabilitate themselves and restore the purchasing power to Europe so that the people of Europe can absorb our products.

Every mine near the city of Butte is shut down, and why? Sixty per cent of our product goes abroad, but they now take nothing over there from us. Recent reports declare that our foreign commerce is falling off to the extent of $100,000,000 a month. Can we do nothing to persuade these nations thus war mad to come together and endeavor to reduce their armament so that some of this enormous sum may go to the restoration of normal conditions in the world? We are told, and I am sure with substantial accuracy, that the people of the nations are spending $8,000,000,000 a year in order to sustain their military establishments.

Mr. President, the machinery is already in operation. A

Mr. President, the machinery is already in operation. A commission has already been created and is prepared to function in an effort to cause a plan to be submitted to the several Governments of the world for a reduction of military armament. It is ready to go on if this Nation of ours only will join with the other nations of the world in an effort thus to bring it about. An invitation has been extended to us to join in that commission.

I discussed this matter at some length at the last session of Congress, and I am not going to tire the Senate with a repetition of the arguments and the facts which to my mind impel us with every force to the adoption of this course; but I remind you that in the month of May a year ago the council of the League of Nations empowered its permanent advisory committee upon military, naval, and aerial questions to frame a plan for general disarmament to be submitted to the various nations in accordance with the provisions of article 8 of the League of Nations.

That commission consists of three representatives from each of the eight States represented upon the council—Great Britain, France, Japan, Italy, Greece, Spain, Belgium, and Brazil—except that in the case of Brazil there is one representative who speaks for all three branches of the service. That commission in going to work was, of course, embarrassed at the outset by reason of the fact that the United States was not represented. Obviously no plan could possibly succeed that did not include the United States. It reported its difficulties to the council, which thereupon directed its president to extend an invitation to the Government of the United States to send representatives to sit in a consultative capacity with the representatives who were thus appointed to undertake this great work. Four days after its receipt that invitation was declined by 'resident Wilson, a very grave mistake, in my judgment, a very grave mistake, fraught, I think, with very disastrous consequences to this country when e speak of the estimation in which it is held before the world.

From 1899, the date of the first Hague conference, we all believed that Germany stood in the way of an international agreement for disarmament or reduction of armament, and now we occupy exactly the same situation by declining to accept an invitation to join with the other nations. That invitation is still there; it is still open to acceptance. The commission is ready to go on. I wish you to bear in mind that those representatives, although nominally selected by the council of the League of Nations, are really the representatives of the countries from which they come, just exactly as though Great Britain had appointed three members, France had appointed three members, Japan had appointed three members, and so on down the list.

Since this matter had the consideration of the Senate before a very important change has taken place. Since that time the United States Government has appointed a representative to sit with the commission on reparations appointed by the Versailles treaty, and we are actually now participating in exactly the same way upon that commission. Why should we not in the same manner appoint representatives to sit upon the commission on disarmament, unless, indeed, we are interested in reparations and we are not interested in disarmament?

The question is before us. It is said that this is not an oppor tune time to take up this matter because France has signified that she will not reduce her army; but I remind you that France, represented as she is on the council of the League of Nations, participated in the creation of the commission and participated in extending the invitation to us. She invited us to join with her in this great work, just the same as has every other great nation represented upon the council of the league.

We do not thereby become parties to the league. We do not become obligated by any of the covenants of the league by sitting on this commission any more than we do by sitting on the Reparations Commission. We occupy exactly the same relation to the one that we do to the other. If there is any real purpose, if there is any real desire, upon the part of the Senate of the United States to respond to the sentiment of the country, that is overwhelmingly, in my judgment, in favor of the assemblage of a conference for the purpose of preparing a plan for general disarmament, here is the opportunity.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the amendment proposed reads as follows:

The President is hereby requested to express to the council of the League of Nations the earnest desire of the Government of the United States to cooperate with the commission by the said council appointed, charged with the formulation of plans looking to a general reduction of armament for submission to the several Governments for their consideration and action; and that he be, and he hereby is, further requested premptly to designate with due authority representatives to slt with such commission in a consultative capacity, pursuant to the invitation heretofore extended by the said council to the Government of the United States.

At this late hour I have no intention of discussing the whole question or pointing out again the worthlessness of the provision about disarmament in the covenant of the League of Nations. The people of the United States have decided against that League of Nations. The President of the United States in his message has declared that he would not enter it, and I for one, eager as I am to have an international agreement for disarmament, glad as I should be to see a conference such as is proposed in the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borahl, which I hope will soon be called—despite that, I do not propose, for one, to join in any way the League of Nations discarded by the American people. I certainly am not going to enter it in any side way or through any back door.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate at this late hour, but if there is one great question that confronts the world to-day and which the world must decide affirmatively in order to save itself, it is the question of abandoning the great armies and navies of the past and agreeing on a policy of disarmament that will settle national difficulties and dangers by the rule of reason and not by the rule of the sword. I do not think that we can face this question at any time and not press the issue to the front.

I realize the position of the majority party. They determined on the policy that this country should not join the League of Nations. They claim that that determination was ratified at I do not say that it was not one of the great questions involved in the last campaign, but as to how far it went in the determination of the last election no man at this time can say. In my judgment the reaction against war conditions that took place in every nation of the world had more to do with the enormous majority given to President Harding than any other question.

But I recognize that it would be idle to propose that the majority party should reverse its position and affirmatively become a member of the League of Nations. I would not waste the time of the Senate in contending for such a proposition notwithstanding the fact that I believe the great mistake of this generation was in the fact that the Senate of the United States did not promptly ratify the treaty of Versailles. However, it would be idle to contend for such a proposition. But that is not the question before the Senate. It is a condition that confronts us and not a theory. No man can deny that the nations of Europe and the world, except ourselves and one or two other countries, are in a league of nations. How far it may be effective is not the question. They have such an organization. That organization has proclaimed to the world that it is prepared to stand for disarmament throughout the world. As it represents all the powers of the world except fallen Germany, soviet Russia, dismantled Mexico, and the United States, it seems to me that when it declares in favor of disarmament it is an effective declaration. I do not see that the majority party crosses its own record when, on the invitation of the League of Nations not to join the league but to consult with its members about disarmament, we send representatives to meet that organized body of the nations of the world looking to the consummation of this great ideal. If we believe in the disarmament of the world, I consider it our duty now to accept every offer that may bring about the consummation of that ideal.

Therefore, I believe, with that invitation staring us in the face, this Nation should accept it, not as members of the league but as an independent nation, and officially inform those who belong to the organization seeking disarmament that they will have our hearty concurrence and approval in any efforts that may be made looking to lifting the burdens of war from the backs of the people of the world.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I can not let the Senate vote upon the cruel and inconsiderate proposal of the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] without a word of protest. It is cruel and inconsiderate to invite the moribund league which. languishing in Geneva, would die if put to the test of such real effort as that proposed by the Senator from Montana. It is not many days since the Polish foreign minister addressed the responsible executive of the league in Geneva an urgent invitation that the league settle the Silesian question. He was answered that if the league would undertake the settlement of the Silesian question that would settle the end of the league.

The proposal of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] contemplates a conference of the naval powers, two of which are in no wise directly threatened by continental armaments in Europe and which in no way threaten the continental powers of Europe. The United States has determined upon a military force far smaller than that thought necessary by the principal supporter of the league in this country. It is no army of ours, no army of Japan's, which threatens the continental nations of They are all members of the league, and yet they maintain to-day 3,000,000 armed men against one another, against their fellows within the league. France has 800,000 men, African and European, under arms; Poland has 600,000 men under arms; France and her allies have 2,000,000 under arms. Is it necessary for us to sit in the council of the continental powers of Europe in order that they may reduce their land armaments? If membership in the council of the league could bring about disarmament, disarmament there would be.

The truth is that the great powers of Europe are not ready to disarm. You may read in the columns of one of the two principal newspapers supporting the league that there is now in Europe a fight to control its destinies—a struggle between the victors for the hegemony of Europe. If the proposal of the Senator from Idaho brings disarmament, it will be because it is limited to the naval powers-because it does not include continental European powers.

If the proposal of the Senator from Idaho bears fruit, Mr. President, it will be because at this juncture in international affairs the British people and the people of the British dominions must determine upon the renewal or the abandonment of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. We shall know before long whether the British dominions and the British people seek agreement with the people of the United States rather than alliance with the Japanese, and, seeking agreement with us, are ready in good faith to limit naval armament.

The situation on the Continent of Europe is quite different. There are as many men under arms there to-day as there were a year ago; there are as many men under arms in central Europe as there were in Austria-Hungary at the end of the first year of the Great War. What an impossible adventure to which to invite the United States-to join the council of the League of Nations in considering disarmament at the moment when its members in continental Europe have 3,000,000 men under arms and have evinced their determination not to disarm!

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, as I have listened to this debate from day to day I have never felt a deeper sense of depression and discouragement in my life in connection with the deliberations of a representative body. There has not been made here in this Chamber a single argument in favor of the enormous increase in the naval bill, as passed by the House, that was not enough to make an angel weep; and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who the other day made a strong speech in favor of disarmament and then voted to increase our naval armament by the expenditure of forty million and odd dollars, now tells us that the great question that the people decided last November was disarmament and that we must obey their will.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken, I did not say it was disarmament; I said that I doubted whether the question of the League of Nations was the determining cause of the election; that I thought the question of a reaction against war conditions affected the vote more than anything

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I am sure the Senator is mistaken. So far as our section of the country is concerned, the main controlling motive of the voters of his State and of mine and of the States surrounding was to maintain the independence which our forefathers fought for, and not to surrender back to Great Britain or to any other foreign nation any part of that independence which we inherited from our forefathers. It was the desire to keep out of the League of Nations that caused the stampede toward Harding and Coolidge; it was to keep ourselves absolutely independent that our people gave to those two candidates the immense majority which they received; and now, by step after step, insidiously, calculatingly, we are cynically disregarding the verdict of the people as rendered last November in proposing to go into the league which our people told us to avoid.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] maintains that we can have this relation and other relations with the sitting League of Nations and yet not commit ourselves. Put your hand into a saw gin and see what will happen to you. Let one of those saws catch your hand and then stop the gin if you can. Who will throw off the belt and stop the gin? Who will keep the saws from going further and further until the vital spot is struck? We are going further and further into the League of Nations.

Senators, you can not adopt this amendment without danger of setting aside the verdict of the people as rendered last November. I am sure the Senators upon consideration will realize the danger, the insidious danger, of the amendment of the Senator from Montana, and I hope both sides will unite in voting it down.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I dare say that among the many eloquent, powerful, and persuasive speeches addressed by the Senator from Georgia during the last campaign against the League of Nations, he never once argued that it would be an unfortunate thing for us to join with the commission appointed by the council of the League of Nations to draft a plan for general disarmament. His argument was addressed to very different features of the League of Nations.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—
Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. WATSON of Georgia. In answer to that, I will say that during the campaign which I waged every address I made was against the league without any reservations, without any conditions, without any strings—against the league, square out and I, of course, subordinated any such questions as that which the Senator from Montana now presents.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; I have no doubt the Senator declaimed against the league, but he was exceedingly silent. I dare say, upon those provisions of the covenant which looked to a general disarmament of the nations involved.

But, Mr. President, I think the argument that we are getting into the league is very, very far-fetched. The invitation came to the United States as to a Nation that was outside of the league. It was addressed as to a Nation outside of the league. It was perfectly understood that we were outside of the league and would not be likely to come into the league under any circumstances or conditions. If we were a member of the league, no invitation ever would have been sent to us to join in the effort to frame a plan. None would have been necessary. would have been a part of the machinery ourselves. It came to us as a Nation outside of the league to come and sit with the members appointed by the nations represented upon the council for the purpose of seeing if we could agree upon a plan.

But, Mr. President, after this administration has committed itself to sitting in the same capacity upon the commission on reparations, how can it consistently decline to sit upon the commission on disarmament? If the one is going to bring us into the league the other is. The Senator from Georgia is perfectly correct; if this in any manner introduces us into the league, by the back door or by the front door, we have already been introduced into it by the action already taken in directing our representative to sit with the commission on reparations and with the supreme council in considering the questions arising in Silesia.

Moreover, Mr. President, if it be true, as represented by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick], that these nations of Europe, when the efforts of the commission were rendered abortive by the declination of the United States to participate, have gone on arming themselves until they have accumulated armies of 3,000,000 men against each other, I think that furnishes an added reason why the United States now should go in with these people and get them into a conference and sit down calmly over the table and consider whether it would not be wise to reduce these huge and excessive armies. Moreover, Mr. President, each one of them is increasing its army in order to meet increases that are made by its supposed enemies; but if we get them all at the table they might easily agree to reduce proportionately, each of them insisting that he is obliged to increase his army because his enemy is doing just exactly the same thing.

It occurs to me that the argument addressed to this body by the Senator from Illinois is an added reason why we should adopt this amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I differ entirely with the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] that sending an observer to sit upon the supreme council has anything whatever to do with joining the League of Nations or recognizing it in any manner whatever. The supreme council is a body perfectly unknown to the League of Nations, entirely without it. It simply consists of the prime ministers of the principal powers who were opposed to the Central Powers during the war. Reparations Commission has nothing whatever to do with the League of Nations. It is an organization provided by the treaty of Versailles, while the Senator's amendment is a direct acceptance of the invitation from the League of Nations, heretofore extended, for us to participate in one of their commissions. It is an entirely different proposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Hitchcock] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean], who is absent. I am unable to obtain a transfer, and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SHIELDS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. New]. I am informed, however, if he were present that he would vote as I had intended to vote, and I therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STANLEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with my colleague, the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Ernst]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Pittman] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before with reference to my pair, I vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. Heflin] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Freling-HUYSEN], which I transfer to the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose].

who, I believe, has not voted. In his absence I am not at liberty to vote. If I were, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. I am enabled to transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean] to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]. I do so and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs;

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 27, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, offered the following prayer:

Our blessed heavenly Father, on the breath of our prayer we do not whisper an impossible hope. We never seek Thee in vain, for He keepeth us who never slumbers nor sleeps. With folded hands we tarry in Thy holy presence. Persuade us more and more that there is no harvest so fair as the goodly products of a useful and a noble life. Help us to labor in this consciousness, and when the lamp of life is burning low and the evening shades are falling, and it is growing dark, may we behold the light of Thy countenance and see the stretch of Thy holy hand. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WITHDRAWAL OF A BILL.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bill (H. R. 5662) for the relief of Sargent Prentiss Knut, administrator of the estate of Haller Nutt, deceased, which I introduced early in the month. There is an error in the bill and I want to substitute another bill for it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to withdraw the bill H. R. 5662. Is there objection?

Williams Wolcott

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1084) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes.

THE BUDGET-CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 15).

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (S. 1084) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purpose

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-five Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the statement go into detail and explain that portion of the bill which has to do with the fixing of the tenure of the comptroller's office?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; it states the facts. Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1084) to provide a national budget system and an independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by the amendment of the House insert the following:

"TITLE H .- THE BUDGET.

"SEC. 201. The President shall transmit to Congress on the first day of each regular session the budget, which shall set forth in summary and in detail:

"(a) Estimates of the expenditures and appropriations necessary in his judgment for the support of the Government for the ensuing fiscal year; except that the estimates for such year for the legislative branch of the Government and the Supreme Court of the United States shall be transmitted to the President on or before October 15 of each year, and shall be included by him in the budget without revision;

'(b) His estimates of the receipts of the Government during the ensuing fiscal year, under (1) laws existing at the time the budget is transmitted and also (2) under the revenue proposals,

if any, contained in the budget;

The expenditures and receipts of the Government during the last completed fiscal year;

"(d) Estimates of the expenditures and receipts of the Government during the fiscal year in progress;

(e) The amount of annual, permanent, or other appropriations, including balances of appropriations for prior fiscal years, available for expenditure during the fiscal year in progress, as of November 1 of such year;

"(f) Balanced statements of (1) the condition of the Treasury at the end of the last completed fiscal year, (2) the estimated condition of the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year in progress, and (3) the estimated condition of the Treasury at the end of the ensuing fiscal year if the financial proposals contained in the budget are adopted;

"(g) All essential facts regarding the bonded and other indebtedness of the Government; and

"(h) Such other financial statements and data as in his opinion are necessary or desirable in order to make known in all practicable detail the financial condition of the Government.

SEC. 202. (a) If the estimated receipts for the ensuing fiscal year contained in the budget, on the basis of laws existing at the time the budget is transmitted, plus the estimated amounts in the Treasury at the close of the fiscal year in progress, available for expenditure in the ensuing fiscal year, are less than the estimated expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year contained in the budget, the President in the budget shall make recommendations to Congress for new taxes, loans, or other appropriate action to meet the estimated deficiency.

"(b) If the aggregate of such estimated receipts and such estimated amounts in the Treasury is greater than such estimated expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year, he shall make such recommendations as in his opinion the public interests require.

"SEC. 203. (a) The President from time to time may transmit to Congress supplemental or deficiency estimates for such appropriations or expenditures as in his judgment (1) necessary on account of laws enacted after the transmission of the budget, or (2) otherwise in the public interest. He shall accompany such estimates with a statement of the reasons therefor, including the reasons for their omission from the budget.

"(b) Whenever such supplemental or deficiency estimates reach an aggregate which, if they had been contained in the budget, would have required the President to make a recommendation under subdivision (a) of section 202, he shall thereupon make such recommendation.

"Sec. 204. (a) Except as otherwise provided in this act, the contents, order, and arrangement of the estimates of appropriations and the statements of expenditures and estimated expenditures contained in the budget or transmitted under section 203, and the notes and other data submitted therewith, shall conform to the requirements of existing law.

"(b) Estimates for lump-sum appropriations contained in the budget or transmitted under section 203 shall be accompanied by statements showing, in such detail and form as may be necessary to inform Congress, the manner of expenditure of such appropriations and of the corresponding appropriations for the fiscal year in progress and the last completed fiscal year. Such statements shall be in lieu of statements of like character now required by law.

"SEC. 205. The President, in addition to the budget, transmit to Congress on the first Monday in December, 1921, for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, only, an alternative budget, which shall be prepared in such form and amounts and according to such system of classification and itemization as is, in his opinion, most appropriate, with such explanatory notes and tables as may be necessary to show where the various items embraced in the budget are contained in such alternative budget.

"SEC. 206. No estimate or request for an appropriation and no request for an increase in an item of any such estimate or request, and no recommendation as to how the revenue needs of the Government should be met, shall be submitted to Congress or any committee thereof by any officer or employee of any department or establishment, unless at the request of either House of Congress

"SEC. 207. There is hereby created in the Treasury Department a bureau to be known as the bureau of the budget. There shall be in the bureau a director and an assistant director, who shall be appointed by the President and receive salaries of $10,000 and $7,500 a year, respectively. The assistant director shall perform such duties as the director may designate, and during the absence or incapacity of the director or during a vacancy in the office of director he shall act as director. The bureau, under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, shall prepare for him the budget, the alternative budget, and any supplemental or deficiency estimates, and to this end shall have authority to assemble, correlate, revise, reduce, or increase the estimates of the several departments or establish-

"Sec. 208. (a) The director, under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, shall appoint and fix the compensation of attorneys and other employees and make expenditures for rent in the District of Columbia, printing, binding, telegrams, telephone service, law books, books of reference, periodicals, stationery, furniture, office equipment, other supplies, and necessary expenses of the office, within the appropriations made therefor.

"(b) No person appointed by the director shall be paid a salary at a rate in excess of $6,000 a year, and not more than four persons so appointed shall be paid a salary at a rate in excess of $5,000 a year.

"(c) All employees in the bureau whose compensation is at a rate of $5,000 a year or less shall be appointed in accordance with the civil-service laws and regulations.

"(d) The provisions of law prohibiting the transfer of employees of executive departments and independent establishments until after service of three years shall not apply during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1921, and June 30, 1922, to the transfer of employees to the bureau.

"(e) The bureau shall not be construed to be a bureau or office created since January 1, 1916, so as to deprive employees therein of the additional compensation allowed civilian employees under the provisions of section 6 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1921, and June 30, 1922, if otherwise entitled thereto.

"SEC. 209. The bureau, when directed by the President, shall make a detailed study of the departments and establishments for the purpose of enabling the President to determine what changes (with a view of securing greater economy and efficiency in the conduct of the public service) should be made in (1) the existing organization, activities, and methods of business of such departments or establishments, (2) the appropriations therefor, (3) the assignment of particular activities to particular services, or (4) the regrouping of services. The results of such study shall be embodied in a report or reports to the President, who may transmit to Congress such report or reports, or any part thereof, with his recommendations on the matters covered thereby.

"Sec. 210. The bureau shall prepare for the President a codification of all laws or parts of laws relating to the preparation and transmission to Congress of statements of receipts and expenditures of the Government and of estimates of appropriations. The President shall transmit the same to Congress on or before the first Monday in December, 1921, with a recom-mendation as to the changes which, in his opinion, should be made in such laws or parts of laws.

"Sec. 211. The powers and duties relating to the compiling of estimates now conferred and imposed upon the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury are transferred to the bureau.

"Sec. 212. The bureau shall, at the request of any committee of either House of Congress having jurisdiction over revenue or appropriations, furnish the committee such aid and information as it may request.

"SEC. 213. Under such regulations as the President may prescribe. (1) every department and establishment shall furnish to the bureau such information as the bureau may from time to time require, and (2) the director and the assistant director, or any employee of the bureau when duly authorized, shall, for the purpose of securing such information, have access to, and the right to examine, any books, documents, papers, or records of any such department or establishment.

"SEC. 214. (a) The head of each department and establishment shall designate an official thereof as budget officer therefor, who, in each year under his direction and on or before a date fixed by him, shall prepare the departmental estimates

"(b) Such budget officer shall also prepare, under the direction of the head of the department or establishment, such supplemental and deficiency estimates as may be required for its

"SEC. 215. The head of each department and establishment shall revise the departmental estimates and submit them to the bureau on or before September 15 of each year. In case of his failure so to do, the President shall cause to be prepared such estimates and data as are necessary to enable him to include in the budget estimates and statements in respect to the work of such department or establishment.

"SEC. 216. The departmental estimates and any supplemental or deficiency estimates submitted to the bureau by the head of any department or establishment shall be prepared and submitted in such form, manner, and detail as the President may

"TITLE III,-GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE.

"Sec. 301. There is created an establishment of the Government to be known as the general accounting office, which shall be independent of the executive departments and under the control and direction of the comptroller general of the United States. The offices of Comptroller of the Treasury and Assistant Comptroller of the Treasury are abolished, to take effect July 1, 1921. All other officers and employees of the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury shall become officers and employees in the general accounting office at their grades and salaries on July 1, 1921, and all books, records, documents, papers, furniture, office equipment, and other property of the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury shall become the property of the general accounting office. The comptroller general is authorized to adopt a seal for the general accounting office.

SEC. 302. There shall be in the general accounting office a comptroller general of the United States and an assistant comptroller general of the United States, who shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and the absence or incapacity of the comptroller general, or during a vacancy in that office, shall act as comptroller general.

"SEC. 303. Except as hereinafter provided in this section, the comptroller general and the assistant comptroller general shall hold office for 15 years. The comptroller general shall not be eligible for reappointment. The comptroller general or the assistant comptroller general may be removed at any time by joint resolution of Congress after notice and hearing, when, in the judgment of Congress, the comptroller general or assistant comptroller general has become permanently incapacitated or has been inefficient, or guilty of neglect of duty, or of malfeasance in office, or of any felony or conduct involving moral turpitude, and for no other cause and in no other manner except by impeachment. Any comptroller general or assistant comptroller general removed in the manner herein provided shall be ineligible for reappointment to that office. When a comptroller general or assistant comptroller general attains the age of 70 years, he shall be retired from his office.

"Sec. 304. All powers and duties now conferred or imposed by law upon the Comptroller of the Treasury or the six auditors of the Treasury Department, and the duties of the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury relating to keeping the personal ledger accounts of disbursing and collecting officers, shall, so far as not inconsistent with this act, be vested in and imposed upon the general accounting office and be exercised without direction from any other officer. The balances certified by the comptroller general shall be final and conclusive upon the executive branch of the Government. The revision by the comptroller general of settlements made by the six auditors shall be discontinued, except as to settlements made before July 1, 1921.

"The administrative examination of the accounts and youchers of the Postal Service now imposed by law upon the Auditor for the Post Office Department shall be performed on and after July 1, 1921, by a bureau in the Post Office Department to be known as the bureau of accounts, which is hereby established for that purpose. The bureau of accounts shall be under the direction of a comptroller, who shall be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year. The comptroller shall perform the administrative duties now performed by the Auditor for the Post Office Department and such other duties in relation thereto as the Postmaster General may direct. The appropriation of $5,000 for the salary of the Auditor for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year 1922 is transferred and made available for the salary of the comptroller, bureau of accounts, Post Office Department. The officers and employees of the office of the Auditor for the Post Office Department engaged in the administrative examination of accounts shall become officers and employees of the bureau of accounts at their grades and salaries on July 1, 1921. The appropriations for salaries and for contingent and miscellaneous expenses and tabulating equipment for such office for the fiscal year 1922, and all books, records, documents, papers, furniture, office equipment, and other property shall be apportioned between, transferred to, and made available for the bureau of accounts and the general accounting office, respectively, on the basis of duties transferred.

"Sec. 305. Section 236 of the Revised Statutes is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 236. All claims and demands whatever by the Government of the United States or against it, and all accounts whatever in which the Government of the United States is concerned, either as debtor or creditor, shall be settled and adjusted in the general accounting office."

"Sec. 306. All laws relating generally to the administration of the departments and establishments shall, so far as applicable, govern the general accounting office. books, records, papers, or documents, and transcripts from the books and proceedings of the general accounting office, when certified by the comptroller general or the assistant comptroller general under its seal, shall be admitted as evidence with the same effect as the copies and transcripts referred to in sections 882 and 886 of the Revised Statutes.

"Sec. 307. The comptroller general may provide for the payment of accounts or claims adjusted and settled in the general accounting office, through disbursing officers of the several departments and establishments, instead of by warrant.

"Sec. 308. The duties now appertaining to the Division of Public Moneys of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, so shall receive salaries of $10,000 and $7,500 a year, respectively. The assistant comptroller general shall perform such duties as may be assigned to him by the comptroller general, and during and the certification of outstanding liabilities for payment, shall far as they relate to the covering of revenues and repayments into the Treasury, the issue of duplicate checks and warrants, be performed by the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants of the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"Sec. 309. The comptroller general shall prescribe the forms, systems, and procedure for administrative appropriation and fund accounting in the several departments and establishments, and for the administrative examination of fiscal officers' accounts and claims against the United States.

"Sec. 310. The offices of the six auditors shall be abolished, to take effect July 1, 1921. All other officers and employees of these offices except as otherwise provided herein shall become officers and employees in the general accounting office at their grades and salaries on July 1, 1921. All books, records, documents, papers, furniture, office equipment, and other property of these offices, and of the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants, so far as they relate to the work of such division transferred by section 304, shall become the property of the general accounting office. The general accounting office shall occupy temporarily the rooms now occupied by the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury and the six auditors.

"SEC. 311. (a) The comptroller general shall appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such attorneys and other employees in the general accounting office as may from time to time be provided for by law.

(b) All such appointments, except to positions carrying a salary at a rate of more than $5,000 a year, shall be made in accordance with the civil service laws and regulations.

(c) No person appointed by the comptroller general shall be paid a salary at a rate of more than $6,000 a year, and not more than four persons shall be paid a salary at a rate of more than $5,000 a year.

"(d) All officers and employees of the general accounting office, whether transferred thereto or appointed by the comptroller general, shall perform such duties as may be assigned to them by him.

"(e) All official acts performed by such officers or employees specially designated therefor by the comptroller general shall have the same force and effect as though performed by the comptroller general in person.

(f) The comptroller general shall make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for carrying on the work of the general accounting office, including rules and regulations concerning the admission of attorneys to practice before such

"Sec. 312. (a) The comptroller general shall investigate, at the seat of government or elsewhere, all matters relating to the receipt, disbursement, and application of public funds, and shall make to the President when requested by him, and to Congress at the beginning of each regular session, a report in writing of the work of the general accounting office, containing recommendations concerning the legislation he may deem necessary to facilitate the prompt and accurate rendition and settlement of accounts and concerning such other matters relating to the receipt, disbursement, and application of public funds as he may think advisable. In such regular report, or in special reports at any time when Congress is in session, he shall make recommendations looking to greater economy or efficiency in public expenditures.

(b) He shall make such investigations and reports as shall be ordered by either House of Congress or by any committee of either House having jurisdiction over revenue, appropriations, or expenditures. The comptroller general shall also, at the request of any such committee, direct assistants from his office to furnish the committee such aid and information as

"(c) The comptroller general shall specially report to Congress every expenditure or contract made by any department or establishment in any year in violation of law.

(d) He shall submit to Congress reports upon the adequacy and effectiveness of the administrative examination of accounts and claims in the respective departments and establishments and upon the adequacy and effectiveness of departmental inspection of the offices and accounts of fiscal officers.

"(e) He shall furnish such information relating to expenditures and accounting to the bureau of the budget as it may request from time to time.

Sec. 313. All departments and establishments shall furnish to the comptroller general such information regarding the powers, duties, activities, organization, financial transactions, and methods of business of their respective offices as he may from time to time require of them; and the comptroller general, or any of his assistants or employees, when duly authorized by him, shall, for the purpose of securing such information, have access to and the right to examine any books, documents, papers, or records of any such department or establishment.

The authority contained in this section shall not be applicable to expenditures made under the provisions of section 291 of the Revised Statutes.

"Sec. 314. The Civil Service Commission shall establish an eligible register for accountants for the general accounting office, and the examinations of applicants for entrance upon such register shall be based upon questions approved by the comptroller general.

SEC. 315. (a) All appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, for the offices of the Comptroller of the Treasury and the six auditors, are transferred to and made available for the general accounting office, except as otherwise provided herein.

"(b) During such fiscal year the comptroller general, within the limit of the total appropriations available for the general accounting office, may make such changes in the number and compensation of officers and employees appointed by him or transferred to the general accounting office under this act as may be necessary.

"(c) There shall also be transferred to the general accounting office such portions of the appropriations for rent and contingent and miscellaneous expenses, including allotments for printing and binding, made for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, as are equal to the amounts expended from similar appropriations during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, by the Treasury Department for the offices of the Comptroller of the Treasury and the six auditors.

"(d) During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, the appropriations and portions of appropriations referred to in this section shall be available for salaries and expenses of the general accounting office, including payment for rent in the District of Columbia, traveling expenses, the purchase and exchange of law books, books of reference, and for all necessary miscellaneous and contingent expenses.

"SEC. 316. The general accounting office and the bureau of accounts shall not be construed to be a bureau or office created since January 1, 1916, so as to deprive employees therein of the additional compensation allowed civilian employees under the provisions of section 6 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, if otherwise entitled thereto.

"Sec. 317. The provisions of law prohibiting the transfer of employees of executive departments and independent establishments until after service of three years shall not apply during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, to the transfer of employees to the general accounting office.

Sec. 318. This act shall take effect upon its approval by the President: Provided, That sections 301 to 317, inclusive, relating to the general accounting office and the bureau of accounts, shall take effect July 1, 1921."

And the House agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1084) to provide a national budget system and independent audit of Government accounts, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report:

The bill as agreed upon in conference is practically the same as the bill passed by the House and the bill as passed by the Senate, with the exception of two important features.

The Senate bill provides that the bureau of the budget shall be situated in the Treasury Department. The House agrees to this location of the bureau with the further modifications that the bureau shall prepare the budget for the President under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe and that the director of the bureau shall perform the administrative duties personal to the bureau under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe.

The Senate bill provides that the director of the budget and the assistant director of the budget shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate. the provisions of the House bill.

The Senate bill provides that the comptroller general and the assistant comptroller general shall hold office for seven years, but may be removed at any time for the causes named in the bill by joint resolution. The House bill provides that the comptroller general and the assistant comptroller general shall hold office during good behavior, but may be removed at any time by concurrent resolution of Congress for the causes named in the bill. The bill as agreed upon in conference fixes the terms of office of the comptroller general and the assistant comptroller general at 15 years, provides for their removal at any time by joint resolution of Congress for the causes named in the bill, and further provides that no comptroller general shall serve more than one term.

> JAMES W. GOOD, P. P. CAMPBELL, MARTIN B. MADDEN, JOSEPH W. BYRNS, JNO. N. GARNER, Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, since the House first took action on the national budget bill considerable changes have been made in pending legislation. All these changes have gravitated toward the original provisions of the House bill. The House originally provided that the budget should be prepared by the It assumed that the President, being the only President. official of the United States that is elected by all the people, and the only official who is designated by the Constitution to give Congress, from time to time, information on the state of the Union, the President must lay out a work program for the Government, and the appropriations that would necessarily follow would only be to supply the money to do the work in accordance with that work program. Hence it appeared to the House Committee on the Budget and to the House that the President, being the one official intrusted with this important duty, should have at the same time the machinery, the staff, or the bureau, or whatever you might call it, to aid him in the preparation of the budget.

The Senate took a very different view of the question. The Senate contended that inasmuch as the Secretary of the Treasury was one fiscal agency or official of the Government, he should he the official intrusted with the making of the budget. Thus originally the two Houses were far apart, but before the beginning of this session of Congress a fuller study and reflection had harmonized a great many of the differences between the two bodies. We had harmonized most of the differences with regard to the way the budget should be made. The Senate bill originally provided that the various heads of departments should designate some one in the departments to make the estimates, that the estimates should be sent to the Secretary of the Treasury, and that the Secretary of the Treasury should revise them, modify them as he thought would be necessary and then send to the President the original estimates, with his modifications, and that then the President should make such modifications as he thought wise and send the whole thing to It seemed to us that was very unwise, and finally it seemed to the Senate that it would be unwise to create such cumbersome machinery. The Senate bill at this session of Congress in this respect provided as follows:

and consent of the Senate, and shall receive salaries of $10,000 and $7,500 a year, respectively. The assistant director shall perform such duties as the director may designate, and during the absence or incapacity of the director or during a vacancy in the office of director he shall act as director. The bureau, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prepare the budget, the alternative budget, and any supplemental or deficiency estimates, and to this end shall have authority to assemble, correlate, revise, reduce, or increase the estimates of the several departments or establishments.

In section 208 it also provided that the director, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, should appoint and fix the compensation of employees. The House bill, while containing much of the same language, still was vitally different. It provided for the creation of a bureau to be known as the bureau of the budget, not located anywhere, and then it provided the same as the Senate bill with regard to the salaries of the director and the assistant director. It further provided that the bureau, under the direction of the President, should prepare for him the budget, the alternative budget, and any supplementary or deficiency estimates, and to this end should have such authority.

And then section 208 provided-

The director, with the approval of the President, shall appoint and fix compensation—

And so forth.

The dispute in conference has been over these differences.

The Senate was insistent that this bureau should be a bureau in the Treasury Department, and the budget should be made for the Secretary of the Treasury and under his direction. It mattered very little to the conferees on the part of the House just where that bureau should be housed, if in the housing of it we should not take from the President the power that we were placing in him to have this bureau, the President's bureau, prepare the budget for him and to give to the President the power to approve of appointments and to fix the compensation of employees. We have agreed upon the bill so far as this provision is concerned, so that it carries the following language:

There is hereby created in the Treasury Department a bureau to be known as the bureau of the budget.

The rest of the language fixing the salary of the director is the same as contained in both bills. Then we provide

The bureau, under such rules and regulations as the President may prescribe, shall prepare for him the budget, the alternative budget, and any supplemental or deficiency estimates, and to this end shall have authority to assemble, correlate, revise, reduce, or increase the estimates of the several departments or establishments.

Then, in section 208, we leave the President with the power to approve and agree to the compensation of the employees. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. As I understand it now, the conference report creates this new bureau in the Treasury Department but does not put it under the Secretary of the Treasury. How, then, is the bureau, in any proper sense of the word—the language when applied to other bureaus in other departments-a bureau in the Treasury Department, if the Secretary of the Treasury has no authority over it?

Mr. GOOD. That was exactly the ground that the conferces The Senate conferees were insistent that it should be in the Treasury Department. We did not care where it was housed, so long as the President was the directing force in the bureau.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit another interruption?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman says "housed in the Treasury Department." Does that mean that it is to have its offices in the Treasury Department Building?

Mr. GOOD. They will be provided for by the Secretary of the Treasury

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What authority will the Secretary of the Treasury have over this bureau, if the conference report be adopted, as it will be, and in what proper sense of the word is the bureau in the Treasury Department, not being at all subject to the orders of its chief?

Mr. GOOD. It is not a bureau in the generally accepted sense that a bureau is placed in a department, giving the head of the department control over that bureau.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then is it in the Treasury Department?

Mr. GOOD. Well, I suppose it is, in a way. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is not that a violent supposi-

Mr. GOOD. To this extent: We provide further on that it Sec. 207. That there is hereby created in the Treasury Department a bureau to be known as the bureau of the budget. There shall be in the bureau a director and an assistant director, who shall be nominated by the President and appointed by him, by and with the advice if he so desires, place upon the Secretary of the Treasury some of the power vested in the President; but, after all, that is the President's act, and the bureau, we think, is left where we had it before. We believe it would have been better not to have put in the words "in the Treasury Department," but I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin that it is an idle phrase. It does not mean anything, because the real meat in the section is the power granted by the section, and the only power conferred is the power we give to the President. The President is given power to appoint the director and the assistant director, and he is not required even to get the confirmation of the Senate, because it was thought that for these offices that would be so peculiarly the President's staff, the President's force, the President, without being questioned with regard to his appointments, should appoint the men whom he believed he could trust to do his will in the preparation of the budget, so that when the budget came before him it would be a budget that reflected his sentiment and his determination with regard to economy and with regard to expenditure. Then, too, the budget is to be prepared for the President under such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe. No power is granted to the Secretary of the Treasury

Now, I will say frankly to the gentleman that we thought we were not giving up very much. We were insistent that this bureau should prepare the budget for the President. ate bill provided that it should be prepared for the Secretary of the Treasury. While we have agreed to leave it in the Treasury Department-it must go somewhere as a bureau-yet it goes with all the restrictions and all the limitations, and those restrictions and limitations are to the effect that the President has sole supervision over the budget, the selection of the staff and the making of the budget, and that the budget shall be prepared as directed by the President, and will be the President's

Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It would not have been in the Treasury Department at all? The President could have put it there, perhaps.

Mr. GOOD. I imagine the bureau will have to be housed where the Secretary of the Treasury may say it shall be housed; but so far as personnel is concerned, so far as work is concerned, I do not see how the Treasury Department has any authority over the work of the bureau at all, certainly none over its conclusions or over its personnel, unless that authority is given by rule or regulation of the President.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman has pretty much Mr. GREENE of Vermont. explained what I had in mind to ask him, except this: Of course it is obvious that the purpose of the budget legislation in the first place is to exercise control over all of the executive departments, and it would appear that if the budget bureau be lodged in one of them that one sooner or later will come to have a somewhat undue influence upon its policy of administration over the others. Now, as the gentleman has explained, it does not make much difference, because no matter in what executive department the budget system is lodged the President is at the head of every one of those departments anyway.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; that is true. And we have feared that to give one of the departments control over this bureau would work to the disadvantage of that department and also to the discredit of the budget bureau.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The question is whether he will permit the local interference of that department in his own

Mr. GOOD. I do not think he will. My impression is that such an experiment would very soon prove the soundness of our

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The idea of the House and the House Budget Committee has been all the time to have the President of the United States himself responsible for this budget, and that idea is carried out in this conference report

Mr. GOOD. Absolutely. Now, the other provision had to do with the general accounting office, wherein to create the office of the comptroller general. We had a very serious argument over that. Some of the conferees on the part of the Senate very strenuously objected to the provision of the House bill which created the position of comptroller general and fixed his term during good behavior. There was no contention at any time by the conferees on the part of the Senate that Congress did not have power under the Constitution to fix by law the manner of the removal of this officer, whom we were creating. The question raised by the veto message of the former President is not involved at all, because in that respect it comes to the House now just as it came up then, except as to the length of the term, a qualification which is unimportant, when the former President vetoed the bill in the last Congress.

The House bill provided, as did the bill that was vetoed, that the comptroller general might be removed for certain causes by a concurrent resolution of Congress. The Senate bill and the conference report provides that it requires a joint resolution of Congress. There has never been that clear-cut distinction between a concurrent resolution and a joint resolution that there ought to be. My understanding of a concurrent resolution is that if it has the effect of law it must be signed by the President. The name offered to a resolution of this kind does not determine its status. We can not pass a resolution that has the effect of law without the signature of the President of the United States. Some time ago it was suggested by some that we could pass a concurrent resolution declaring peace with Germany without the signature of the President. Certainly any such action would have the effect of law, and under the Constitution would require the President's signature. Constitution provides:

Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the same shall take effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two-thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in the case of a bill.

Now, the House bill contained the provision with regard to removal by concurrent resolution, while in the Senate bill the removal would be by joint resolution. Inasmuch as there might possibly be a question about the fact that any such act would have the effect of law, no matter what we call it, whether we called it a joint or a concurrent resolution, it would require the approval of the President; therefore, to remove all doubt about it, so that it might not be controverted in the future, the House conferees were willing to substitute the word "joint" for the word "concurrent," and remove any controversy that might be raised on that question in the future. I think it is an improvement.

Mr. TEMPLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. TEMPLE. The removal, then, must originate with Congress?

Absolutely.

Mr. TEMPLE. That is not in harmony with the position taken by the President during the preceding administration that the power of appointment carried with it the power of Mr. GOOD. That is true. The former President's contention. was that Congress was powerless to act at all in the premises.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. Mr. NORTON. Was the word "impeachment" left in the bill?

That is left in the bill.

Mr. NORTON. Does it still leave it as a life position?

Mr. GOOD. No; the office has a tenure of 15 years under the conference agreement. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have agreed to yield some of my time, and will not take further time except to say this-

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. For a question. Mr. STEENERSON. Is ther

Mr. STEENERSON. Is there anything in the budget bill that limits the authority of the House to originate appropriations outside?

Mr. GOOD. No; this bill does not attempt to change the rules of the House or to govern the House at all. The Constitution provides that each House shall make rules to govern its procedure, and it was thought it would be very unwise for us to bring in a bill which would attempt by statute to control the action of future Congresses when each House would be at liberty to violate such a law. That has always been our position on that matter.

Mr. STEENERSON. I could not see anything in the conference report to that effect, but I want to be sure.

Mr. GOOD. Now, a good deal has been said about what the budget law will save the country. No one can tell. I think the newspaper writers and the magazine articles have overestimated the amount that it will save, but I believe it will save a great deal of money and will give the country better administration of public affairs. There can be no question about that if the power granted is properly exercised. I believe the bill is along the line of good business in Government affairs. I believe it will wipe out a great deal of overlapping in Government activities and will stimulate departments to become more efficient. It will enable the President to hold down the estimates. It will enable him to hold down certain activities, and to employ good business methods in government. I am confident that this bill in itself will become one of the greatest revenue measures ever enacted by the Government.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. DENISON. As I remember, the director of the budget serves for 15 years.

Mr. GOOD. The director of the budget serves without term. He will be changed whenever the President desires and, of course, would be changed by each succeeding administration. Of course, the President would want his own budget officer who entertained his ideas of economy.

Mr. DENISON. What is the salary?

Mr. GOOD. Ten thousand dollars a year. That is the same in the bill that we passed before, and it was the same in both bills and was not in conference.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman and the conferees had no question in their mind as to this being an inferior office.

Mr. GOOD. There is no question about that; it is an inferior office. Under the Constitution a Cabinet position is an inferior office. Inferior officers are those officers not designated by the Constitution.

Mr. DENISON. A Cabinet officer has to be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and so do postmasters; but nobody has claimed that they were superior officers. I think if the gentleman will look up the history of the Constitution he will come to the conclusion that we have a great many officers who are superior in the kind of administrative work that they do and in the importance of their obligations and their offices, but under the Constitution they are not designated as superior officers and are inferior officers. In my opinion, there is no question but that all of these officers that we create here are inferior officers, yet they are very important officers. I think the director of the budget will, in fact, become the President's assistant.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this report is a unanimous report, and so far as I know there is no objection to it on either side of the House, and I think it should be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this report has the unanimous approval of all the conferees, both of the Senate and the House. The gentleman from Iowa has very fully explained the action of the conferees with reference to the matters in the bill that were in conference. I think it can be said that the chief and most important desire of the House in passing this legislation was to bring about, or rather to fix, the responsibility for the submission of the estimates on the President rather than upon any Cabinet or other appointive officer. Hence, the bill as it passed the House provided that the director of the budget should be directly under the direction and supervision of the President. In other words, the budget bureau should be under the President rather than under the Secretary of the Treasury, who under the present law is charged with the transmission of estimates to Congress. As you are aware, the Senate took the opposite view and made the budget bureau a Treasury bureau and subject to the Secretary of the Treasury, and left with the Secretary of the Treasury the duty of submitting the estimates to Congress.

As the gentleman from Iowa states, the conferees have agreed upon a provision which leaves this budget bureau under the President as the House originally contemplated. It is true that the bill provides that the budget bureau shall be in the Treasury Department, but that really has no significance, for the law expressly declares and provides that the bureau shall be directly under the President and directly responsible to him.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will,

Mr. BRIGGS. Can the gentleman state to the House why it was insisted upon putting this budget bureau in the Treasury Department if the Secretary of the Treasury has no direction or supervision over that bureau?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Well, I will say to the gentleman that the Senate conferees very earnestly insisted on their position, and, as the gentleman knows, when you get into conference I it is always necessary to make some concession, and while the House conferees believe that they actually made no concession in this instance, however, it seemed to be entirely satisfactory to the Senate conferees if we gave them the benefit of that particular language, and the House conferees, rather than have a disagreement, agreed to it. The only other important change that has been made is in reference to the tenure of office on the part of the comptroller general. As you recall, the House bill provided that the comptroller general would hold during good behavior. The Senate had a provision of seven years' tenure for the comptroller general. The House was very firmly of the opinion that the comptroller general should be to all intents and purposes an officer of the Congress and that he should be responsible alone to the Congress and absolutely independent of the executive department. Upon him rests the duty of auditing the expenditures of the various executive departments, of advising the Congress from time to time as to the manner in which the funds appropriated have been expended, and giving to the Congress advice as to economies which might be effected and as to the application of appropriations by the various departments. In order that he be independent of the Executive it was important that he should not be trimming his sails for a reappointment. The conferees therefore agreed upon a 15-year tenure of office for the comptroller general with a provision making him ineligible to reappointment. Personally, I am more pleased with that than the House provision, because I do not favor life tenure. As I say, the one idea of the committee and of the House in the adoption of the bill as it was passed by the House was to make the comptroller general independent of the Executive.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield me three additional minutes?

Mr. GOOD. I yield the gentleman three additional minutes. Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And the provision that he shall hold office for 15 years and then be ineligible for reappointment relieves him from any sense of responsibility or dependency upon the Executive, and he can and will exercise that independence which is so necessary if he is to function as this law contemplates that he shall.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I will.
Mr. DENISON. Who appoints the comptroller general?
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The President appoints him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. DENISON. Then, technically speaking, the comptroller general is a superior officer to the director of the budget. That is true, is it not?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; I do not concede that,

Mr. DENISON. The Constitution provides that all public officers of the United States provided for by Congress must be appointed with the consent and approval of the Senate, and that Congress may provide by authorizing the President alone or the courts to appoint inferior officers. Now, in this bill, if we provide for a director of the budget to be appointed by the President alone, it must be considered as an inferior office under the Constitution, and if we provide for the appointment of a comptroller general by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, that recognizes the fact that he is a superior officer.

Mr. TEMPLE. Is not the language substantially something like this, that other inferior officers may be appointed by the President alone?

Mr. DENISON. No; the gentleman is wrong. It says that the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper—
Mr. TEMPLE. "Such inferior officers as they think proper."

The man who has to be confirmed by the Senate is not a superior officer necessarily. Third-class postmasters are confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. DENISON. That is because Congress has so provided and so considered in its enactment.

Mr. TEMPLE. As in this case. Mr. DENISON. But the Constitution says only a class of officers designated as inferior officers can be appointed by the President alone. Therefore if this bill provides for the appointment of a director of the budget by the President alone, he seems to be in a class that the Constitution designates as an inferior officer. And as you provide for the appointment of a comptroller general by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, he must be of a different class.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But the mere fact, I submit to the gentleman, that the bill provides that the appointment of the comptroller general must be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate does not necessarily make him a superior officer, because, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has pointed out, the appointment of many inferior officers is made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. For instance, a second lieutenant in the Army.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again ex-

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I ask for two additional minutes. Mr. GOOD. I yield two additional minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to say in conclusion that, while I do not contend that this is a perfect measure, it is in my judgment a great constructive measure, one of the greatest that the Congress has passed for many, many years, and I believe it is going to work a great economy in the expenditures made by the Government.

It is going to bring about a greater coordination, a greater efficiency in the various executive departments. It is something, as you know, that many public writers and men interested in public affairs have for years advocated, and I think that the country is to be congratulated upon the fact that this law is to be placed upon the statute books. After all, its real value will depend upon the manner in which it is administered by the Executive and the final action taken by Congress in making the appropriations. For, after all, if the Executive and the Congress are not actuated by the proper spirit of economy, then we will have an extravagant Government, regardless of what law may be passed. The law, I firmly believe, provides the machinery for true economy as well as efficiency in Government, if the Executive and the Congress will avail themselves of it.

And I want to say, further, that I think the thanks of the country are due to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good], the chairman of the committee [applause], who has labored so ably and intelligently and earnestly for this legislation. For to him more than to any other man in Congress is due the greater part of the credit for putting this bill upon the statute books. [Applause.] The gentleman from Iowa has made a splendid record in Congress. He has made an able and excellent chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but in my judgment this will be the crowning achievement of his splendid legislative career. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, being on the conference committee on this bill, it properly becomes me to say a word touching the result of the conference.

The bill as reported by the conferees is the House bill, with a little sprinkling of Senate principle in it, and a little of the quibbling of the Senate. Outside of this it is the "JIM" Good original bill of the Sixty-sixth Congress. The main difference between the House and the Senate in the original bill and this one was that we sought to make a budgetary system in the executive branch of the Government, and make the President responsible for it, so that he might swear at him in this and other Congresses. The Senate undertook to relieve the President of that duty and put it in the Treasury Department and make the Secretary of the Treasury responsible. That is the principal difference. We also sought to have the comptroller general appointed permanently. We gave way to the Senate in this by making the appointment for 15 years and noneligible for reappointment. And so we gave to the Senate the principle that you were not to appoint this man for life. I wanted him to be absolutely independent. He takes office for 15 years, and he is noneligible for reappointment. It has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Denison] that the executive budgetary man is probably an inferior officer; but let me say to you, gentlemen, he is the President's man. The President does even have to consult the Senate about him. He pays him $10,000 a year, and he is immediately under the directon of the President of the United States. It may be an inferior office, but if he will appoint a man with courage, a man who will do his duty, he will be the second largest man in the executive department of the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. And every time he speaks it will be the President who will be speaking.

Mr. GARNER. He will be able to look at the Secretary of the Treasury and say, "You will cut out this expenditure. This is what I am going to abolish." "Who is this that is speaking to me?" "It is the representative of the President of the United States himself." And when the Secretary of the Treasury sits down at the Cabinet table and says, "This budgetary man is destroying my department," who defends him? The President himself, and if there is a controversy to be fought out, he sends for his budgetary man and the field it a for his budgetary man and they fight it out around that Cabinet table. Whereas, if you had put it in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury or any other Cabinet member, it would have I been a question between the Cabinet members and the President would have been embarrassed. So I say that the bill as reported by the conferees is in reality the original House bill.

The Senate provided that the bureau should be in the Treasury. We gave the Senate that much. We gave them the hull and we kept the kernel, as my friend from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] We gave the Senate the principle and we kept the remarks. essence of independence. So the result, I think, will be that you are going to have good legislation.

I think it is unnecessary to talk about the merits of the bill, because I doubt if there will be 10 men in the House of Representatives to vote against it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GARNER. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. As I understand, it is claimed that if this is enacted it will create in the Treasury a bureau over which the Secretary of the Treasury will have no influence whatever?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How can a bureau be in a department and the head of that department have no authority over it?

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman will read the report, he will see the President is responsible. That is the main point. Now, gentlemen, inasmuch as we are all going to vote for this conference report, there is hardly any use to make an argument in its favor, in my opinion.

I want to say one word, before I sit down, with reference to the responsibility of the House of Representatives to the part it should play in this system of government. I believe the system of our committee is the best that we can do now. only other remedy that I suggest is for the Senate and the House together to appoint a budgetary committee, and that joint committee put a limitation on the various committees of the House of Representatives as to how much they can spend each year. I doubt whether you can ever get the Senate to do that. I am not certain you can get the House of Representatives to do it; but this is the only other method I can think of, namely, for the two Houses to appoint a joint committee and that joint committee undertake to investigate the finances of the country, the needs of the different departments, and place limitations upon each committee, and then go back to the old committee That was my original idea. But it was thought that it would be impossible to get that through either the House or the Senate. So I accepted what I thought then was the next best thing-to put the entire appropriation in the hands of one committee in the House of Representatives. I said then, and I repeat now, that if that committee will do its duty it can be of great service to the country in the matter of economy. But if it undertakes to usurp the power of the other committees, its life will be limited and its services at an end. You can not let one committee of 35 members absorb the powers of the entire Congress. There will be a revolt some time, led by somebody, that will bring about a different system. And I hope in the future the Appropriations Committee will keep within the rules of the House of Representatives and thereby continue its life. [Applause,]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Temple].

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, the budget system provided for in the legislation and in the rules that have passed the House and the Senate consists of three parts, only two of which are dealt with in the bill that is now about to be finally passed. The first part has to do with the preparation of a working program and estimates of the expenditures necessary to carry out that program. That work is under the control of the director of the budget. The second part has to do with the action of Congress upon those estimates, and that is not included in this bill. The third part has to do with an independent audit under the supervision of the comptroller provided for in the bill. The first part and the third are dealt with by law. The second part is also an essential part of the system. Why was that not included in the law?

The reason is very simple. The Constitution provides that each House shall make its own rules. The committees are created by the rules, and if we would put into the law a provision that all of these appropriations should be handled by one committee we would give the Senate the right to pass upon the rules of the House, we would give the House the right to pass upon the rules of the Senate, and we would give the President the right to veto or approve the rules of both Houses. Each House protects the rights guaranteed to it by the Constitution when each House reserves to itself the right to make its own rules, to determine what committees it will create, and what the powers and privileges of those committees shall be. We have put into the law all that could be provided by law-the preparation of the budget and the provision for an independent audit.

Now, as to the question whether the director of the budget is an "inferior officer," in the sense in which that phrase is used in the Constitution. I should think that a man who is appointed by the President and not subject at all to confirmation by the Senate has in some respects a position superior to that which he would hold if he were subject to confirmation by the Senate. He is appointed by the President exclusively. He is the President's right arm for this purpose. He is subject to nobody but the President, not to the members of the Cabinet, and not to the Members of the Senate, and certainly not to the Members of the House, none of whom has anything to say about his appointment.

The comptroller has an entirely different function to perform. He audits the accounts, or they are audited in his department. He determines whether the provisions of law making appropriations have been observed by the various spending agencies of the

We have found during the last Congress that the spending agencies have very largely overrun the amounts given to them, intrusted to them to be expended. Heads of departments appointed since the 4th of March are not responsible for what was done by their predecessors, but they come to us and tell us that they are in trouble. Rather than paralyze the Government, we make deficiency appropriations. In my judgment, there will be a great deal less of that under the new system. We shall have better-prepared estimates. We shall have a more carefully thought-out program for the year's work, because the President will now have in the budget bureau the machinery which will enable him to perform the duties imposed upon him by the Constitution. We shall have more careful supervision of the expenditures, because of the work of the comptroller, and I believe under the new rules of the House, adopted a year ago, we shall have a better handling of the appropriation bills than under the old system.

The three things stand together, and while the rule providing that all appropriation bills must come from the one and only Committee on Appropriations may be modified hereafter. I have no fear that it will ever be modified in a way that will place the operation of the House of Representatives, in which the appropriation bills originate, out of harmony with the other two great parts of the budget system. improve, I hope, in time to come upon our present methods, but we shall not go back to the old method that scatters responsibility and deprives us of efficiency. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I did not vote for the House Mr. MONTAGUE. amendment of the Senate bill upon its passage. I had scruples about the constitutional questions which had been raised heretofore by the veto of the President. I do not know that that has been fully met, but it has been met in such a practical and partial way that I am willing to waive my views regarding it in my earnest desire to see some budget bill become a law.

My second objection to the amendment was as to the life tenure of the comptroller general. That has been removed by the conference. It is still unfortunate as to the term of office, I think, but the principle by which I was controlled in my former vote no longer finds an insuperable difficulty in this respect. I hope much from the successful accomplishment of this legislation, but I have not the exuberant optimism that some Members seem to entertain as resulting from its enactment. Perhaps auxiliary and supplementary legislation may be necessary to perfect the plan. Time will decide this. In my own view I am happy to see that the Treasury Department has somewhat to do with this law. I think the budget system will only work in its maximum efficiency when the Secretary of the Treasury himself has a seat on the floor of this House and on the floor of the Senate to debate any matter in relation to the budget, and to answer any interrogatories that may be propounded by Members of the respective bodies. Long since I offered a bill to that effect. The Congress will with the greatest diffibill to that effect. The Congress will with the greatest diffi-culty avail itself of the benefits of a budget system, or control that system as it should do, unless the Secretary or his assistants cooperate on the floor of the House in the actual consideration of the measure. In course of time I predict such mutual consideration, debate, and cooperation will come to pass.

With these observations, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I shall vote for the conference report. [Applause.]

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the House is about to take final action on a measure which I think may be properly characterized as the greatest measure of legislative and administrative reform in our history. Men have talked of and urged a budget system for many years, and for many years views and opinions as to principles upon which a budget system should be founded were very wide apart and very diversified. As is usual in such cases, after much discussion there came to be a pretty general agreement as to the principles upon which such a system should be based, and when the committee which presented this legislation began its labors sentiment had been fairly well crystallized relative to the most important features of budget legislation, and yet there was still a wide diversity of opinion in regard to important details.

I think that those charged with the duty of preparing this bill are entitled to very great credit for the agreement which was reached, and for the measure which is now presented to I think that those who have given the most attention to budget reform in years past will say that the bill agreed upon presents a sounder and a better measure than could have been reasonably expected amid the conflicting opinions entertained relative to the subject.

Like all great and important measures, it has its compromises, and the principal compromise relates to the question of whether or not the bureau of the budget should be an entirely independent establishment or should be a bureau of the Treasury Department.

The compromise arrived at makes it neither an independent bureau nor a bureau of the Treasury. It makes it a semi-independent bureau in the Treasury Department; while the bureau will be largely independent it will be at least under the roof of the Treasury Department. I think the compromise was a wise one, for I think there is something in the Senate's contention that inasmuch as the Secretary of the Treasury is the chief fiscal officer of the Government, the officer most directly charged with responsibility relative to revenues and expenditures, he should at least have a general supervision over and a larger influence in the making of the budget than other members of the Cabinet. He will not have any considerable influence in the making of the budget under this bill unless the President sees fit so to provide by rules and regulations which he is authorized to make. In my opinion no man can say and be absolutely certain that his judgment is sound, that this bureau should beyond all question be an independent bureau, or, on the other hand, that it should beyond all question be under the supervision and control of the Secretary of the Treasury. Time alone can demonstrate whether or no the bureau should be more closely affiliated with the Treasury or more completely divorced from it. There are arguments, and good ones, on both sides of that proposition. But it is in, although it may be said not to be of, the Treasury. If the President sees fit, he may give the Secretary of the Treasury more to do with and more responsibility touching the budget than any other Cabinet minister, or he may not.

In the experience of the years it will be demonstrated whether it should be brought nearer to or completely divorced from the Treasury Department, and that can be accomplished to a considerable extent under this law and without additional legislation, or, if it shall be deemed wise, amendment may be made.

So the compromise is a wise one. It is true that in the main the Senate received only the shell in the compromise, but I am glad the compromise was made, for it leaves the bureau at least within the shadow of the Treasury Department, and the President may bring it to a considerable extent under the control of the Treasury Department if he sees fit.

Mr. Speaker, two classes of people will be disappointed by this budget legislation, as there are two classes who are always disappointed in connection with the consummation of any great reform-those who have no faith or confidence in it and those who expect too much of it. This is a great forward movement in the direction of efficiency and the centralization of responsibility in government, but it will not necessarily and of itself save one penny. Under the budget system we may be just as extravagant as the country ever has been, or we may economize more effectively than we ever have economized in the past. At least we shall have the machinery that will encourage economy, that will help fix the responsibility for ex-travagance, that will make our methods more businesslike, and under which, if the Congress desires to economize, it can do so with greater facility and certainty than is possible under the past slipshod system of estimating and of making appropriations.

Rebsion Rodenberg

Mr. Speaker, as we take the final action relative to this important legislation I think we should give due credit to those who have been most responsible for it.

Mr. BLANTON. Before the gentleman goes to that, will he yield? I want to ask the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming whether or not under this system it will be possible for us to abolish the various offices of the surveyors general scattered in the various States in the West?

Mr. MONDELL. It is possible to do it now, but it would be very unwise to do it.

Mr. BLANTON. Though recommended by the department and our committee, we have not been able to do it heretofore. Because it was not wise. We shall not Mr. MONDELL. necessarily do fool things because we are operating under a budget. [Laughter.]
Mr. BLANTON. Those unnecessary offices were abolished by the House committee, and only put back in the bill when the gentleman from Wyoming came in and through his persuasive powers got the House to put them back.

Mr. MONDELL. They are not unnecessary offices. The House is a highly intelligent body, and when a gentleman appears before it who knows the subject in hand the House is readily convinced. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Especially if he is the majority leader.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, within our time and in recent years three men have rendered particularly conspicuous service toward this reform, the gentleman from New York, Mr. Fitzgerald, the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Sherley, and their successor in office, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good]. [Applause.] Others have worked earnestly and faithfully, including the members of the committee reporting the bill. Many are entitled to great credit, but in the House these three men rendered special services toward making this great reform possible, and it has been the good fortune of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] to have the opportunity, as it has been the good fortune of the House that he has had the opportunity, of taking the leading and most important part in working out the accepted plan under which we now finish and complete this great work. [Applause.]
Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves the previous question on agreeing to the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The affirmative vote was taken.

The SPEAKER. Those opposed-

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. Has the House divided?

The SPEAKER. Yes; that is the Chair's impression, that the House has divided.

Mr. WALSH. The Chair had taken one side. The House did not divide on a vive voce vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he had put both sides. If not, the Chair supposes the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw his point of no quorum for a moment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly, My only purpose is to secure a yea-and-nay vote.

The SPEAKER. Those opposed will say "no."
Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, the Chair had already declared there was no quorum present. Can that be withdrawn?
The SPEAKER. That is correct. The Chair thinks the House has already divided.

Mr. WALSH. I will withdraw the point, anyway.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members. As many as are in favor of agreeing to the conference report will, as their names are called, vote "yea," those opposed "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 335, navs 3, not voting 92, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. Goop, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PACKER LEGISLATION.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6320, the packers bill, and pending that I would like the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas to see if we can agree on time for general debate.

Mr. JACOWAY. I think we can take the balance of the day to discuss this important bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the balance of the day be given to general debate on the bill, the time to be equally divided between myself and the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WALSH. The division of time was arranged for yester-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to to-day. As the gentleman from Massachusetts suggests, the time has already been agreed to be divided between the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Arkansas. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Was a privileged matter pending before the House when the House adjourned last evening?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Con-NALLY] had offered a motion, which he claimed was privileged. Mr. WALSH. Will that be considered as still pending, or will it be waived?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it is pending, but may be called up again. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products and eggs, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6320, with Mr. Towner in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones]

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, one of the greatest problems before the country to-day is that of the control of the packing industry. Much has been said on this question and a great deal of discussion has been engaged in. Much abuse has been indulged in, and many times, by those who did not understand the question or the facts relating thereto.

It is easy to criticize. It is easy to complain. It is easy to say "Carthage must be destroyed." It is easy to say the packers must be destroyed; but I would call your attention to this fact: The interest of this country and the interest of the packers are inextricably interwoven. The producer must have a market for his stock. The consumer must have the meat in the form of the finished product.

The United States of America has the finest business organizations in the world. No other country on this earth compares with the United States in the genius and make-up of her business organizations. Of all the business organizations in this country that of the packers is the most perfectly organized and is able to operate on a very small margin of profit. The magnificence and perfection of their organization are worthy of the study of any man who likes to study and think of the accomplishments of master minds in the way of organizing systems of business. In making everything connected with the system count, in eliminating every form and character of waste, in being able to distribute their product with the least degree of loss or delay, no other industry in this country approaches the packers. However, their very organization has given them a power for evil as well as for good, and evil practices should always be condemned.

I have no patience with any man who would destroy business. The question, therefore, for one who has to deal with legislation and can not set out and end his services with a lot of abuse is to assist in formulating a law that will not interfere in any appreciable way with the perfection and operation of this great industry, but that will simply regulate the same in such a way as to remove the abuses that naturally grow up around and cluster about an unregulated industry. I think it would be far better to let the packers go unregulated than to destroy them; but I do not think that either is necessary. There are those in this country who, because of certain abuses that have grown up in connection with these industries, would destroy them unceremoniously. On the other hand, there are those who because of the fine working systems which they have devised would turn them loose unhindered and unhampered and permit them to engage in any kind of business or any character of abuse which their great power would enable them to indulge in. I submit that neither of these is the correct theory, but that the right thing to do is to devise a law which, while maintaining and getting the advantage for the people of all of the fine workings of these great organizations, at the same time control them in such a way as to destroy the abuses that are connected with their operation.

Under a decree entered some time ago the packers agreed not to engage in the manufacture and distribution of certain products that are ordinarily termed unrelated to the packing industry. In a general way these products may be defined as those in which no appreciable amount of ingredients come from live stock. By means of their special-car service and their special facilities for handling products the packers had been enabled to embark in various lines of endeavor, until they owned or controlled more than 100 different corporations and owned stock in several hundred different corporations,

Of course, it is sometimes argued, and frequently believed, that there can be no objection to this character of business of the centralizing of control by a few men of the channels of trade in the meat products that sustain life in this country; and while up to a certain point this is true, there comes a time in the growth of business organizations where, from the standpoint of public welfare and the protection of the people, it is necessary to have limitations, or at least regulations. There is no doubt that in theory the larger the business organization the less the percentage of overhead expenses and the more efficient can be its method of handling business. In this way it could be argued that the people would be better off if all the business in any line of endeavor were under one head-in other words, to have a food dictator.

In the same way it might be argued that a government would be more efficient if it had one head who should be dictator. There is no doubt that if the United States Government had one man at its head who had supreme power there would be very much less delay in getting laws enacted. There would not necessarily be anything like the expense in the operation of the Government, and its activities would not be anything like so cumbersome. And yet no one would argue the wisdom of this country having a dictator or a king.

As a matter of fact, it is necessary for the preservation of a great country to have representatives from every section who have a voice in the affairs of government. In this way the rights of the people can be maintained. Now, if the sole purpose of the Government were to make money or to establish commerce, he argument for big institutions, exclusively managed, would be unanswerable. But the primary interest of government, or rather the primary necessity, is the making of men, and if every line of endeavor had one dictator at its head with all other men working for him, the manhood of this country, and the initiative, aggressiveness, thought, and vital force of the men who make up this country would be submerged and would become mere cogs in the wheel. No representation could be long sustained under such an organization. Therefore, it is necessary that business to some extent be individualized. It can not be entirely individual, and, on the other hand, it can not be entirely organization. There is a happy medium between the two, where organization is carried to the extent of becoming efficient, and yet not to the extent of destroying individuality. Therefore, while there was some discussion as to whether this decree should remain in force-some appeared to think that the decree should be abolished by law and the packers allowed to engage in any line of business in which they thought they could do so profitably-I think the wiser course is pursued, to wit: To let the decree remain in force and effect, although some modification may be found necessary from time to time.

There are many other practices on the part of the packers which, to my way of thinking, are not what they should be. For instance, it has been the practice of the big packers when a man shipped his cattle to one market and found that market congested and the price low to notify the buyers in other markets, in the event the shipper sought to reconsign his cattle, of the price that was bid at the original market, and it has been the practice of the packers, through their commission men, not to bid more in the new market than was originally bid in the first market. This practice forces the shipper to sell his live stock in the first market whether the conditions of the market there are such as to justify the sale of his cactle or not. I do not believe that practice is wise, and I do not believe it could be continued under the regulations of this bill.

Another thing that seems rather strange in connection with the operation of the packers is the uniform growth of the big packers and the steadiness with which they maintain the relative percentages of the new stock slaughtered. For instance, during the year 1916, for the week ending January 8, Swift & Co. bought 34.73 per cent of the cattle slaughtered by the five big packers, and in the week ending December 30 they bought 34.58 per cent. During every week of that year, Swift & Co. handled thirty-four and a fraction per cent of the cattle slaughtered by the big packers and at real time did the cattle slaughtered by the big packers, and at no time did the percentage of cattle slaughtered by the five big packers vary 1 per cent, in so far as Swift is concerned.

During the same year Armour & Co.'s percentage varied from 27.05 to 28.07 per cent. In other words, their percentage during no week, relatively speaking, either increased or diminished The same is substantially true of Morris & Co., and also of Wilson & Co., although the percentage of Cudahy & Co.

varies in a larger degree.

This kind of arrangement might not injure citizens in certain portions of this country; it might not necessarily mean that the packers were making more profit than they should, but it would most surely tend to depress the prices paid to the

The producer must always sell in a market that he does not control. He buys at the other man's price. His only hope of securing a fair price lies in an open, competitive market. When those who buy most of the products products have so managed the industry that grow out of that production that they control a very large percentage of the business, then if they cease to compete with each other in the purchase of the basic products there is no doubt they can in a large measure control the price of that product. The more nearly they control the total output the more nearly they can come to regulating the price of the

This measure places in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture a supervision that I think will work similarly to the present inspection system of the national banks, and I believe it will go far toward eliminating the evils that have grown up in connection with the institutions, and at the same time I believe it will protect the American people from the dangers in connection with the tremendous growth of these institutions.

In a good many matters recently I have found myself in accord with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER], but with a good portion of his speech yesterday I do not agree, particularly with reference to the position stated by him in respect to the so-called consent decrees. The gentleman from Kansas used this language as reported in the Record:

But I will say to the gentleman that the successful administration of this bill by the Department of Agriculture will, in my judgment, either necessitate the ignoring or the cancellation of that decree.

I do not think the bill is susceptible to that construction, and if it were I would not vote for it. The matter was very thoroughly discussed in the committee before the bill was I am sure that the committee felt, or most of them did, that the decree would not be interfered with. I do not think it ought to be. I have in my hand a copy of that decree.

It was the result of a lawsuit that was filed against the so-called big packers, and in due and regular order the suit was disposed of by voluntary judgment. That sort of disposition has been made of numerous lawsuits in the history of this country, and I dare say there is not a lawyer in the House who has not settled many lawsuits by means of voluntary Under the terms of this decree these institutions were deprived of doing certain things that they had theretofore been doing. I think it is very important that they should not engage in some of the things that are enumerated in the socalled consent decree.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. For a question.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. In that connection, will the gentleman state under what law the proceedings were brought and what, in a general way, they were charged with? Of course, the members of the Committee on Agriculture are more familiar with that decree than the rest of us.

Mr. JONES of Texas. In a general way it was charged that they had undertaken to go into various lines of industry and to monopolize not only the natural products of the packing industry but practically all other food products, and that they were violating certain provisions of existing law with reference to monopolies, trusts, and so forth.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The Clayton antitrust law?

Mr. JONES of Texas. The Clayton antitrust law and provisions of some other laws, as I remember, but largely the antitrust law. Under this decree I think the most important subdivision is subdivision 4, by which the packers as such are forever enjoined from engaging in the manufacturing and selling of certain articles of food that are not related in any way to the packing industry.

I want to give you what is my conception of the harm that would arise by their engaging in the manufacture and sale of those products under existing conditions. The packers use what is known as a private refrigerator car. These refrigerator cars have special service on the railroads. All kinds of other products are sidetracked while these cars go through. It was their practice to put into these refrigerator cars a lot of groceries and other products not related to the packing industry and run them through with special service. In that way a man who was not engaged in the manufacture and sale of meat products could not get the service. For instance, a man representing some other line of business would go into a local community and undertake to sell some nonperishable food product. He would be immediately asked when he could deliver. His reply would be as soon as the railroads get it there, within a week or 10 days; and then he would be met with the reply that the merchant could get it the very next morning in one of the packer cars. Of course, the local merchant would deal with the

There are two important elements in any commercial transaction, especially in transportation, and those are price and service. If a man can give a better price, of course he has an advantage. If a man can get a better railroad rate, of course he has an advantage, and one of the objects of the old interstate commerce law was to abolish rebates. If a man can now by virtue of some facility get a special service, he gets a rebate in service, and there is no question about that. It would perhaps not be wise under present circumstances to deprive the packers of the use of the refrigerator cars, because, under the present transportation system, it is impossible for meat and meat products to be furnished otherwise in proper condition, or at least they have not been able to get them furnished; and I think it would be better to permit the continuation of that serv ice, at least for the present. In doing so, however, they should not be permitted to put in those refrigerator cars nonperishable products and get special service by virtue of refrigeration.

Mr. ASWELL. Is it not a fact that many consumers insist on this special and expeditious service?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Certainly they do; and it would be all right for the packers to have this advantage if everybody else could have it, but a man who does not handle refrigerated products will not get that particular service, because the railroads will sidetrack his shipment for the benefit of the other man. I think the decree should stand if you permit that specialcar service. However, under the terms of this bill the Secretary of Agriculture will have certain powers of regulation, and it will be up to him to construe the measure and establish these regulations. So far as this consent decree exists or remains in force they can handle their perishable products, their meats, and I think there should be every expedition given them, and if better service can be rendered by virtue of the use of those cars they ought to be permitted to use them in the interest of

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. I call the attention of the gentleman to certain language used by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] in his statement yesterday and ask whether the gentleman from Texas, or all of the members of the committee, agree with the gentleman from Kansas? He said:

I do not recall anything now that is in the decree that in my judgment benefited either the producer or the consumer of the country.

Does the committee take that view, or does the gentleman from Kansas rather stand alone? Mr. JONES of Texas. I think the committee took exactly the opposite view, and exactly the opposite is my view. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TINCHER.

Mr. JONES of Texas. For a question.

Mr. TINCHER. What is there in the decree that the gentleman recalls that has in any way benefited the producer or the consumer in this country?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am just coming to that point, and I want to discuss that proposition. If you permit that special service, you will finally permit one organization to gain absolute control of the food products in the country.

Now, if the sole object of America were to make money, that might be justifiable. You might say it would be more efficient if you had one food dictator for all food products and distribute through him just as you can argue we would have a more efficient Government, and it has been argued frequently, if you had a monopolistic government, a government with one man at the head. A dictator could pass this kind of a bill here as soon as you could write it. He could issue a decree saying that the bill should be in force. Of course, it delays legislation to have all these men here representing different districts in the United States who go back to those districts and are responsible to the people of those districts, but in this day and time nobody will argue we ought to have a Government of one man at the head as a dictator, and if you had one concern that had complete control of the food products of this country you might have one great big efficient concern all right, but you will destroy the individual initiative of men all over this country.

Mr. FREE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. In just a moment. If the primary purpose of Government, as I stated, were to make money, that would be true, but the one big purpose of any republican form of government to my mind is to make men, and you can not sustain such a government, in my opinion, without making men and giving men opportunity in every line of business. If you abolish this decree and leave the present refrigerator-car service, you will give them a rebate in the form of a service which will enable them to drive other men out of business.

Will the gentleman yield? Do I understand Mr. TINCHER. the gentleman objects to that portion of the decree which divorces the packer from unrelated lines?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I say if this present system of transportation and present method of distribution are permitted to continue, and so long as they continue under the conditions that now prevail, that portion of the decree should remain in

Mr. TINCHER. But the gentleman will admit before the entering of that decree there is no possible construction that could be given in law with respect to the packers handling un-related lines, and the decree was the first law we had upon the

Mr. JONES of Texas. Except as set out in the petition. If the gentleman will read the petitions in these cases, he will see that they were charged with undertaking to get a monopoly of

Mr. TINCHER. Is the gentleman in favor of that portion of the decree which prohibits the packers from following the produce to the consumer to see that they got a reasonable price and thus cut out the difference between the price the producer got and the consumer has to pay?

Mr. JONES of Texas. There is no such provision in the decree. And if there were, the modifications of the decree in that respect would not affect the question we are dis-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. ASWELL. I will yield the gentleman five additional

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Palmer said before the committee that the decree divorced the packer from the retail business entirely except in so far as applied to their own employees

Mr. JONES of Texas. Under the decree they can sell by their peddler or route car service, and they can go into any community in the United States and deliver meat under that decree without any question at all,

Mr. TINCHER. Oh, well, but did not the language of the decree, as the Attorney General says, divorce them from the retail trade? The decree says that.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The decree forbids them engaging in the retail meat business in various localities, but it does not forbid them in any way from continuing the practice of delivering their meat at various places in the United States through their route-car service, or their peddler-car service. Without this decree they were putting every known perishable product unrelated to anything in the packing industry in these cars and getting special service.

Mr. TINCHER. I am talking about unrelated products; I am not talking about meat products. Is the gentleman in favor of preventing the packers from retailing their own products?

Mr. JONES of Texas. There is no such question involved here. However, I will say that there are strong arguments in favor of such retailing. That question can be settled when it

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me, to ask a question?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will.

Mr. MANN. Is there anything in this bill which affects or nullifies in any way the decree?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Well, I do not think so. Mr. MANN. There is a great deal of discussion of the merits of the consent decree.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I did not even intend to discuss the bill, but when gentlemen on the gentleman's own side of the House raised the question I thought their charges should be replied to.

Mr. MANN. I have examined the bill as carefully as I knew. how in the limited time, and I do not see how it made any difference at all as to the consent decree; whether it will ever add any additional legislation is an entirely different matter.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I wish to say to the gentleman I think he is right, but there seems to be a division of opinion.

Mr. KINCHELOE. On the other hand, was not the intention, and the unanimous intention, of the committee not to put anything in this bill that would interfere with it?

Mr. JONES of Texas. At least that was the intention of the majority, and that specific proposition was voted on, and it was intended the bill should not affect it in any possible way.

Mr. RAYBURN. And did not this matter come into the discussion practically wholly on the attack of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Tincher] on the Attorney General?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Absolutely. He made an attack on the Attorney General for going into this decree. He did not believe in any decrees at all and believed that they ought to be abolished, and went further, and said that the practical application of the law would cancel the decree. If there is anything in this bill that will do that, I have not been able to grasp it.

Mr. ASWELL. Was there not a unanimous agreement in the committee that the bill would not affect the decree?

Mr. JONES of Texas. That was the unanimous opinion of the result of the bill. There were some who thought that the decree ought to be repealed.

Mr. ASWELL. The gentleman will remember that it came up in the committee and all consideration of the decree was voted out.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER] to say yesterday himself, while he was discussing the consent decree, that it was not affected by this bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I just read that from the statement. Mr. MANN. And I asked him the question myself after he made that statement, and he said it did not affect the decree.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Then his statement conflicts with his speech. I think it is very important, and I think it is a very wise decree, especially at the time it was entered, and I think it ought to be permitted to remain, perhaps with certain modifications, and I think there ought not to be any question about it. I think it ought to be so clear that no man could question the matter.

I do not believe any legislation should be passed that would destroy the efficiency of the packers. They are an American institution, and I believe it is the most efficient business organization on this or any other continent. I believe the interest of the producer and the consumer will be furthered by main-taining that business organization, but there are now certain practices which they have engaged in that I think ought to be done away with. I know they have practiced this, for instance:

The market at Kansas City would be reported at $8 per hundred. The men down in my section of the country and the section of the country of my colleagues from Texas, and other parts of the United States, would ship into Kansas City and find the market congested, and that they could get only $6.25 for their cattle. Some of them would get a notion that they would not sell at Kansas City, and would undertake to ship to St. Louis and Chicago, but when they get there they find that the commission men and buyers have been notified of the price that had been bid on the cattle and no one would bid over the original price. Therefore they forced the men to sell in the original congested market.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. JACOWAY. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman. Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman from Kansas yesterday stated that he was opposed to that portion of the decree which we already know did divorce the packing companies from the retail business, such as groceries and fruits. If they had been permitted to continue to deal in everything from a knitting needle to a sewing machine, as they did before, what would have been the result? Would it not have put the retail men out of the business?

Mr. JONES of Texas. In the course of time any man who had anything to do with the food business would be working for one concern, and if that were extended to all other lines we would soon be a race of slaves.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And would not that then have given the packer the power to name the price?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Of course, when they could get to that point. That is the objection to monopoly in any line of industry, as in the Government. It gives a man the ability to abuse his power, and he certainly will do it. That experience is as old as history. The old interstate commerce act was passed to abolish rebates in railroad rates. If you are going to allow rebates in service, you are going to give the things that brought about the necessity for that kind of legislation.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. For a question.

Mr. TINCHER. Does the gentleman know that it has always been the position of the "gentleman from Kansas" that the monopoly the packers had on the meat business could be cured by law, but to say that they had a monopoly on that, and that we would stop it now by eliminating them from trading in certain articles, was not the proper way to approach the subject?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; that is true; and that is what we are trying to do by law, and what has been done by the decree. If the gentleman will abolish the decree, he will do opposite to what he intends to do. The gentleman from Kansas is usually right, but I think he is in error with reference to this decree.

I do not think this bill is an ideal one, but it is the best to be gotten under the circumstances. I think it would be wiser to enact a straight law condemning the abusive practice and pre-scribing penalties. I am not much impressed with the idea of bureaucratic regulation of business. The wiser way, it seems to me, would be to have a law that would specifically forbid the things that should not be done, and then follow these provisions with real penalties.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Voigt] 15 minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman, efforts have been made in Congress for many years for the enactment of legislation to regulate the meat-packing industry. Many hearings have been held, hundreds of witnesses have testified, and many thousand pages of testimony have been taken. Hearings were held by the Committees on Agriculture of the Senate and the House of Representatives in the Sixty-fifth, Sixty-sixth, and Sixty-seventh Congresses. While I have been a member of the Agricultural Committee of the House, hearings were held for about 40 days in 1920 and for a week in the early part of May, 1921. The committee took several thousand pages of testimony, and had the benefit of prior hearings and also the exhaustive report of the Federal Trade Commission.

While there is a large number of meat packers in this country doing an interstate business, it is understood that this legislation is aimed at the so-called Big Five packers—Swift & Co., Armour & Co., Morris & Co., Wilson & Co., and Cudahy Packing Co. There can be no question that these are concerns and their predecessors in interest for many years have had and now have as complete a monopoly of the meat-packing business as it is possible for a man or set of men to acquire or that they could wish for.

These packers claim that they only handle 40 per cent of the meat supply of the country. Literally, that may be true, because much live stock is slaughtered on the farms for home consumption, in small centers of population and by local butchers and packers, but the product of such slaughter does not in an appreciable degree come into competition with the products of the Big Five. The meat from an animal slaughtered on a farm or otherwise for local consumption comes into competition only very remotely with meat shipped by the packers into our large centers of population, and here is where they have a substantial monopoly. In order to determine the extent of their monopoly, we must ascertain what effective competition they meet, and that can best be done by ascertaining their proportion of the so-called interstate slaughter; that is, live stock, or products therefrom, shipped from one State to another. It appears from the report of the Federal Trade Commission that in 1916 the Big Five's percentage of the interstate slaughter was as

Cattle	82.
Calves	76.
	61.	4
Sheep and lambs	86.	4

These are 1916 figures. In view of the steady growth of the business of the Big Five it is reasonable to assume that at this date these figures should be raised from 5 to 10 per cent. I conclude, therefore, that at the present time the Big Five's percentage of the interstate slaughter is between 75 and 80 per When it is considered that in 1916 there was only one independent packer who slaughtered as much as 1 per cent of the interstate total cattle, and only nine independents who slaughtered as much as 1 per cent of the interstate total of hogs, the monopoly of the Big Five becomes very apparent.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, the proportions of interstate slaughter of the Big Five and all other interstate slaughterers were as follows:

	Cattle.	Calves.	Sheep.	Swine.
Big Five	5, 330, 155	1, 257, 872	6, 949, 087	18, 685, 294
	1, 786, 120	737, 615	2, 753, 458	16, 427, 783

Nine years later, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, we have, as compared to the above, the following figures:

	Cattle.	Calves.	Sheep.	Swine.
Big FiveAll others	7,515,971	1, 971, 232	9, 818, 801	24, 213, 754
	1,783,518	708, 513	1, 524, 617	15, 997, 093

Stated in percentages of interstate slaughter we notice in these nine years the growth of the Big Five:

	Cattle.	Calves.	Sheep.	Swine.
Year ending June 30, 1908 Year ending June 30, 1917All others, year ending June 30, 1917	74.9 80.8 19.2	63 73, 6 26, 4	71. 6 86. 6 13. 4	53. 2 60. 2 39. 8

That the Big Five slaughter a comparatively smaller number of swine is explained by the fact that the hog is better adapted for local slaughter; beef is largely sold fresh, requiring coldstorage facilities and refrigerator cars. A large proportion of the hog may be pickled or cured, and there is a less proportion of by-products from the hog than other live stock.

The concentration of the packing industry in certain centers is very marked. According to the report of the Federal Trade Commission, in the year 1916 in 12 cities of the country were slaughtered (interstate) 81 per cent of the cattle, 65.3 per cent of the calves, 78.5 per cent of the sheep and lambs, and 58 per cent of the swine. These centers are Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis, New York City, St. Joseph, Fort Worth, St. Paul, Sioux City, Oklahoma City, Denver, and Wichita. percentage of the interstate slaughter by the Big Five in the same year in the same centers is very remarkable, and is as follows: Cattle, 94.4 per cent; calves, 89.1 per cent; sheep, 94.3 per cent; swine, 81 per cent. This shows an almost complete monopoly in the large centers by the Big Five.

The financial development of the packers has been marvelous. Armour & Co. commenced business as a partnership in 1868 with an investment of $160,000. In 50 years the company earned $179,270,000, about $150,000,000 of which was retained in the business. Since organization about $14.000,000 new capital has gone into the business. In November, 1918.

the net worth of the business was $173,000,000. In 23 years since 1896 Swift & Co. earned $214,249,000. In 1914 the total net worth of the Big Five, according to their books, was $293,-000,000, while on November 2, 1918, it was $555,306,023.

The net profits of the Big Five in recent years have been computed by the Federal Trade Commission as follows, and the percentage earned on investment (capital stock and surplus) is also stated:

		Per cent.
1912	$18,035,000	8.1
1913	18, 581, 000	7.0
1914	22, 894, 000	8. 3
1915	37, 385, 000
1916	59, 236, 000
1917	95, 639, 000	26. 5

OTHER INTERESTS.

In recent years the packers have gone extensively into related and nonrelated lines of business. They handle a considerable proportion of the interstate trade in poultry, eggs, milk, butter, and cheese. It is said that they handle two-thirds of all cheese produced in Wisconsin.

They own large plants in South America and are interested in many foreign companies. They are heavily interested in plants producing cottonseed oil, used in the manufacture of oleomargarine. In 1916 Swift & Co. sold 50,000,000 pounds of butter; in 1917 Armour sold $17,000,000 worth of canned goods. The Armour Grain Co. operates over 90 country elevators, and in 1917 handled 75,000,000 bushels, or 25 per cent of all grain receipts at Chicago. The packers are very largely interested in tanneries, manufacture of fertilizers, and wool. They own in whole or in part substantially all of the leading stockyards of the country; they own over 90 per cent of all refrigerator and other cars owned by interstate slaughterers; they own or control over a thousand branch houses; they are interested in dozens of banks. Up to 1920, when the injunction was issued against them, hereafter referred to, they dealt to a large extent in fish and wholesale groceries. They are interested in hundreds of subsidiary corporations which in the eyes of the public appear to be competitors. The Federal Trade Commission finds the power of the Big Five in the United States has been and is being unfairly and illegally used to manipulate live-stock markets; restrict interstate and international supplies of foods; control the prices of dressed meats and other foods; defraud both the producers of food and consumers; crush effective competition; secure special privileges from railroads, stockyard companies, and municipalities; and profiteer.

REFRIGERATOR CARS.

The Big Five own about 90 per cent of all refrigerator cars properly equipped for shipment of fresh meat that are operated upon the railroads of the United States. The small independent packers confine themselves almost wholly to products which do not require refrigeration and to slaughter for near-by consumption. The use of these cars give the Big Five a tremendous advantage over competitors. These cars are really wholesale traveling stores. The Big Five can fill their cars with meats of all kinds, butter, eggs, poultry, and cheese, and before the injunc-tion of last year could fill them with fish, groceries, and whatever other articles they found advantageous. They can stop this car at any railroad station, supply the trade from it, and go to the next station. It is evident that no merchant who has not like facilities can compete with them. Suppose a merchant in a small town wants 50 pounds of cheese. Can any wholesale grocer or cheese merchant compete with the packers? of these cars has been a potent factor in building up the packer The packers have methods for expediting their cars, monopoly. and the statistics show that their refrigerator cars make more mileage per year than those owned by others.

I think it is fundamentally wrong to permit the packers or others to own refrigerator cars. These cars are a part of the transportation system of the country, which is impressed with a public use, and the facilities of that system should be open to the use of all alike on identical terms. The interstate commerce act was amended by Congress last year so as to give the Interstate Commerce Commission power to compel the railroads to acquire and furnish specially equipped cars, but the commission has not thus far seen fit to compel the railroads to acquire these refrigerator cars. If I had my way I should compel all packers to rid themselves of these cars within a reasonable period, and should compel the railroads to furnish them. It is said that the railroads do not care to own them, but there are a lot of other things they do not care to do but should be made to do in the public interest.

THE PACKER COMBINATION.

The one question which interested me mostly as a member of the committee and which I constantly kept in mind during the hearings is: Is there a combination among the Big Five? There are over 200 other packers in the United States, whose business on the average is as profitable as that of the Big Five, and many of whom have been in business as long or longer than Their business runs into the millions, but only one of them does as much as 1 per cent of the interstate beef business, and only nine as much as 1 per cent each of the interstate pork The questions occurred to me: Why in the many business. years past has not one of these small packers graduated into the class of the Big Five? Why do the Big Five occupy such an overshadowing position? What is the secret of their success?

The Big Five strenuously deny that there is any combination or understanding among them, but I am firmly convinced by the evidence that they have been in combination for many years, and are so at this hour. To my mind, letters and statistics found in the files of the Big Five by the Federal Trade Commission absolutely prove the combination. While, of course, tremendous plants, resources, ownership of refrigerator cars, cold-storage plants, branch houses, and practically unlimited use of banking credit are used as instruments to effectuate the combination and monopoly of the Big Five, these things alone would not in the long run prevent other packers from approaching them in importance. It is inconceivable that in the course of many years 200 other packing plants should not have produced at least some business men equal in ability and enterprise to those who have managed the Big Five. While the Big Five have from time to time had various agreements, and resorted to various devices to bring about and maintain their dominating position, the foundation which supported all the others was an agreement for a division of purchases in the various stockyards of the country on a percentage basis at approximately the same prices, and that is the precise agreement which exists among them at this time. I have already shown what a very high percentage of the interstate slaughter is controlled by the Big Five in the 12 leading stockyard cen-

It is impossible for the many small packers to create effective competition against the Big Five in making their purchases. Men who buy 10 per cent of a commodity can not very well put up the price on those who buy the 90 per cent. Now, then, here is what actually takes place: The small packers go into the stockyards and buy their requirements. Let us say that in 12 leading centers they take 10 or 15 per cent. Now, the Big Five come in and take their share of the balance according to a given percentage. Can there be effective competition, so that real value under the law of supply and demand will be reflected? Of course not. None of the Big Five needs to offer more than the others, because he knows in advance that he will get his share. Under this form of agreement it is not necessary to regulate selling, because each can only sell what he has bought. Many shippers of cattle have testified before the committee in perfect good faith that there is competition among the Big Five in purchasing live stock, because they say they have witnessed that one of them will offer a given price, and when refused another will offer 10 or 15 cents a hundred more, and so forth. All such transactions make a show of competition, but under the agreement for the division of purchases there can be no real competition.

Before presenting what I consider proof of the present principal arrangement among the Big Five, I desire to review very briefly the arrangements which have existed among them in the

In 1890 a committee of the United States Senate after two years of investigation reported that there was an agreement among the then leading packers—Armour & Co., Swift & Co., Morris & Co., and Hammond & Co.—to refrain from competi-The committee found collusion in regard to fixing of prices and a division of territory and business.

In 1890 the Sherman antitrust law was passed. In 1912 Henry Veeder, attorney and confidential man for the packers, testified under oath that they met every Tuesday afternoon, and that at the meetings he acted as secretary and statistician. At these meetings territory and business were apportioned, and penalties were levied on any who exceeded their allotment. These socalled pooling arrangements existed in various forms from 1893 to 1902.

In May, 1902, the Department of Justice proceeded against the packers under the Sherman law, which resulted in a permanent injunction affirmed by the United States Supreme Court on May 26, 1903. The injunction restrained them from refraining from bidding against each other for live stock, from combining or conspiring to raise or lower prices, fixing uniform prices, curtailing shipments, and so forth.

Thereupon Armour, Swift, and Morris bought up some of their competitors with the object of creating a grand merger, but the merger fell through on account of financial difficulties. Then they transferred the properties they had bought to a new corporation, the National Packing Co., and owned all the stock. The board of directors of this company met every Tuesday afternoon-same day and hour as when Veeder was secretary. Of course, it was an easy matter at these meetings not only to regulate the business of the National Packing Co. but the businesses of the larger concerns as well.

In 1911 some of the big packers were prosecuted criminally, and after a trial lasting several months were found not guilty by a jury; but threat of a civil suit resulted in the dissolution of the National Packing Co. in 1912, and the assets were distributed to the three packers mentioned. Sulzberger-now Wilson—and Cudahy were not directly interested in the National Packing Co., but were interested in the pools managed by Veeder.

On July 30, 1913, the Big Five agreed upon the "usual per-Here is a highly significant letter from Henry centages." Veeder to W. B. Traynor, assistant to L. F. Swift:

AUGUST 23, 1916.

Mr. W. B. TRAYNOR, Care of Swift & Co., Chicago.

DEAR SIR: You asked me the other day for certain percentages which are generally known as the usual percentages. On July 30, 1913, L. F. S. [Swift], A. M. [Arthur Meeker, representing Armour], and T. E. W. [Wilson] agreed with C. [Cudahy] and S. & S. [Sulzberger] upon the following percentages to cover general legislative and litigation matters:

S. & S. [now Wilson]	100	100	100
S. [Swift]	35. 751 29. 266 14, 983	39, 723 32, 518 16, 648 11, 111	44. 689 36. 582 18. 729

Of course, C. and S. were arbitrary. The A. [Armour], F. [a letter standing for Morris], and H. [standing for Swift] figures are the so-called old beef figures, which were based upon the volume of beef business in 1902.

Sincerely, yours,

The last column represents the actual percentage relation existing among the first three named in beef purchased in 1902. When the new arrangement was made on July 30, 1913, Cudahy and Wilson were each arbitrarily given 10 per cent, which probably corresponded pretty closely to their actual percentage, and the percentages of the first three were correspondingly reduced.

While Veeder's letter says these proportions govern legisla-tive and litigation matters, these figures control the business of the Big Five as among themselves, as their purchases will show. Furthermore, the fact that they were willing in 1916 to apportion large sums of money for joint expenses on the basis of business of 1902 and 1913 shows that each knew that his business was and would be in accordance with these figures.

In the personal office of E. F. Swift the Federal Trade Commission found a much-used memorandum reading as follows:

	45,000.
A S S S Cudahy	29, 26 35, 75 14, 98 10, 00 10, 00	35. 68 44. 69 18. 73
	100, 00	100.00

The words "100 per cent live buyers" show that the Big Five were not only dividing on the above basis on legal expenses but also in buying live stock.

Now, let us see how it works in practice. At page 243, volume 2, of the Federal Trade Commission's report, we find a table which gives the total purchases of cattle of the Big Five in the principal markets of the country for 1916. The table gives the purchases week by week, and then gives the percent-The table age of the total purchased by each of the Big Five. This table shows that the purchases are substantially on the basis of the above figures. It is worthy of note that no matter what quantity of cattle are purchased in a given week the percentage that each takes remains substantially the same. I can not quote the whole table, but here are figures for some weeks taken from it:

Week ending—	Total head.	Swift.	Armour.	Morris.	Wilson.	Cudahy.
Jan. 8	105, 281	34.73	28, 07	17. 54	10.67	8.99
	62, 006	34.56	27, 61	17. 68	11.84	8.31
	137, 891	34.61	27, 57	18. 28	11.03	8.51
	190, 686	37.76	25, 95	18. 53	9.62	10.14

It will be seen that the percentage remains fairly constant, whether they collectively buy 62,000 head or 190,000 head. These figures vary somewhat from the "usual percentages," but the above are only the percentages on cattle. On the next pages we find similar figures for 1916 purchases of hogs and sheep, and we find percentages which tend to equalize the above, so as to bring the average closer to the "usual percentages." The percentages for the whole of the year 1916 on cattle, hogs, and sheep are as follows for principal markets:

The State of	Swift.	Armour.	Morris.	Wilson.	Cudahy.
Cattle	34, 58	27. 05	17. 86	10.94	9.57
	36, 04	31. 57	13. 33	8.44	10.62
	38, 93	27. 83	12. 32	10.11	10.81

The Federal Trade Commission has compiled all of the livestock purchases of the Big Five for the years 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, and 1917, and it found that during the whole five years the largest variation from the "usual percentages" was 1,341 per cent by Swift & Co. in 1913. I say that such absolute uniformity in purchases on a percentage basis over a period of years is humanly impossible without preconcerted arrangement.

I now quote a few letters taken from the files of the Big Five which bear out the contention that they are in combination.

Mr. ALDEN B. SWIFT.

Swift & Co., South Street, St. Joseph, Mo.

Dean Sin: Will be glad to have you advise me if you think our cattle buyer at St. Joseph is all right and is doing as well as Mr. Stemm did; also if you notice any difference in Morris's cattle buying. * * * Yours, respectfully, Louis F. Swift.

Louis F. Swift.

· P. S.—Has our new plan of not insisting on dividing all the small bunches of cattle given any snap to the market?

It is to be inferred from the postscript to this letter that previously the Big Five buying at St. Joseph even insisted upon dividing up among themselves small shipments of cattle. This, of course, would arouse the suspicion of the seller. Then a "new plan of not insisting on dividing all the small bunches" was hit upon, for no other purpose than to give the appearance of actual competition in that market.

Here is a copy of a letter written October 19, 1916, from P. D. Armour to J. O. Armour from Denver, omitting immaterial parts:

* * I can not tell you how surprised I was in going over the plant here. Of all the plants we have, this one certainly needs our first attention. In my opinion, the best part of it is as bad as the worst part of any of our other plants. Swift's plant, from what I hear and from the little I saw of it, is far ahead or ours both as to the size and condition. Of course, as you know, everything here is done on a 50-50 basis, and with the facilities we have it is almost impossible to keep up this ratio * * *.

The others of the Big Five had no plants at Denver. In the absence of any agreement, according to the above letter, it is reasonable to assume that Swift would have done considerably more business at Denver, but the average for the year was Swift, 50.73; Armour, 49.27.

G. F. Sulzberger (succeeded by Wilson) kept private memoranda of his dealings with other members of the Big Five. In his book, among many others, we find the following entry, in which I substitute the real names for initials:

Meeting held with Armour at his office January 29, 1913, 3.15 p. m. Armour seemed very discouraged with the general situation * * *. I explained that was due * * * to his own foolish tactics in New York * * . I explained to I rim that he was injuring us more than anyone else there, as we had larger proportionate interests. * * * He said he had no intent to work against us and said that he would arrange now to do the following: Reduce New York 10 per cent this week, 10 per cent next week.

Sulzberger's memoranda, covering many printed pages, relate wholly to meetings with others of the Big Five and arrangements relative to their business.

The representatives of the Big Five before our committee claim that none of the evidence I have recited is proof of any combination among them, but that it merely shows what each was doing and expected to do, and so forth. Furthermore, the Big Five regularly make reports to each other of volume of purchases. I am satisfied that it is done for the purpose of holding each to the "usual percentages." I interrogated Mr. Weld, economic expert for Swift & Co., about this, and here is how he explains it:

Mr. Voigt. Do the five large packers furnish to each other information from day to day, week to week, or month to month as to the amount of live stock purchased by each?

Mr. Weld. We do not have to. It is public property in the stock-yards and is published in the papers.

Mr. Voigt. I did not ask if you had to; I asked whether there is an interchange of information.

Mr. Weld. I think there is in some markets. How about that, Mr. Chaplin?

Mr. Weld. I think there is in some markets. How about that, Mr. Chaplin?
Mr. Chaplin. Yes; there is.
Mr. Voigt. That is, you furnish information to each other?
Mr. Chaplin. Yes, sir.
Mr. Voigt. What is the purpose of that?
Mr. Chaplin. It is easier to get it that way than to go out and collect it yourself.

Mr. Voigt. In your line of business it is considered good business for one competitor to make it as easy as possible for the others to get information about the business as a whole?

Mr. Weld. I think it would do no harm to assent to that. There are other businesses where the competitors find it worth while to have a regular organized association where they obtain information that is much more vital than the quantity of purchases.

Mr. Voigt. Can you give us any line of business in which a man is willing and anxious to give information about the amount of his purchases or sales to a competitor?

Mr. Weld. I could obtain for you a list of "open-price" associations, where competitors furnish to each other, through their associations, not only the volume of business that they do but their cost of production and the prices at which they sold goods during the previous week or previous months, where they go much further than we ever have or thought of going in the packing industry. It has been a well-known development within the past seven or eight years—these open-price associations; "cooperative competition" it is often called.

Mr. Voigt. Let me ask you this question: Do you know of any man or any corporation in this country which conducts a sawmill—

Mr. Weld (interposing). No, sir.

Mr. Voigt (continuing). Which would volunteer information as to the amount of timber it buys or lumber that it turns out to a competitor?

Mr. Weld. No, sir. But I would not be at all surprised to find that the amount of timber it buys or lumber that it turns out to a connection?

Mr. Weld. No, sir. But I would not be at all surprised to find that that is done through some of the big lumber associations. I do not know that it is, but say I should not be at all surprised that it is.

Mr. Voigt. Well, if it were done it would be done for some unlawful purpose—to create a monopoly—would it not?

Mr. Weld. Not necessarily; no.

Mr. Voigt. As a general rule you think that men engaged in the same line of business will furnish information to each other as to the volume of business?

Mr. Weld. I think it is coming to be more and more common for such to be done. I realize there is an important point involved there, and there has been a good deal of discussion during the last few years of these open-price associations which are doing that very thing, and which I say is going much further than is done in the packing business.

The Injunction of 1920.

THE INJUNCTION OF 1920.

After the Federal Trade investigation, and after an investigation by Attorney General Palmer, who stated to the committee that he was satisfied the Big Five had violated the antitrust law, and while packer legislation was being considered by both branches of Congress, and a grand jury investigation was on in Chicago, the Big Five went to the Attorney General, and as a result of their negotiations with him an injunction was entered against them in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. The Big Five claim they consented to this because they wanted to satisfy public sentiment; Mr. Palmer stated that it was a surrender to the Department of Justice. The whole legal proceedings were started and finished in the court in one day—February 27, 1920. The Attorney General filed a bill in equity against the Big Five and a large number of their affiliated companies, charging them with various violations of the Sherman law, the defendant denied the charges, and then the Attorney General and the defendants signed a stipulation that an injunction, which they had agreed upon in advance, might be entered by the court.

The stipulation on the part of the defendants says that "while asserting their innocence of any violation of law in fact or intent, nevertheless, desiring to avoid every appearance of placing themselves in a position of antagonism to the Government, consent to the making and entry of said decree; but this stipulation shall not constitute or be considered as an admission, and the rendition or entry of the decree, or the decree itself, shall not constitute or be considered as an adjudication that the defendants, or any of them, have in fact violated any law of the United States." In other words, they say they are not guilty, but plead guilty because they do not like to appear antagonistic to the Government. It is the first case I ever heard of where a party confessed guilt because he was afraid he might hurt the feelings of the Government if he did not.

This decree restrains the Big Five and their affiliated companies from conspiring in restraint of trade; commands them to rid themselves of stockyards, stockyard terminal railroads, and market newspapers in such time as the court may find reasonable; from dealing in fish or wholesale groceries, and from using or permitting others to use their branch houses, refrigerator cars, and auto trucks to handle such commodities, and prohibits them from owning stock in any corporation handling fish or wholesale groceries, but it does permit the individuals owning stock in the Big Five corporations to be interested to the amount of 50 per cent in any fish or wholesale grocery business. Relatives are not prohibited from owning stock in addition. The Big Five are also restrained from conducting the retail meat busi-

I differ with my friend from Texas [Mr. Jones]. the decree should be wiped out, and I do not care whether it is wiped out by act of Congress or by application of the Attorney General. I am satisfied that the decree is wrong in principle. I do not believe that it is right that we should pass a bill here and put the supervision over the packers in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, and then also in part regulate them by a decree of court. It is my humble opinion as a lawyer that the decree is not worth the paper it is written on; that it is void in law.

I wish to state my reasons for thinking that. The decree provides that the packers shall not engage in certain lines, commonly called the wholesale grocery lines; that they shall not deal in fish; that they shall not sell at retail and shall not permit others to use their facilities for handling these unrelated lines.

You will see, gentlemen, that this is a big concession made by the court, at the instigation of the Attorney General, to the wholesale grocers of this country. That is what it amounts to. The wholesale grocers get rid of the competition of the packers. There is no authority in law for a court to make that sort of a decree.

The Attorney General claimed before our committee last year that practically anything could be done by consent. Let us see about that. Suppose that the Attorney General files a bill against me and says that I am doing something that in his opinion is not right and he wants to restrain me, but there is no law which forbids me from doing that particular thing. I go into court and consent that the decree may be entered, and the court enters a decree prohibiting me from doing some particular thing. Now, there is not a syllable of law anywhere, or any principle of equity, which gives the court the power to enter that decree, and consequently the court has no jurisdiction of the subject matter of that decree. I say the decree against the packers is void and can be attacked by the packers themselves whenever an attempt is made to enforce it against them.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Where a court has jurisdiction of the parties and also jurisdiction of the subject matter of the suit. as disclosed in the proceedings, and the parties enter into an agreed judgment, then has it not been held that thereafter the parties are thereby estopped from denying that there proper jurisdiction of the question?

Mr. VOIGT. There is no question about that. court has jurisdiction of the subject matter and of the parties, they may consent to any form of judgment. But the point I am trying to make is this, that the court has no jurisdiction of the subject matter. If a court which has only civil jurisdiction should attempt to sentence a man for crime, of course the gentleman will agree that the sentence would be worthless.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.
Mr. ANDERSON. In this decree itself it is recited, and the stipulation recites, that there was no violation of law by the defendants

Mr. VOIGT. The stipulation or the consent filed by the five packers was to the effect that they agreed to the entry of the decree, but they denied they had violated any law, and they denied they were guilty of any of the charges contained in the Attorney General's bill of complaint. That is, they were practically in the position of a man who is indicted and who comes into court and says, "I am not guilty, but I do not object to the court passing sentence upon me."

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman will concede that if the allegation of the petition is well founded, to the effect that they were engaged in the sale of other products intended to create a monopoly, and under that allegation the court would restrain them from that course, would not that action of the court be justified when there was a law forbidding monopoly?

Mr. VOIGT. I think the court could, under the antitrust law, enjoin the packers from conspiring; that is, the court could enjoin so far as it was authorized to do so by the antitrust law. But the court did not do that. The court prohibited these parties from pursuing a certain line of business. Suppose the Attorney General should file a bill against me and claim that it was not in the public interest that I practice law or be a Member of Congress, and I should consent to it and the court enters the decree. I think every lawyer will agree that the decree is worthless, because there is no provision of law which warrants the court in entering the decree. There is no law which provides that a court can enjoin anybody from going into the retail meat business.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not the gentleman concede that if a corporation is organized for a specific purpose it can be prohibited from going into other lines from those granted by the charter? Can not the Government control the field in which that organization shall be engaged?

Mr. VOIGT. That is not the question that was involved in the decree

Mr. JONES of Texas. Why would not that apply to this other question?

Mr. VOIGT. If Congress had passed a law giving the court the power to restrain these parties to the extent it did, of course the judgment would be valid, and of course a State has the right to put a limitation of power upon a corporation as to what business it should engage in.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman if this suggestion comes within his contention. Does the gentleman contend that if the packers and wholesale grocers had gotten together and made an agreement by which the packers were not to engage in the wholesale grocery business, and not to engage in the retail meat business, and the grocers, on the other hand, had made certain agreements that under the antitrust law that would be unlawful?

Mr. VOIGT. Absolutely.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Now, then, it being admitted that it is unlawful to do that, does the gentleman contend that the court could not by a decree prevent the commission of an act that would be unlawful under the law?

Mr. VOIGT. The court could not restrain the packers or anybody else from going into a certain line of business unless there was some statute or authority of law which justified the court in making the judgment.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course just engaging in the meat business is not in itself a violation of the law, but the gentleman can understand that there might be a combination which, connected with some other act, would constitute restraint of trade and be a violation of the law. The court had jurisdiction of the parties; it had jurisdiction of the subject matter, as disclosed in the pleading of the Attorney General. The parties came in, and by consent entered into agreement, which, in effect, carried out the allegations of the Attorney General's petition. Does the gentleman claim that that judgment is void?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes. The gentleman's statement is all right, but there is lacking one element which he assumes-jurisdiction of the subject matter-and there is no law on the statute books of the United States which authorizes a court, for instance, to restrain anyone from being in the retail meat business.

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. TINCHER. At the time of the hearing, when the Attorney General appeared before the committee to protest against our passing any legislation, saying that his decree would cure all the evils, I notice that I asked him this question, with reference to the retail trade:

Mr. Tincher. It is not covered by the Sherman antitrust law, and there really was not any law against that until this decree was entered, was there; no Federal statute that could be construed to reach that?

Attorney General Palmer. No; I do not think we could have sustained an adverse proceeding in court prior to the injunction restraining their going into the retail meat business.

And that decree had the effect or was intended to make law instead of to enforce law that was in effect.

Mr. VOIGT. The claim of the Attorney General before our committee was this: He admitted there was no law under which the court could have pronounced this injunction against the That is, if he had gone in and filed his complaint and the packers had come in with a denial, and he had substantiated the complaint by proof, Mr. Palmer said that the court had no jurisdiction to enter that judgment. But he said it was his opinion that the parties could enter that judgment by consent,

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Have the packers ever undertaken to attack the validity of this decree?
Mr. VOIGT. They have not.

Mr. BRIGGS. Have they ever taken an appeal from the decree?

They have not.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does the gentleman think the packers were sincere in giving their consent to the entry of the decree?

Mr. VOIGT. I can not answer for the packers on that question.

Mr. BRIGGS. Have they been living up to the decree since, or any part of it?

Mr. VOIGT. So far as I know, they have.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does not the gentleman think that the packers regarded this question certainly as being within the realm of controversy, and that, having entered into the agreement, and the court having jurisdiction of the subject matter, which was the charge of conspiracy in violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act and other acts governing restraint of trade, and the court having jurisdiction of the parties, does not the gentleman think that the packers by their very action admitted that the court had jurisdiction both of the parties and the subject matter and did have a right to enter the decree?

Mr. VOIGT. The packers, of course, claim that the court had jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOIGT. May I have 10 minutes more? Mr. HAUGEN. I yield 10 minutes more

I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. VOIGT. I think it is fair to conclude that the packers consented to this decree for the purpose of preventing further proceedings. They went to the Attorney General and made this arrangement with him. It is fair to say that the packers proceeded to have this injunction granted against themselves for the purpose of staving off criminal or civil prosecution under the antitrust law, and I think for the purpose of forestalling action by Congress.

Mr. ASWELL. W Mr. VOIGT. Yes. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASWELL. Is it the opinion of the gentleman that, even though there was no law, this decree is effective and binding on the packers now?

Mr. VOIGT. I think not. I think the pac'ters can go into court any time they see fit and attack the validity of this decree.

Mr. TINCHER. I am informed by the gentleman from California that people who want the decree modified say that the packers are opposed to having it modified and are opposed to having any change made in the law that they and the Attorney General made in this way for the Government of the people of the United States.

Mr. VOIGT. I do not care anything about that. I think the decree is wrong in principle. I think that when a matter of great public policy is involved it is not the business of the court to make the law. If that decree is made the prevalent procedure, then what is there to prevent decrees to regulate various lines of industry?

Mr. KINCHELOE. There was no evidence before the committee that there were any packers who would object to the abrogation of the decree, was there? Mr. VOIGT. I do not recall any.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Then if there is not, let me ask the gentleman is not the Department of Justice the better judge of that than anybody else? And ought not the initiative to come from the Attorney General to abrogate and wipe out that

Mr. VOIGT. I do not care whether the decree is abrogated by act of Congress or by the Attorney General. I think the Attorney General ought to do it by applying to the court, but if he does not that would not change my mind as to the advisability of it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. I will.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. There seems to be an authority in that direction in the case of Lawrence Manufacturing Co. against the Janesville Cotton Mills, in the One hundred and thirty-eighth United States, page 552. One part of the syllabus is as follows:

When a decree in chancery is the result of the consent of the parties and not of the judgment of the court, the court may, if its aid in enforcing it is asked by a subsequent bill, refuse to be constrained by the consent decree to decree contrary to what it finds to be the right of the cause.

And then in the body of the opinion:

The prior decree was the consequence of the consent and not of the judgment of the court, and this being so, the court had the right to decline to treat it as res adjudicata.

Mr. VOIGT. That is good law.
Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON.

Mr. VOIGT. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman does not mean to say that the decree is the law of the land. It is nothing but a private contract.

Mr. VOIGT. The decree is an absolute nullity.

Mr. BLANTON. It does not control any packer except the Big Five ones.

Mr. VOIGT. And that is another objection to the decree. If you are going to regulate the packing industry, why should you apply one rule to 5 and another rule to 200 or 300 others?

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. For a question.

Mr. DUNBAR. What proportion of the meat sold in the United States is furnished by the packers?

Mr. VOIGT. The question is not how much is sold, when you come to regulate the packers. It is a question of what proportion of meat handled in interstate commerce is handled by the packers. If a man on a farm in North Dakota slaughters a hog for family use that hog does not get into competition with meat sold by the packers in Washington; so that it is a question of how much real competition there is against the Big Five. When you consider that, you have to find out how much of the interstate traffic they control.

Mr. STEVENSON. Suppose that the man that slaughters a hog in North Dakota sells it in the town in the market in competition with other meat.

Mr. VOIGT. Then he would come a little closer to real competition, but the question is, How much competition is there against the Big Five in the large centers of population? If the man sold the hog in a town where the packers were selling meat, then there would be real competition.

Mr. DUNBAR. How much of the interstate-commerce business do the packers control?

Mr. VOIGT. According to the report of the Federal Trade Commission, in the year 1916 the Big Five had the following percentages of the so-called interstate slaughter: Cattle, 82.2; calves, 76.6; hogs, 61.2; sheep and lambs, 86.4. As nearly as I can get at it, the Big Five to-day control close to 80 per cent of the interstate slaughter.

Mr. DUNBAR. While it may be true that the packers control 80 per cent of the interstate commerce, may it not also be true that the States have their own local butchers who will slaughter a great many more cattle and sell to the citizens of their States, and that after all the amount of business done in the meat industry by the packers is a very small per cent of the transactions in that State?

VOIGT. I think the figures show that the Big Five slaughter 40 per cent of all animals slaughtered for food in the United States.

Mr. ANDERSON. Fifty-five per cent.

Mr. VOIGT. Their claim is that they only slaughter 40 per cent; but, as I say, that is not the real question when you want to get at the power exercised by the Big Five. They now have as complete a monopoly as it is possible to get, and that is the explanation of the fact that they have gone into the so-called unrelated lines. They had to find other fields to conquer.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOIGT. Yes

Mr. DUNBAR. If this bill becomes a law, who would be the greatest beneficiaries, the raisers of the cattle or the purchasers of the slaughtered animals?

I can not answer who would be the greatest beneficiary. I think if this monopoly of the Big Five is done away with, and the laws of trade are given a chance to function, it is going to benefit producer and consumer alike; genuine competition will benefit both.

Mr. DUNBAR. I think the investigation disclosed the fact that the profits of the packers were less than 2 per cent on their turnover sales. Could an independent small concern slaughtering $200,000 worth of animals a year pay a better price for beef or sell for less?

Mr. VOIGT. I would say to the gentleman that the figures of the Big Five as to so much per pound are good for nothing; they are deceptive. When you want to get at a man's profits, you want to look at his balance sheet at the end of the year, and the fact is that during the war these large packers made very large profits.

WHAT THE BILL PROPOSES.

The bill now reported gives the Secretary of Agriculture supervisory and regulatory powers over all packers who do an interstate-commerce business, and that, of course, means practically all packers in the country; and the same powers over stockyards, commission men, traders, buyers, and sellers in the stockyards. He has power to inquire into practices and management; he can require reports under oath whenever he thinks necessary and subpœna witnesses and conduct hearings. He can inquire into and publish facts concerning supply, demand, costs, and prices. He can prescribe uniform bookkeeping, and by order he can prevent unfair, discriminatory, or deceptive practices

The bill is sufficiently broad so that, if vigorously administered, the Secretary can prevent combination among packers and can compel them and all others connected with the industry to do business in a lawful and proper way. If any packer is dissatisfied with an order made by the Secretary, he may have the order reviewed by a circuit court of appeals and also the United States Supreme Court. Violation of an order is made a criminal offense. The Secretary may regulate the charges at stockyards and of commission men, and is given power to adjust disputes arising between shipper and buyer, and so forth. Certain powers of the Federal Trade Commission are transferred to the Secretary so far as they apply to packers.

While I have every confidence in the Secretary of Agriculture, personally I should prefer to have the administration of this act intrusted to a separate commission or the Federal Trade Commission. The subject is so tremendously big that I believe a separate commission ought to be charged with the responsibility of carrying out the purpose of the bill. However, I am going to support this bill because, in my judgment, it is the best that can be obtained at this time.

The first duty of the Secretary when and if the bill becomes a law-and prospects are very good that it will-will be to break up the combination of the Big Five. With the powers given under this bill to make regulatory orders, it can be done. For instance, an order to prevent exchange of information as to purchases and selling prices will help some.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

The Big Five have spent millions of dollars in an effort to offset and discredit the report of this commission, and in a measure they have succeeded. I want to compliment the commission on the able and fearless manner in which they made their report. It is on the whole the most accurate and comprehensive report ever made on a great industry. It may be that here and there a minor error has crept in; that is to be expected in a 6-volume report, but the fact is that the packers have been unable to disprove the substantial, vital findings of the commission.

If this commission had rendered no other service to the American people than to make this report, the expense of maintaining it would be amply justified. There is talk in certain quarters of abrogating the powers of this commission-they have committed the great crime of making a real report—but I for one shall be opposed to this.

In conclusion I want to say I am not particularly concerned over the fact that these packers make large profits. If they are good business men and manage their businesses properly, I want them to have a profit, but I want them to do business on the square. I want them so regulated that they are going to do business on the same basis that every other man in the same industry does.

There is nothing in this bill that any honest packer can object to. Their practices have not been in accordance with law, and the Secretary under this bill is given power to make rules that will make them do business on the level. [Applause.]

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Parrish].

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, the railroad problem is still an important question before the American people. There are certain amendments and corrections that ought to be made to the transportation act. Rates must be reduced, because they are higher now than the traffic will stand, and the agricultural interests of the Nation are seriously and vitally handicapped. There is no doubt in my mind but that a lower rate would produce as much or more revenue than is now being earned under the present high schedule of rates. The fate of many American industries depends upon efficient and economic transportation facilities. It is a question of life and death to many industries, especially agriculture. Secretary Hoover has said "that unless railroad rates can be readjusted we shall have to rewrite the whole agricultural geography of the United States." He could have said with equal truth that unless rates were reduced the obituary of many American industries will have to be written and the story of bankruptcy will be a common theme for those who write the last chapter in the history of such unfortunate industries.

When the Esch Transportation Act was before Congress for consideration in November, 1919, it contained a number of features to which I strongly objected. I voted against the bill then, because I felt that the roads were going to be returned to their owners on January 1, 1920, and we would be through with Government control whether any railroad legislation was passed The President had previously given out an order to or not. that effect, and had already called upon the railroad managers to arrange to take charge of their respective properties in conjunction with the Director General of Railroads on the 1st day of December, 1919, so that they would be in a position to assume full charge and control by the 1st of January following. In view of these facts, it certainly did not appear that the question of continued Government control was an issue, either directly or indirectly, involved in the passage of the transporta-

At that time, while discussing before Congress some of my objections to the bill when it was first considered, I stated my position very clearly in these words:

I want to preface what I shall say by stating that I am opposed to Government control and ownership of railroads and am strictly in favor of the speedy return of the railroads to their owners, and if that were the issue in the consideration of this bill I would be willing to sacrifice the public interests very greatly in order to insure the speedy termination of Government control. (See p. 8538 of the Congressional Record, 1st sess. of the 66th Cong.)

However, when the conference report on the Esch-Cummins Act was presented to the House in the latter part of February, 1920, quite a different state of facts existed with reference to the probability of continued Government control. The transportation act having failed to become a law by the 1st of January, 1920, the President had postponed the date that the Government would relinquish control of the railroads until March 1, 1920. A continuation of Government control for a number of years not only appeared probable but it was imminent, unless some constructive legislation should be passed.

At least two very influential persons in very high station and who were in close touch with the President had come out in public statements strongly urging the continuation of Gov-ernment control for a period of five years. Many other facts and circumstances were pointing to a continuation of the experiences that the country had been bearing for more than two years under Government operation and control, and when the conference report was presented it appeared to me that the passage of the transportation act was absolutely necessary if we were to expect any relief from the distressing conditions which the public had experienced during the period of Government control. In this view of the matter I felt that Government control was at least indirectly an issue, and voted for the conference report, notwithstanding the objections I had to certain features of the bill. I voted to end Government control and to insure, if possible, that we would be given a transportation system that would move the commerce and freight of the Nation speedily and effectively and hasten in the restoration of the country to normal conditions.

The chief objection that I found to the bill was contained in section 415 of the original bill (416 in the law). The part that I objected to most strenuously provided, in plain words, for the emasculation of the railroad commissions of the several States, stripped them of their power to function even in the matter of regulating intrastate rates, and of exercising jurisdiction over purely intrastate transportation problems. To be specific, the last part of paragraph 4 of section 415, page 63, of the original bill contained these words:

and such findings or orders shall be observed while in effect by the carriers parties to such proceedings affected thereby, the law of any State or the decision or order of any State authority to the contrary notwithstanding.

These words when given their legal effect took from the various State railroad commissions their power and authority over the regulation of even intra-state rates. The paragraph as a whole broadened the effect of the Shreveport rate case and then read it into the law of the land.

At this point, in order that my position might be clearly understood, I wish to quote specifically from the Record, showing just what took place at that time, and in that connection I made use of the full argument and offered the amendment set out therein:

of the full argument and offered the amendment set out therein:

Section 415 of the bill (416 in the law) seeks not only to put into effect but to broaden the decision in the Shreveport rate case and gives to the Interstate Commerce Commission power and authority to strike down every rate that the railroad commissions of the several States may make. To be specific, it seems to me that it is violative of Article IV of the Constitution and allows the Interstate Commerce Commission, a purely administrative branch of the Government, full authority to overlide the laws of any State or the decisions or orders of any State authority and to sweep them aside. I have offered an amendment to this section, wherein I seek to strike out all of the paragraph after the word "unlawful," on page 63, in line 16, and to have inserted the following: "Provided, however, That full faith and credit shall be given all rates, laws, and regulations made by any State or its agencies or under its authority, and the findings of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have the effect only of authorizing the complaining party to institute suit in the proper court for the annulment of any such State rate, laws, or regulations under the general law."

If you will adopt the amendment I offer it will have the effect to save the State railroad commissions some authority at least in the matter of making rates, especially as to intrastate shipments.

The fight against this very objectionable provision of the

The fight against this very objectionable provision of the law was so stubborn and grew so intense that when Mr. Sweet offered an amendment, shown on page 8529 of the RECORD, which covered only partially the purposes of the amendment I had offered, we were able to muster enough strength to force its passage over the most stubborn objection of the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill. The Sweet amendment was to paragraph 16, on page 50, of the original bill, and read as follows:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall impair or affect the right of the State in the exercise of its police power to require just and reasonable freight and passenger service and the fair ex-change and distribution of equipment for intrastate business.

After the passage of the Sweet amendment I sent the following telegram to the Railroad Commission of Texas:

NOVEMBER 17, 1919.

RAILROAD COMMISSION OF TEXAS, Austin, Tex.:

After stubborn fight we succeeded in having the Sweet amendment, restoring to the State commission more power, adopted in the Committee of the Whole. We are fighting to save all we can for Texas. Glad to have you wire your further views.

LUCIAN W. PARRISH, M. C.

In reply to this telegram I received the following message:

Hon. Lucian W. Parrish,

Washington, D. C.:

Your wire date. We thank you for your fight to preserve as far as possible the full powers of State commissions, because by so doing you are rendering the greatest possible service to your State and Nation.

RAILROAD COMMISSION.

There were other objections which I made to the bill at the time and which appear in the RECORD. I shall not refer to all of them, but will refer to the objections I made to paragraphs 15 and 16 of section 402 of the act.

I moved to strike these two sections from the bill and made an argument on the floor of the House at that time in support of said motion, and in this connection I desire to call to the attention of the House the statement I made at the time in opposition to the sections, to wit:

tention of the House the statement I made at the time in opposition to the sections, to wit:

Again, paragraphs 15 and 16 of section 42, known as the car-service section, in effect, continues Government supervision and direction of the cars and traffic generally even under private ownership and control. In other words, these paragraphs give to the Interstate Commerce Commission the absolute regulation and control of the routing of cars in the event of a congestion in any section of the country. Thus we again break down State lines and force our people to continue their march to Washington in order to get relief from the congested conditions of freight and traffic wherever they may be found. This is intensely objectionable to our State for the reason that the people are tired of running to Washington every time they desire to ship a car of cattle, car of corn, car of wheat, or car of other commodities. It has been the earnest hope and prayer of the people of my State that when the railroads were returned to their owners—and I wish they were going to be returned to-morrow—they would be through with running to Washington to get orders every time they wanted to make a shipment of freight. [Applause.]

The amendment that I offer strikes out paragraphs 15 and 16 of the section and would leave the law with reference to the control of traffic the same as it was before the Government took charge of the State railway commission and laws of our State, we had absolutely no trouble in the matter of routing and handling of freight.

Paragraphs 15 and 16 are further objectionable because they place a distinct burden upon the growing and progressive sections of the United States and greatly handleap every industry by compelling them to continuously come to Washington to consult the Interstate Commerce Commission as to how they should route their freight. Under the provisions of the Esch bill that is what they will have to do; and, while it is stated by the chairman of the committee, Mr. Esch, we are dealing with a national que

From this argument it will be seen that, though I was a new man in Congress at that time, I fought to save to the States as much power as it was possible, and to leave the various State railroad commissions free to function in matters relating to intrastate commerce.

I also objected to section 407 of the law and in that connection made the following arguments on the floor of the House in opposition to that section of the bill:

in opposition to that section of the bill:

This bill is further objectionable because of section 407, which authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to set at naught the antitrust laws of the several States and of the United States and permit mergers and combines heretofore condemned by the State and National laws. The effect of this is to wipe out the splendid antitrust laws that Texas has had for many years and permits the Interstate Commerce Commission, an administrative branch of the Government, to nullify and render ineffective the judgments, decrees, laws, and constitutions of the several States of the Union. In my judgment, this is a very dangerous provision, one that is inimical to the best interests of the American people and fraught with many dangers. (See p. 8540 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 1st sess. 66th Cong.)

I also objected to that part of the bill which took away-from the various State railroad commissions the rights to prescribe rules and regulations permitting the construction and removal of railroad tracks wholly within the States. In this connection I stated:

I stated:

The bill as a whole is further objectionable because it wests in the Interstate Commerce Commission the absolute authority to grant permits to remove tracks or to build new roads and takes away from the State commissions jurisdiction in such matters. This, in effect, will mean that in Washington authority will be lodged which will require that all those who desire to extend a road must present their case at Washington, and if perchance a road should, according to the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, become undesirable, this commission would have absolute authority to take up the road, regardless of any law or decision of the State in which the property was situated, and this is a further blow at the power and jurisdiction of the several States, and is a radical change from the existing laws and further tends to centralize in Washington matters that should be left to the States and to local tribunals for solution according to their own needs and about which the Interstate Commerce Commission by reason of the very circumstances can know so little.

The opposition to the section of the bill above referred to grew so determined that the chairman of the committee in order to prevent the adoption of some one of the amendments offered by different Members on the floor of the House introduced and caused the adoption of an amendment to his own bill which in effect excluded the operations of the bill from cases involving the construction or abandonment of any line located or to be located wholly within any one State or any street car or electric interurban line. To this extent at least our joint efforts corrected a serious objection found in the bill rected a serious objection found in the bill.

In truth and in fact the fight led largely by the Representatives from Texas, in which I had an humble part, promised at one time to gather such strength as to be able to force other amendments that would preserve to the railroad commissions of the several States the right to regulate rates in purely intrastate matters and to exercise in such matters jurisdiction that had commonly been conferred upon such bodies. But our hopes in this respect were short lived. We had been successful in passing only a few amendments when the chairman of the committee, on the night of November 14, 1919, arose from his seat on the floor of the House and delivered his famous anti-Texas speech, which stampeded the Republican majority, and rendered it impossible for us to procure further amendments to the bill. That memorable speech appears on page 8536 of the Congres-SIONAL RECORD of the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, and a portion of it reads as follows:

Surely gentlemen should not be swept from their feet because of the clamor of gentlemen from a single State. This is a bigger question than even the broad State of Texas. It is a national question. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have referred to the RECORD in order that it might be made clear that some of the gentlemen who voted for the conference report did so believing it was better than what we had at the time and did not intend to deprive the railroad commissions of their States of their jurisdiction and authority. We voted for the report because we felt that the bill with private control of railroads was the best thing that was then available. We knew that something had to be done, and we felt that the objectionable feature could be cured by later amendments. I for one am in favor of retaining the powers of the railroad commissions of the several States in so far as it relates to intrastate business. Since the days of John H. Reagan the railroad commission of my State has rendered valuable and distinguished service to its citizenship and has contributed in a large sense to the progress and prosperity that has in recent years characterized our great State.

Our experience during Government control ought to teach us that Government ownership and control of any industry is inimical to the best interests of a democratic Government. Aside from the many inconveniences that the shippers of the country experienced during Government control the cost of the Government was terrific. The Director General of Railroads in a recent report to the President states that appropriations aggregating $1,450,000,000 will be necessary to meet the deficit caused by Government control, and it is reliably stated that at least $436,000,000 more will be required to liquidate the damages caused to the properties due to Government operation. In other words, it appears now that 26 months of experience of Government operation and control of railroads will cost the public the sum of $2,000,000,000 in round numbers, and this does not consider the additional burdens that have been placed upon the American people in the way of increased rates and disrupted service. Of course, a part of this deficit must be charged to the war, but such experiences as these cause thoughtful and conservative men to turn from the idea of the Government owning or controlling the industries of the Nation or the democratization of any industry as a permanent policy.

I believe that the American people are willing to pay a reasonable price for services rendered and will ungrudgingly pay to the railroads of the country a reasonable rate for freight and passenger traffic, but I feel that the rates now in effect are too high and traffic will not stand these extraordinary burdens. I hope that there will be found a way by which the rates may be speedily reduced to such a figure as will insure a prompt and efficient movement of the commerce of the country. It is vitally essential just at this time in order to restore our country to normal conditions and lend encouragement to agriculture and commerce. The future progress and prosperity of our country is at stake. Our surplus products must move freely if we are to find a market that will enable our farmers and producers to live and prosper.

I also express the hope that some amendment will be made to the transportation act which will restore to the railroad commissions of the several States the rights which from year to year have gradually been taken from them and leave them free to regulate intrastate rates and not unduly restrict them in the handling of transportation problems falling wholly within the States. My colleague, Mr. Morgan Sanders, of Texas, has introduced an amendment of this kind, and I hope that favorable action may be had promptly on his or some other suitable measure.

If I may repeat what I have said before, the people of Texas and many other States are bitterly opposed to the Federal Government taking from them the power and authority rightly belonging to the States. We want to stop the tendency, so evident of late, which seeks to centralize all power in bureaus and commissions in Washington, and leave to the institutions of the States power to function over matters which in their nature are local to the States and with which the States are more capable of dealing. It is in this way only that we will be able to maintain a Government truly responsive to the will of the people.

tain a Government truly responsive to the will of the people.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Logan].

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I take it that this is a very important bill, involving as it does on the one side millions of invested capital and tremendous plants and hundreds of employees who will be affected particularly by the criminal operation of this bill, and on the other side the American people whose insistence for some legislation has brought about this bill. I take it also that the Agricultural Committee itself does not insist that this bill is a perfect piece of legislation which must be passed without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i," but we are here trying to discuss with each other what is the best way to make this legislation effective. I am in favor of the bill, but I think it ought to be amended, and I ask the attention of the committee to section 203 of the bill, because I believe if we are going to have a bill we should make it as effective as possible so that it will really be productive of good. That section provides that if the Secretary of Agriculture finds that a packer is violating any of the provisions of the act he shall have a hearing, and at that hearing the packer has a right to examine and cross-examine the witnesses, and in every way his rights are protected. Then, if the Secretary finds that he has violated the law, instead of at once making an order which shall become final and conclusive, so that the packer may be punished like any other violator of the law, provision is made for appeal to the circuit court of appeals. If the court thinks it proper when that appeal is taken, more evidence can be heard. Then if the circuit court of appeals holds that the order was rightly made by the Secretary, there can be a further appeal by writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court. It seems to me that that is altogether wrong. I think section 203 should be amended to read as follows:

An order made under section 203 shall be final and conclusive unless suspended or set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction.

Then, if the packer at that time violates the law, he could be indicted immediately and punished.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. That is a proposition that was discussed thoroughly in committee. Under the gentleman's contention if the Secretary of Agriculture should find the packer has violated the law, the gentleman's amendment would provide that the packer could be punished without his having recourse to the courts of this country.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all.

Mr. KINCHELOE, Absolutely,

Mr. LOGAN, Not at all.

Mr. KINCHELOE. This provides that they can be enjoined in the court of appeals, but the criminal penalty does not attach until it has been heard by the highest court in the country, like the case of any other individual.

Mr. LOGAN. Exactly. The order of the Secretary would become final and conclusive, and then if the packer violated that he would be indicted and tried, and, if found guilty, pun-

Mr. KINCHELOE. On the order of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. This would be the effect of it: The Secretary would simply say. "You have violated the learning to You have violated the law and I am going to make this order." Then, if he continued to violate the law, he would be indicted and tried and punished, just like anyone else.

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course, in that case, instead of having the courts pass on the validity of the order, the jury would pass on the entire proposition.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes. Mr. ANDERSON. And that, of course, would destroy the whole theory of regulation in the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all. I asked the chairman of the committee, Mr. HAUGEN, why he provided this right of appeal with regard to the packers, for he does not give it to the stockyard man, and you will not find it in the regulations of the stockyard people. I asked him why he made these two differences, why he did not make that order of the Secretary conclusive and then punish the packer, and he began to say that it was a matter of policy, that one business was a matter of a great many items and the other was not.

In the committee's own report, page 4, they say this was done to give the packers "protection from arbitrary administra-tive action demanded by the courts," and then they cite cases. I have examined the cases, which have apparently been gotten up by a very industrious lawyer, and on page 9 of the committee report you will find there cited this provision, taken from a case:

By the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, it is provided that when the Secretary of War, after hearing, found a bridge to be an unreasonable obstruction in navigation, he issued the order to alter it to the extent necessary.

In that case the Secretary of War, who has, of course, charge of all navigable streams, if he found there was an obstruction by a bridge or in any other way of a stream he has the right to order that it be altered. I say the Secretary of Agriculture should have the same right with regard to rates. It further goes on to say:

Failure to obey the order was made a criminal offense. In a case arising on a prosecution for failure to obey an order of the Secretary, the Supreme Court, in Union Bridge Co. against The United States (204 U. S., 364), held that the action was not an unconstitutional delegation of legislative and judicial power.

And then it goes on at length.

Now, the difference is this, gentlemen. They would have the Secretary make his order claiming that the packer had violated the law. Instead of letting it stop at that, and if he continues to violate, let him prosecute him like anybody else, they give him the right of appeal from one court to another before they actually make the Secretary's order final.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Under the gentleman's amendment, if the Secretary of Agriculture made an order saying that a packer had violated the law, then the packer has got to do one of two things—either quit, however erroneous the ruling of the Secretary of Agriculture may be, or be subject to a criminal prosecution by virtue of having violated the rules of a departmental That would put him out of business absolutely.

Mr. LOGAN. The gentleman is entirely mistaken as to that, for this reason: If the order of the Secretary of Agricultureand I am sure there are a good many lawyers on this committeeif they will examine these opinions cited by the committee they will find that if the Secretary's order is absolutely capricious, not based on any testimony, of course he can appeal from that order, because there will be no justification for it. That is all; but under this we simply make the Secretary of Agriculture a medium of collecting evidence. You simply make him a medium of collecting evidence, and that is all.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. However, the bill does provide that a man may go into court, and if the facts justify he can secure a temporary restraining order of the court, and that order may be continued by the court, and if the facts are sufficient he can take care of that situation by making a proper showing.

Mr. LOGAN. It seems to me that the bill ought to be amended, because it tends to make stronger the very act that we are trying to pass now. Now, I call your attention-

Mr. KINCHELOE. But suppose you happen to have a Secretary of Agriculture who has a constitutional prejudice against this business; he might put these men out of business by the exercise of sumptuary power—a departmental officer.

Mr. LOGAN. I think not. Mr. KINCHELOE. Absolutely.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all; for this reason: That if the Secretary's order had no evidence behind it, was arbitrary and capricious, it would be set aside by the court at once. You can not pass any law in this Congress right now that can give a man absolutely arbitrary power and not allow it to be set aside by the court.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I think the gentleman's proposed amendment would come about as near doing that as could be.

Mr. LOGAN. Absolutely not. If you will examine the very decisions which the committee cites in its report, you will find that the very thing I advocate can be done. ample, the Secretary of War comes into your district and finds a bridge that has been built at large expense, and makes an order saying that that bridge is an unreasonable obstruction to navigation. You do not have any appeal to the circuit court of appeals or the Supreme Court of the United States to determine whether it is an unlawful obstruction or You have to remove it; and if you do not remove it you can immediately be indicted and punished. And I think the same rule should be made with regard to the packer.

Mr. BARBOUR. What is the course pursued if a railroad company fails to obey an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. LOGAN. You go to the court.

Mr. BARBOUR. What court would you go to—a district court or the circuit court of appeals?

Mr. LOGAN. I think the district court; but I am not sure about that Mr. BARBOUR. I am asking the question for information.

Mr. LOGAN. I really do not know about that. Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.
Mr. BLANTON. The point made by the gentleman from Kentucky, as I understand, is that the Secretary might have some evidence but not sufficient to warrant his action, and his action might be wrongfully taken against the packers.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Then should there be recourse to the courts of the land?

Why, if it was absolutely arbitrary and ca-Mr. LOGAN. pricious, it could be set aside as a matter of law

Mr. BLANTON. Hear evidence, so much on this side of the scale and so much on that. The Secretary might think that he had sufficient evidence when, as a matter of fact, he did not at After all, would it not be subject to a court of review?

Mr. LOGAN. You give the Secretary of Agriculture the right to make an order declaring that the packer is violating the law, but you do not make the order final, so that if the packer persists in his wrongdoing he can be punished, and I think that is what we ought to do in this bill.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If you gave him that power and he entered an arbitrary order, then the person, corporation, or company would have to desist from the practice or defend a criminal prosecution?

Mr. LOGAN. If it was purely arbitrary and not based upon evidence, it could be set aside.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It might not be arbitrary, but would not a company or institution be put in the attitude of either quitting the business or defending a criminal prosecution?

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all.
Mr. KINCHELOE. Aside from whether it is a capricious prosecution, who would decide it?
Mr. LOGAN. If it is entirely arbitrary, the court would set it aside.

Mr. KINCHELOE. But who is to decide whether it is entirely arbitrary?

Mr. LOGAN. Whether there was some testimony or not to sustain it? If there was testimony on one side or the other, the Secretary ought to pass on it as the Secretary of War does on the obstructions to which I have referred.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If the Secretary decides it is capricious

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JACOWAY. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman. Mr. LOGAN. I ask attention to section 311, which the gentleman from Texas spoke on yesterday. That provision, gentlemen, gives the Secretary the power to pass on the reasonableness or unreasonableness of intrastate regulations of stockyards. Now, it seems to me that it would be very unfortunate if the House passed that, and for this reason:

The same provision is in the Esch-Cummins Act, and there are 42 of the States—nearly every one of the States we represent here—right now in the Supreme Court asking that this provision be annulled. I hold in my hand their motion, which they have filed in that court, asking the court to declare that power of interfering with intrastate rates be held unconstitutional. If you want to get, say in Ohio, from Toledo to Columbus, the Interstate Commerce Commission is now passing on those rates and declaring your own State railroad commission has not the power to pass on them. As I say, 42 States are now appealing to the Supreme Court not to give them that right. Every one of the States we come from, nearly, is asking that the commission be not given that right. We are putting ourselves in the position to say that this very principle we are contending against we are going to give to the Secretary of Agriculture in regard to intrastate rates which any one of the States may see fit to pass. We are going to say that the Secretary of Agriculture can come along and abolish those rates, just like the Interstate Commission is doing now. And I think it would be very unfortunate to put ourselves in that position. The attorney general in any one of the States represented by you gentlemen may be in the Supreme Court on this, because nearly every one of them is there now—except six. Here we are in the Here we are in the Supreme Court asking them not to give this power to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and yet you have adopted the very same principle in your bill in regard to the packers.

Let me read from this pamphlet I have in my hand:

It will accordingly be seen that by these orders the power of the States to regulate their internal commerce is sought to be taken from them by a department of the Federal Government—

That is, all of our States; not only South Carolina but nearly all of the States have joined in this-

This power, the petitioning States say, is a sovereign power reserved to them absolutely by the Federal Constitution, subject only to the provision that in the exercise of it they shall not injure that commerce which is under the protection of the Federal Government. They further point out that the continued free exercise of this power by them is of the most vital importance as affecting the comfort, health, and safety of their recoules.

Now, we are trying here, gentlemen, to legislate on the comfort, health, and safety of the American people, and I say we ought not to pass that provision and put it in this bill. cerely trust that this committee will not recommend it to the House, or, if it does, that the House will not pass it. As I say, it will put us all in a most embarrassing position. We ought to be permitted to absolutely regulate internal affairs in our respective States, and therefore I hope the committee will not recommend this.

Mr. FUNK. Can the gentleman cite any State that has taken any jurisdiction over stockyard charges?

Mr. LOGAN. I assume that Illinois has, Mr. FUNK. For the information of the gentleman, I wish to say that Illinois has not taken jurisdiction of the stockyards.

Mr. LOGAN. But the principle is there, and we ought not to [Applause.] adopt it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill as to packers and stockyards. There are certainly none of them in my district, and I therefore can speak without interest of any kind, either for myself or constituents.

In the Sixty-fifth Congress, at its close, in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, we heard testimony for over two months-in December, January, and February on this subject, day after day, during the sessions of the House.

This bill is altogether founded on the regulation of commerce and nothing else. It ought perhaps to have been considered by the committee that has charge of that matter. It comes from the Committee on Agriculture.

There is not a person in the United States that I know of who has not joined in the cry during the last four years that we were too much regulated. I remember long before the World War that we used to hear and know of the regulation of every man and his concerns by the polizei in Germany, and we thanked the Lord that we were not living under any government by police regulation. Some sort of regulation has had to be established with reference to the matter of commerce by railroads, because that is a public business certainly in control of the United States, and the Interthe matter of commerce by railroads, because that is a public business certainly in control of the United States, and the Interstate Commerce Commission has done a great work, although there are many that complain and state that the difficulties under which the railroads now suffer may be due in some respects to errors of that commission. But they have put down rebates. They have given equal rights on the railroads to every man, woman, and child, and, so far as commerce is concerned, we may rely upon the enforcement of that act and upon the enforcement of the antitrust act to give every man a fair

What we complained of during the war was the regulation of private business by governmental interference. We thought that free men could do their business freely for themselves. The West especially objected to the regulation of grain. It was done by an honest man and a great man, now the Secretary of Commerce. But we heard cries against that regulation. The East was troubled from time to time by the regulation of preferences in manufacture. It was necessary for the war. We all submitted. I remember that during the hearings that we had there were tremendous complaints of the regulation of the packers and the industry by the Secretary of Commerce so as to secure cheap meat during the war, and it was said the people had been encouraged to grow meat and then did not get proper prices from it.

I warn any man who introduces a system of central regulation in this country that the people will not stand by any such system, because in the end they will stand for their freedom to do business for themselves.

Now, this bill is introduced with the frank statement in the report, in spite of that prejudice growing up from the war— it was introduced with the frank statement already read to this House that-

A careful study of this bill will, I am sure, convince one that it and existing laws give the Secretary of Agriculture complete inquisitorial, visitorial, supervisory, and regulatory power over the packers, stockyards, and all activities connected therewith, and that it is a most comprehensive measure, and extends further than any previous law in the regulation of private business in time of peace, except possibly the interstate commerce act.

I agree with that statement; only I say that the interstate commerce act does not regulate private business, but public business, because transportation is public business and not like this.

Let us consider for a moment the kind of business that it is proposed to regulate, and I begin with stockyards, rather than the packers, because the material which the packers use comes from the stockyards. These stockyards should be described. An association generally or corporation owns the stockyards in a city, which is the center for stock distribution. There are stalls; there are auction markets. There are people who take care of the cattle. The stockyard company furnished the feed. The cattle are shipped to them by the owners from within or without the State, and in the stockyards they are exposed for sale, sometimes by auction and often, on the other hand, simply by selling to the agent of the purchaser by the agent of the seller. A whole institution of brokers grows up about the yards where the sales are made. A man may put a limit on the price of his cattle. Often they send their cattle to other stockyards if they did not get their price at the first one.

Mr. Chairman, that is a wholesale business. It is nothing else. It is wholesale dealing, like that in any other wholesale store. It has a place in the State, and that has been expressly determined by the Supreme Court of the United States in a very carefully considered opinion, cited in this report, but not fully cited-an opinion contained in One hundred and seventy-sixth United States, page 578. It is the case of Hopkins against United States. By this case it has been decided that this is not interstate commerce, but it is ordinary commerce within the State. I turn to the opinion, delivered by Mr. Justice Peckham, rather than to the abridgment of it: I have scarcely the time, but I will take the risk of running out of my time rather than not touch on this subject, as being the right of the United States. The suit was brought under the antitrust act. The court said:

The act has reference only to that trade or commerce which exists, or may exist, among the several States or with foreign nations, and has no application whatever to any other trade or commerce.

The question meeting us at the threshold, therefore, in this case is, what is the nature of the business of the defendants, and are the bylaws, or any subdivision of them above referred to, in their direct effect in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations; or does the case made by the bill and answer show that any one of the above defendants has monopolized, or attempted to monopolize, or combined or conspired with other persons to monopolize, any part of the trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations?

The court then goes on to deal with the various matters sent to them. The charges relate to the business alone, the selling of the article at its destination, which has been sent from another State. The court goes on with careful citations upon this matter, and the decision is, that notwithstanding the fact that they had to correspond to get the cattle, or to send telegrams, or whatever it might be, this was a business carried on at Kansas City and was not an interstate business, and I defy anyone to get away from the reasoning of that case.

The report says that that case has been modified because a bill of lading had been held to be subject to the control of the United States. A bill of lading is a bill which gives you the right to send goods in interstate commerce, and is therefore subject to the interstate commerce clause. It is not a sale in that place.

Now, I have simply stated the law. I say that the oaths which we have taken to support and defend the Constitution of the United States bars us from invading a ground where the Supreme Court says, "No."

But we do not stand on that alone. If this legislation is constitutional and is to be maintained, there is not the slightest reason why Congress could not regulate the board of brokers in the city of New York, because they deal in stocks which have to do with other States. There is no reason why it could not regulate every large dealer in groceries in the city of New York, because they come from afar and go somewhere else. It can regulate every man who deals in cotton in Savannah or in New Orleans or in Texas. Yes, it can regulate the farmer, because he raises his goods for export and sends them forward. You can put under the Government of the United States all the business of this country to regulate as the Government sees fit.

Now, people say, "What harm does this regulation do?" anyone will take the pains to read that report from end to end, he will be interested in some things. The Secretary, who has supervision of the regulation, has the right to decide what is reasonable or unreasonable, or what he thinks will be in restraint of trade, or what he thinks will raise or lower prices, and he has the right to make orders which are equivalent to an injunction. And then, when he has done this, the report brings it out very clearly that the order of the Secretary will stand when it goes on appeal to the United States court not on the justice of that order and not on a reexamination of the facts, but it will be set aside only if it is absolutely unreasonable or amounts to a confiscation. Case after case goes to that matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I should like at least 10 minutes more

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes more. Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I would not ask for the time, Mr. Chairman, if I had not spent two menths on this matter and if I were not one of those who believe in an indestructible union of indestructible States, one of those who were instructed years and years ago by Dr. Francis Lieber that a republican form of government does not mean freedom unless it is accompanied by local self-government. He used to say that the French had a republican form of government, but that every mayor was appointed from Paris. Mr. Chairman, what can we expect in the business of the United States, what variations in different parts of the country, if universal rules are to be enforced from Washington as to all our wholesale and retail business? I have no hesitation in arguing on this matter as I have done as to the stockyards. There was some complaint when it was before us that the packers who put up the meat afterwards had large interests in some of the stockyards, and it was so.

There was no proof before us of abuses that were not susceptible of correction under existing law or that would not be just as hard to find out under this proposed law. It would have to be discovered whether there is any evidence of unfairness in The packers do not make the sales. They are made by the agents of the buyers and the sellers meeting there. Abuses have got to be found out anyway. Under this law the only difference would be that the case would be taken to the Secretary of Agriculture to be tried instead of being taken to a jury of their peers and decided in the place where the transaction occurred. But by the decree in this case, yielding to popular clamor, the packers have abandoned all interest in the stockyards and left them as independent institutions for sale of stock in the town exactly as determined by the court in the old Kansas City case.

But now we come to the business of the packers. What is

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Excuse me. I have only 10

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman refuses to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is making an important speech, and I thought maybe he would like to have a larger audience to hear him. We have dwindled down to such a

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not yield to the gentle-man to call for a quorum. I have some attentive listeners. The gentleman can not take me off the floor by the point of no quorum.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The point of no quorum present can be made at any time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. KING). Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman did not seem to think he wanted to yield, and I thought maybe I would show him that a point of no quorum would make him yield. Having done that I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am very much obliged to the gentleman. I hope this will not be taken out of my time.

As I said, the business of the packers began with the buying of cattle, slaughtering at their slaughterhouses, turning the carcasses into meat, and shipping it to the East or wherever they might send it—a process of manufacture. It is as much a process of manufacture as any other anywhere, where a man buys raw material and manufactures it and sells it. It was complained that they had associated with it other business. had. They found that in manufacturing beef it was desirable to manufacture glue and hides and all sorts of things, and when they came to make them they found they might well sell them.

It was complained that they made enormous profits. As far as I could determine from the proof, they made a less margin of profit than any other business that I ever knew of.

It was said they were a monopoly. I could not find that to be true. If it was proved, that is for the law to take care of and not for the Secretary of Agriculture. There were five of them there, and there were seven or eight others who were large packers also, doing business of the same sort, who were not supposed to have anything to do with the Big Five.

It was insisted that the packers ought not to do business in various articles. I can only say that I do not know any law against a man running a department store if he wants to. If that law is to be made, it ought to be made by the State where the sales are made.

It was never charged that they sold this meat at retail. Some might wish they had done so, because when I was buying at wholesale for a soldiers' home, when I happened to be the chairman of the board of management of that home, I got meat for 11 cents, and at last it went up to 17 cents during the war, when other people were paying at retail from 25 to 60 cents. Unfortunately, during the war, when we had plenty of money to spend, everybody was ready to pay the exorbitant rents on Broadway or some other great street where some store had established itself instead of insisting on close profits and getting things cheaply.

There was a howl, I think, that the farmer and customer did not get a fair proportion of all this. I could not find that it was due to the packers. If too much meat was produced. there were times when it could not all be sold. If too much meat was put in storehouses and not sold, or if the retail dealer got the profit, you would not put the responsibility where it did not belong.

I do not defend the packers. I am not here on their behalf, and only know them from having seen them in this case. But it was said, without contradiction, that the business of getting the meat from the hoof and from the stockyards to the wholesale dealers in the various cities was done with a cheapness that never was done before in the world's history, and that an amount of supplies was given to our one hundred millions of people that was almost unknown before. I will not say that they did not make big profits, for they did make big profits. They did a big business, and other men made big profits. But that is not material to this case. What I do say is that if the Government has the right to come in and regulate the manufacture and sale of meats, they have the right to come in and regulate the manufacture and sale of every other necessity, whether it be clothes—we have got to have clothes—or groceries, or the various things in which the packers are prevented from dealing by the consent decree by which they are told not to make some 50 articles of food that they have been making, while other people are going ahead and making them without regulation by the Secretary. The next thing we will have before the House will be bills to regulate them by a Secretary and by his order.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is much to say upon this bill. At this point I ask unanimous consent to place in the Record an abstract of this decree, which I have made, as an appendix to

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by putting in the matter referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, whether the bill will modify or set aside that decree made by consent or not. It seems to have been a decree to try to remove all questions of dispute from the business retained by the packers. It does not seem to have had that effect. All I have to say is that we should not want to see the whole business of the United States regulated by such a bill as this. [Applause.]

The matter inserted as an appendix is as follows Analysis of the decree of the Supreme Court of the District in the suit of United States against the packing companies and their individual stockholders, dated February 27, 1920, after reciting that the petition alleges violations of the antitrust act, which were denied, but that the defendants consent to this decree on condition that this be no admission of any breach of United States law.

It is decreed-

1. Defendants are enjoined from monopoly;

2. From owning any interest in a stockyard or stockyard railroad:

3. From letting anyone else use their distributing facilities, which, however, they may sell;

 From making, distributing, or dealing in fish, vegetables, fruits, sweets, molasses, preserves, spices, coffee and tea, nuts, flour, sugar, rice, bread and biscuit, and cereals, grain, and miscellaneous articles, including building hardware and materials, cigars, etc.;

5. From holding a control of any corporation so dealing;

6. From owning retail meat markets;

7. Or cold storage warehouses, except at the stockyards or for their own products;

8. Or dealing in milk or cream, except for manufacture of oleomargarine, etc.;
9. From any illegal trade practice;

- 10. Decree that defendants file plans for sale of stockyards, their railroads, and newspapers;
- 11. That they sell all cold-storage warehouses and retail meat markets;

12. And sell the goods mentioned in paragraphs 4 and 5;

- 13. That purchasers of stockyards agree to operate them; 14. Decree not to interfere with export trade except as to
- paragraphs 4 and 5; 15. Nor to bar the United States from suit as to poultry,
- butter, eggs, and cheese; 16. Defendants will disclose facts as to how they are carry-
- ing out the decree; 17. All their sales, etc., since October 1, 1919, are subject to
- review 18. Jurisdiction is retained for enforcement of the decree.
- The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

By unanimous consent, Mr. Logan and Mr. Jones of Texas had leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit to the House and to the country two definite, closely related propositions looking to the relief of the present acute agricultural situation.

But before proceeding to do that I quote briefly from a recent statement of Mr. Carl Vrooman, formerly Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. He says:

of Agriculture. He says:

The farmer is being smothered in his surplus crops. It remains to be seen whether he is going to be provided with export markets now or a post-mortem later. Unless given at once a foreign outlet for their surpluses, a million more farmers will go bankrupt before fall. * * In tragic contrast with this stupefying spectacle, hundreds of millions of people in Europe and Asia are ragged, cold, starving, and unable to utilize either their idle labor or their idle factories for lack of the very things that are rotting in our fields, granaries, and warehouses.

But while these war-broken countries have no money with which to buy our products, they have lands, forests, mines, factories, and mills as a sound basis for long-time credit, and industrious and thrifty populations, ready and pathetically eager to multiply many times over the value of our raw materials. * *

That is a fair statement of the situation except that we have another crop coming on to add its surplus to the hundreds of millions of rotting surplus piled up in this country now. The farmers' interest on past-due obligations is increasing. Idleto all business and to all industries. Other things may help, but there is but one remedy for this condition. It is a fool's dream, a revival of business in this country, until the markets of Europe can be opened up to our farm products and the farmers made able to pay their debts and resume normal buying.

If the farmers could pay their debts and purchase what they need, the retail merchants could pay their debts and order more goods. The wholesale merchants could pay their debts and order more goods. The factories could pay their debts and buy more raw materials from the farmers, putting their idle factories and their idle operatives to work, and all together break the deadlock developing in this country. But the farmers can not pay their debts until they can sell their accumulated surplus. This country can not absorb that surplus; therefore, there can not go back to the farmers from any source in this country the money in exchange for what they have, which would enable them to start the debt-paying process into operation and the buying process into operation.

BETTER THAN CHARITY.

If we could get our surplus cotton to the factories of Europe and our surplus food products to the peoples beyond the seas, we could start them to work with well-nourished bodies; we would stimulate their ability to make further purchases; we would help to make them normal again, and we would save ourselves from the necessity of sending to them, as objects of charity, our surplus to be distributed by the Red Cross next These peoples could have food, earned by their own effort, new clothing made by their own hands, their self-respect preserved, instead of eating the bread of charity and wearing the cast-off garments of other people, if we would but do that which it is possible for us to do. They do not need charity. They need the chance to work and to pay for what they get.

This is the situation and these are the possibilities which challenge us all to united, determined, immediate effort.

I speak, first, of the part of the Government, not because the part of the people is less than that of the Government, but because it is more self-evident. The Federal Government, through its diplomatic agencies and its Department of Commerce, should endeavor to procure, as far as possible, a preferential credit status for agricultural products, which may be sold on credit to rehabilitate the industries of Europe and keep vigorous the bodies of its people, and especially with regard to Germany and Austria, procure, if possible, an arrangement under which such credits shall rank ahead of reparation demands.

Second. There should be organized in this country a selling corporation provided with an initial revolving capital supplied by the Government, which corporation shall sell these agricultural products upon the best credit terms obtainable and good security, working in cooperation with the governmental agencies mentioned, and issuing its debentures, secured by this initial fund and the foreign obligations received for the sales made, paying for the agricultural products with the money of the initial fund and that received from the sale of these debentures.

I know that there is a growing opposition, and one in which I share, against the further extension of governmental activity; but this Government as a government is in the same situation as its people. As a government it is a creditor of Europe to the extent of many billions of dollars, and if it is to collect its debt it must in this emergency play the part of a good business man and help keep its debtor at work. A hundred million dollars advanced by the Government ought to facilitate directly at least a billion dollars of sale, and indirectly much more, with the certainty of increasing the ability of Europe to pay what it now owes and with little prospect of losing any of the hundred million dollars advanced.

I shall undertake, Mr. Chairman, to establish the economic and governmental soundness and the workability of that which I have suggested, and its advantage to the countries directly affected, to the peoples in need of food and clothing and of gainful work, to the allied Governments as governments, to the Central Powers, and to ourselves, who must get rid of this surplus.

A GRAVE SITUATION.

We must not deceive ourselves as to the gravity of the situa-tion which confronts us and the limitation which the possibilities impose upon purely domestic legislation and administration to remedy that stuation, and we must not deceive ourselves as to the world's condition and its needs. The importance of railroad rates, of fiscal policy, of our general domestic policy is not underestimated, but it is the present inability of European markets to absorb the surplus of our farm products, and especially in my section of our low-grade cotton, which at this time confronts agricultural America with the possibility of the ness is increasing everywhere. Economic paralysis is extending gravest crisis perhaps in its history. It is the inability of Europe to purchase at a reasonable price the necessary raw materials to get its industries into operation which is retarding rehabilitation and the return to a normal condition there, MUST SELL TO EUROPE.

Let us see what is the general situation. There is no lack of production in this country. There is no lack of world need for our surplus. The trouble is that Europe, due to an unprecedented calamity, has neither the cash nor the arranged credit We must therefore either continue to pile up to purchase. surplus or sell on credit. Our farmers are themselves in debt and need cash. But they can not get the cash with which to pay their debts merely by holding their surplus. Nor can Europe develop its ability to buy this surplus nor that which will be added thereto by the next harvest if the raw materials necessary to get its industries into operation are withheld. It does not matter whether we like this situation or not. the situation. It is a fact. It can not be gotten rid of by resolutions or by congressional oratory. Glittering generalities emanating from high places will not remove it. It is a business Legislation dealing with the purely domestic probproposition. lems of agriculture can not now bring relief. Our present chief acute difficulty centers in Europe's inability to buy and is not within the reach of any purely domestic policy, however wise. There is no use trying to deceive ourselves about that.

LET US FORGET POLITICS.

Now, please do not conclude, gentlemen, that I am trying, under the guise of this discussion, to raise the League of Nations issue, the tariff, or any other issue touching domestic policy. In everyday life when men have before them a number of different propositions upon one alone of which they can agree, they proceed to do the thing upon which they agree. It frequently occurs that in the doing of that one thing they arrive at a common basis for action with regard to others. In legislation we are too much disposed, if we agree upon a number of things but disagree as to some, to neglect those with regard to which we are in agreement and spend valuable time quarreling over those upon which we are in disagreement.

Let us forget the issues of the last campaign and close our eyes as to those, whatever they may be, which are developing for the next campaign and see if our experience and our common sense can not lead us to the adoption of a policy which will bring a large measure of definite relief to the farmers of this country and through them to the country at large.

I am not trying to embarrass the present administration. I am not thinking of politics. I am thinking of my distressed people with their surplus of cotton and other products on hand and another crop in process of production. I am thinking of the millions of European people who need what we have. I am thinking of a world disarranged and idle and drifting toward chaos, which needs above all else to be put to work, with bodies properly fed and clothed. When people are hungry and idle they do not think normally. Food and work will restore the world's peace quicker than armies can do it.

I believe that if we will work together ourselves and bring the Government, in the proper exercise of its power, into helpful cooperation with the people and bring ourselves into practical, helpful cooperation with our European customers, we can do business with them upon sound business principles and while helping them to get on their feet at the same time get rid of our accumulating surplus, which is becoming a liability rather than an asset, and put our idle people in the cities to work.

This is just a common-sense business proposition.

A BUSINESS PROPOSITION.

I used to have some clients engaged in the wholesale business. I was generally consulted not only as to purely legal questions, but also as to policy. When we had a customer who for any reason got into bad financial condition, especially if he was already indebted to us, and his business venture was inherently sound, we did everything possible to keep him going, provided, of course, there was a substantial chance under all the circumstances of his working out of his difficulty with our help. We wanted to get what he owed us, and we wanted to preserve his purchasing power for future sales, and we had, to a degree at least, the ordinary human, unselfish interest in him. That was good business. Good business rests upon business laws, It does not matter how big the proposition is, the laws of business remain the same. They are fixed and universal in their application. They apply to the European situation just as they do to the smallest private business in operation.

WORLD NOT BANKRUPT.

The world is not bankrupt. The staggering figures of indebtedness incurred, the materials used, the territory devastated, the loss of life resulting from the recent war, are most deceptive when considered in connection with an examination into the world's ability to function-to "carry on," as the Englishman says. The vast debts of the world resulting from the war it owes to itself. They are largely figures-a matter of bookkeeping. Those figures are not totals which have been deducted by the war from the world's assets. Of course, the world has sustained losses by reason of the war. The world has lost in human productive energy, but it suffers now not so much from that loss as from the lack of utilization of the human energy now idle. The world has enough man power now, with the aid of modern machinery, to do all its necessary work. The war consumed of the world's timber material, but there is enough left for present human needs and more is growing. No lact of coal or the metals is responsible for the present acute situation. There was vast physical devastation, of course, but in a relatively small area. There is enough unutilized human energy in the world now to rebuild the devastated area resulting from the war within six months.

Generally speaking, the world's resources are intact. It is suffering from the disorganization resulting from an unusual and terrible catastrophe. It has a large indebtedness which it can not pay now and can not pay until it gets to work. By reason of the fact that these peoples can not command the new credit necessary to buy raw materials and take care of their current pay rolls, required to get their industries into operation, we are in distress, world wide. I am not so foolish as to imagine that anybody, much less myself, can suggest a practical plan by which the world's affairs can be entirely readjusted and the effects of this war wiped out in a short time. The physical and moral wounds of the war can not be quickly cured, but there are no insurmountable difficulties which stand bet the peoples of the world and an early industrial rehabilitation we will use our common sense and apply to the present situation a policy which we have learned from business experience is of practical utility. This is the time to act to save ourselves and save Europe.

The industries of Europe and the peoples of Europe are financially embarrassed not because their industries are inherently unprofitable. They are not in their situation because their distressed businesses were bad business ventures or had incompetent management or inefficient operative personnel. Their condition is temporary. They have been the victims of a terrible calamity. They are in the same situation as a railroad corporation operating in a normally profitable territory which, by some great physical misfortune, is deprived of its rolling stock, its track torn up, and it is rendered financially unable to pay its present debts or to command additional credit to get itself into operation again. Under such conditions we have learned from experience what to do; we have learned that the railroad can be kept in operation by the postponement of the payment of existing debts, which the railroad can not pay anyway, and by enabling it to get a new credit for operating expenses through the creation of a preferred indebtedness evidenced by receivership certificates, which hold a preferential status as against the old debts which the railroad corporation can not then pay. It is universally recognized that such an arrangement as this does no injustice to the old creditors, but on the contrary provides the only arrangement by which their prospect of payment can be preserved.

MUST SELL TO EUROPE OR HOLD SURPLUS.

I never advised a client to cut off a customer in the condition of our European customers. It would have been suicidal to have destroyed such an outlet for our goods and at the same time destroyed the possibility of collecting cur debts. helped such customers for our own sake as well as for theirs. We must help our former allies and help Germany. Germany must pay for her devastation, but I am not in favor of subjecting the German people to either political or industrial carpet-bagging. They must pay, but they must be given a chance to pay. Their condition is not what we would choose, but this situation is a fact, not dependent upon our choice. They are the best customers we have for much of our surplus production, especially our low-grade cotton, of which we have some millions of bales on hand now. We can make their situation better or worse, and it will be better or worse for us, de-pending upon which we do. It is rather interesting to note within what definite limitations big world problems hold the exercise of free choice by any particular nation or group of Europe owes us billions of dollars now, and under normal conditions it takes hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of our surplus cotton alone. Here again we confront a situation, a fact, not a theory. Europe can not pay these billions now owing until it gets into normal industrial activity again, nor can it pay its other debts, nor can it pay cash for our current surplus production.

Unless Europe can take that surplus, it lies unsold and unused in this country, a growing menace to us. We can not send our salesmen to Mars or to any other planet to sell what Europe has normally taken; nor can we find on the earth another customer who will purchase what Europe has heretofore taken. I refer particularly, but not exclusively, to Germany and Austria, the peoples obligated to pay indemnity. So we must sell to Europe or hold our surplus. That is all there is to it. Europe can not pay cash. We not only have the surplus, but we have the gold also. We must sell, if at all, on credit. That is just as plain as the nose on a man's face. It would neither be good business for us nor would it be humane to withhold our surplus from the peoples of Europe. Speaking practically, it can not be done. God has made some laws under the operation of which no people could do that sort of thing and "get by with it," as the expression goes.

MUST MARSHAL OUR RESOURCES.

As a matter of fact there is no good business reason why we should desire to do so. Europe needs and can buy and will eventually pay for our surplus, and again make us a good customer, if we will take full advantage of the possibility of the present situation—if we will marshal our resources of Gov-ernment and people and instead of wasting time in trying to learn some new way to proceed we will have the good sense to use the knowledge which we possess.

For the purpose of emphasizing, I repeat that this Government as chief creditor and as the people's agent should undertake, through its diplomatic department and its Department of Commerce, to procure an arrangement as far as is possible under which those of its citizens who will furnish their agricultural products-the new credit-necessary to get into operation the industries of Europe, and especially those under the control of the Supreme Council and the Reparations Commission, which countries are in a sense under a general receivership, shall have a preferential status as against the old indebtedness, including those for indemnity. In other words, to procure on a large scale the same sort of arrangement in principle which experience has demonstrated is the quickest and safest and fairest way to keep an embarrassed debtor in gainful productive activity, so that his creditors in chief may eventually get their money, the public interest not suffer from reduced or suspended activity, and other activities not suffer from a suspended demand resulting from the suspended operations of the debtor. Whatever can be done in that direction will help, whether it be a preference in time of payment or in priority of security.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. What effect would that have upon the exchange between this country and the countries with whom such arrangements would be made?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. It would have a fine effect on exchange. We would be selling on credit. There would be no immediate demand for gold from the countries to which we would be selling. We would put into operation their industries, and their products would go into the four corners of the world to bring gold back to the countries that need to be revived, and in turn part of that gold would come to this country. We are in an anomalous condition. We have the world's gold and we hold much of the world's surplus of raw materials. We are not suffering from poverty in this country; we are suffering from congestion. Down in the South we have millions of bales of cotton that we have produced, with another harvest coming on. My people will be ruined by agricultural prosperity, from the standpoint of production, unless we can open up the European markets.

SITUATION DIFFICULT BUT NOT IMPOSSIBLE.

I am not a "dreamer." I appreciate the difficulty. But this is what ought to be done. We have no right to say that because a thing is difficult we shall not undertake it. Our duty and our responsibility is measured by the best we can do.

It is not only necessary that Europe get these materials but that it get them at the lowest possible increase above that which our farmers receive. Anybody who sells in many of the European countries now realizes that he is taking a gambler's chance and charges a gambler's profits. He pays too little to the people from whom he buys or charges too much to the people to whom he sells. We talk about our duties. I say it is the highest duty to our own people and to the world now to get to the peoples of Central Europe and to the rest of the world who want to buy the raw materials that are piled up in this country now. We ought to be able to do it. They tell us the Allies would not agree to this. I am not willing to accept that as a fact. We were an important participant in the Great War. We are the great creditor nation of the world. The Allies owe us billions and billions of money. What is proposed is in the interest of the world. We have a right and owe the duty to have something to say about this matter. We ought to say it, and support our position with the prestige and the power of the Nation. If we can sell our surplus agricultural products, we can be more indulgent toward the Allies with regard to what they owe to us.

We would merely be offering to sell the seed corn to plant the crop out of the harvest of which the Allies may alone hope They can not furnish the seed corn, nor can their to collect. debtors do it. All we would be asking would be that the seed corn, which we alone can furnish, either be paid for before the debtor in chief collects from the harvest or that we have a prior lien for the price of the seed. We ought to be able to consummate that sort of an arrangement. The doing of that is the Government's business. In the first place, this Government as a government is Europe's chief creditor and has the direct interest in Europe's quick rehabilitation. In the second place, the doing of that which is suggested is so important to all the people of this country and to all the peoples on the other side of the ocean, it so involves world interest and general policies, and is so difficult of accomplishment, that it would be foolish not to act through our common agency and our common representative in international affairs, our Federal Government, in trying to progress as far as is possible toward this consummation. It is for the doing of just such things as this that governments have been ordained among men.

HOW TO GET THE MONEY.

The next question is, How are we to get the money to enable our farmers to pay their debts? This proposition, which is related to the first, but not dependent upon it, except that the first would be a valuable facilitating agency, the two going together, is that there be created in this country an organization similar to the War Finance Corporation, but different in that it shall have to do only with sales of agricultural products, which shall cooperate closely with the Department of Commerce and with the Government's efforts to procure, in a large way, a preferential status for the new credit offered to be extended, and which shall make sales of farm products where sound security may be found, and issue and sell its debentures based upon an initial revolving fund provided by the Government and upon these European securities, and pay out the receipts from such sales of debentures for farm products disposed of.

Whatever corporation undertakes to facilitate agricultural sales ought not to be engaged in an effort to facilitate any other sort of credits or sales. Agriculture's problems are different; its turnover is different. It can not bid successfully against industry for credit.

When the War Finance Corporation was revived I urged that it be commissioned to devote itself exclusively to effecting sales of agricultural products. The bill, as reported by the Senate committee, did so provide, but, under what I believe has been demonstrated to have been a mistaken conception of the whole matter, that was changed by amendment.

THE GOVERNMENT'S DUTY.

The next question is, Why should the Government particularize, specialize, and in a measure concentrate its energies, with due regard to its general obligations and the limitations which they and sound governmental policy impose, upon an effort to open the European markets to our agricultural products? I want to answer that question from another angle than the answer given by the observations already made.

Many times I have said in this Chamber that agriculture is to our industrial and business life what the root of the plant is to the plant; that when agriculture, the root, is not in a healthy condition, the plant above can not flourish. That fact is being demonstrated now. Everybody who understands our condition knows that in so far as our intranational business difficulties are concerned they originated with agriculture. The quick effect of agricultural depression upon all other business demonstrated the fact that agriculture in a large measure is our base business. There is the seat of the difficulty now. The great agricultural sections can not pay their debts nor buy what they need and would take from our factories, because they can not sell their surplus. They can not pay their debts, therefore idle men walk the streets of our industrial cities and great industries are embarrassed. Of course, all business and industries, including agriculture, are in a definite sense interrelated and interdependent, but no other business in this country is basic in the same sense that agriculture is. The prosperity of no other business so quickly carries prosperity to other businesses as does the prosperity of agriculture. The distress of no other business so quickly or so generally reflects itself in other business as does the distress of agriculture. It is not for agriculture alone that I appeal. I say concentrate there because there, in a large measure, is our danger and the source of our distress.

I have warned you gentlemen time and again that the economic weakness of agriculture is a menace to every dependent and to every other interrelated business in this country, that exactly that thing would happen, in the event of an unusual strain, which has happened. I have no disposition to say "I told you so." I only mention this with the hope that the recollection of that fact may give some weight now to what I am urging.

When the strain incident to the direct effect of and the reaction from the war came, we broke at the point held by agriculture. Why did that happen? We broke there because it was the weakest point. The break always occurs under a general strain at the point of greatest weakness and the place where the break occurs demonstrates where the weakest point was. Of course, no domestic policy could have entirely averted the present situation, but we are paying a penalty now for having failed of a constructive policy which would have given to agriculture greater economic strength, greater power to resist. That which could have been a gradual retirement to prewar conditions has resulted in a rout and all business has been swept into the confusion because agriculture crashed under the pressure.

AGRICULTURE THE BASIC BUSINESS.

When considered as a basic business, the relationship of the root of a plant to the rest of the plant illustrates the relationship which agriculture sustains to those businesses with regard to which it is the basic one. When considered in its other relationship to industry and business, the relationship of interdependence, it is as the weak section of a levee, or as the weakest part of a military line of defense. When the levee breaks at its weakest spot, and that is where it breaks, under general pressure, we do not consider it an act of favoritism to concentrate the common resources of materials in an effort to stop the crevasse through which the water is flowing and bringing distress to all the country protected by the levee. When the defensive line, under general pressure, gives way at its weakest spot, we do not consider it any favoritism to rush in reinforcements and stop the enemy there. No: we use common sense. When the root of the plant is not able to gather from its surroundings the elements necessary to give vigor and growth to the plant, we do not regard it as an evidence of special concession to the root to fertilize about it.

Having failed to adopt toward agriculture an economic and governmental policy when we could have done it deliberately and effectually, which would have given greater strength to stand against the present strain, it remains to be seen when we confront this agricultural crisis, which holds the possibilities of the gravest general consequences, whether we will now act energetically and with practical judgment, or just drift along until that which is threatened is upon us. I have appealed to the Secretary of Commerce, to the Secretary of State, to the President, and now to you. I have done my best to formulate and explain a definite policy carrying concrete suggestions. If they are not sound, point out wherein they are not sound. If any of you have plans which are better, bring them forward now. This is no time to "trim" and "hedge" or "pass the buck." With vigorous, whole-hearted, determined effort we can speed the rehabilitation of Europe and save ourselves, or we can go on resoluting, speculating, and orating until the disaster which is threatened becomes a reality.

The farmer is being smothered in his surplus crops. mains to be seen whether he is going to be provided with an export market now or a post-mortem later. That is a fact. That is the situation which challenges not to words of concern now and eloquent words of sympathy later, but to definite, determined effort to reach the definite objective which I have indi-I thank you, gentlemen, for your close attention, and with all the earnestness which I can command I appeal for definite action before we are called upon to pay a greater penalty for inaction than the present is imposing.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I now renew the point of no quorum.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. McLaughlin]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order comes before that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman if he will not withhold his point for a while. Some gentlemen want to talk on the bill, and we hope to close debate to-day.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the point.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas withdrews the point of no quorum, and the gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I first ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Under the privilege I wish to print a resolution recently passed by the National Consumers' League of New York and also a brief resolution embracing recommendations of the committee of the National League of Women Voters. These are resolutions indorsing the work of the Federal Trade Commission, concerning which something has been said in the debate.

The resolutions referred to are as follows:

Resolution of the National Consumers' League, 44 East Twenty-third Street, New York, May 24, 1919.

Whereas the Federal Trade Commission is the object of renewed attack and is threatened with abolition or with the loss of important powers; and

Whereas the service rendered by this commission in keeping the light turned upon industry as it affects consumers is unique and valuable: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the National Consumers' League, at its executive committee meeting held in New York City on May 12, reaffirms its approval of the work hitherto done in the public interest by the Federal Trade Commission, and urges Congress to continue undiminished the present powers of the commission and to grant adequate appropriations for its [Recommendations of the food supply and demand committee of the National League of Women Voters, Mrs. Edward P. Costigan, chair-man.]

man.]
The food supply and demand committee, as a result of its investigations, is convinced—
That the high cost of living is in large measure caused by unorganized and wasteful methods in the distribution and use of food;
That unfair manipulation and private control by large food organizations and combinations of markets and the facilities for trade and distribution are discouraging production and increasing prices to consumers; and
That our Nation is morally obligated to make it possible for nourishing food to be brought and kept within reach of every home, and especially all growing children.

Therefore the committee recommends:

NATIONAL PROGRAM,

1. The continued indorsement of prompt and effective legislation by Congress providing Federal regulation for the meat-packing industry.

2. The continued support of the Federal Trade Commission as a highly important governmental agency for the discovery and prevention of unfair trade practices.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the bill now before us is the result of careful thought and deliberation growing out of more than three vears' exhaustive hearings on the packer question before the House and Senate Committees on Agriculture. Besides the thousands of pages of testimony resulting from these hearings, the committee had access to the printed reports of the Federal Trade Commission on the same subject. It is not necessary to recite here any portion of the hearings. Members have had abundant opportunity to inform themselves as to the facts alleged and the contentions that have been made.

The committee has agreed that constructive legislation is now necessary because of the practices that have been indulged in in the past by some of the large packers and stockyard com-panies, and because of the large holdings and tremendous volume of business transacted by the packers, all of which is of direct concern to the entire citizenship of the country, and also because of the fact that there has been a general feeling of apprehension and dissatisfaction, extending over a period of years, of the manner in which the industry is conducted.

It is not the thought of any member of the committee to cripple or harass legitimate business in any way. Everyone knows that there is a tremendous merit and service in the great distributing agency that has been built up by the packers and stockyard companies. Legislation should by all means help rather than hinder the fair and legitimate conduct of this business in the interest of all concerned. Everyone who has anything to do with the products handled from the producer to the consumer is entitled to just and proportionate consideration.

In considering this very important matter, one is inclined to be confronted with two conflicting lines of reasoning. First, the argument that constructive supervisory legislation should be enacted, based on the volume of testimony and information that has been placed at the disposal of the committee and the Con-Congress has decided that the railroads are of such public importance and transact such an immense volume of business that affects the welfare of the entire public that they are without question subject to Federal regulation.

The packers of the country transact even a larger volume of business annually than all of the railroads of the country combined, and it can hardly be said that the railroads, that carry the necessities of life, can be any more subject to regulation than corporations who prepare and distribute such necessities.

On the other hand there are those in Congress and out of Congress who, because of the great number of bureaus and commissions that were appointed during the war emergency, have become so prejudiced against Federal supervising agencies that they would blindly go to the opposite swing of the pendulum and advocate doing away with all regulation and supervision of every kind. Thoughtful men, however, surely realize that such a policy would result in great detriment to the people of our country in the present stage of our development. Even those engaged in the packing business, with but few exceptions, now agree that the sooner sane, supervisory legislation is passed by Congress the better it will be for all concerned. Such was in substance the testimony of Thomas Wilson of the Wilson Packing Co., before the committee.

While there was a difference of opinion among members of the committee as to the most satisfactory and most effective place to lodge the supervisory authority, some favoring the Federal Trade Commission, others favoring a special commission, and a majority favoring the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Agriculture was finally agreed upon mainly because of the fact that the department now has in the Bureau of Markets, the Bureau of Animal Industry, and the Pure Food Inspection Department scores of employees on the ground at the several market centers who can be of material assistance to the Secretary in gathering the information needed to insure intelligent action by him in exercising his supervisory relationship. In other words, it is the thought of the committee that the lodging of the supervisory power with the Secretary of Agriculture will make for both economy and efficiency.

Without taking too much of the committee's time, I wish to call your attention to one argument that was made in the recent hearings on the part of several witnesses, namely, that the present retail prices were due to the action of the retailers and not to the wholesalers. To use a slang expression, there seems to be a general tendency to "pass the buck."

In order to show that present prices are not wholly due to the influence of the retailer or the wholesaler but that possibly both are in a degree responsible, I have gathered from the National Provisioner, published by the Institute of American Meat Packers, comparative figures showing the wholesale prices of hogs and cattle in February, 1916, before the war, and April, 1921. I shall read only a portion of these figures but shall insert all of them in the Record for the information of the committee.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman please tell us some of these figures?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I will give them to you.

The second week in April, 1921, the average price of cattle on hoof in the Chicago market had fallen to $8.25 a hundred. This is the same price at which they sold the first week in February, 1916. The first week in February, 1914, the average price was $8.30. So live cattle may be said to have returned to the prewar level.

Let us see to what extent packers gave the public the benefit of this return to former levels by making a comparison between their wholesale prices the first week in February, 1916, and the second week in April, 1921. All prices given are quotations from the National Provisioner.

Mr. DUNBAR. What price did the packers sell their meat for when they were purchasing animals at $14 on the hoof?
Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I will get to that a little

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I will get to that a little later, and if I should forget, the gentleman will please remind me of it. Now, I have here cattle for the New York and Chicago markets.

Totaling it and striking an average, you will find that while in February, 1916, and April, 1921, the price of cattle on foot at Chicago was the same-in other words, that in April, 1921, we had returned to the prewar rates as to price of cattle on foot-the wholesale price of beef and beef products, taken from the National Provisioner, was 52.6 per cent higher in 1921 than in 1916.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman must take into consideration, however, the fact that wages paid in the preparation of those meats were 100 per cent higher.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I anticipated the gentleman would raise that question, and I am coming to that very shortly. I want to be absolutely fair. Now, let us take up the question of hogs.

HOGS AND PORK-PRODUCT PRICES.

The last time before this spring that hogs sold below $8 a hundred, Chicago average, was the first week in February, 1916, when the price was $7.90. April 25, 1921, Chicago average price of hogs fell to $7.85. Comparative prices of hog products, taken from National Provisioner, issues of February 12, 1916, and April 30, 1921, are as follows (prices in cents per pound):

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. How does this law remedy the situation, or how will it remedy the situation?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Oh, well, now if this bill becomes law, it will be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to exercise supervisory authority over the entire industry, and when unfair practices are discovered anywhere along the line it will be his duty to correct them, of course.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Is he given authority here to take away the permits from these people and suspend operations when they are forcing prices down?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. He is given authority to make orders in any individual case when he discovers that there are some practices which are wrong.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. And suspend that operation? Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. That particular operation, subject, of course, to appeal to the court.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I want to ask the gentleman We are paying 65 cents a pound for loin steaks out at this market on Fourteenth Street, the Arcade Market. Is there anything in this bill here which will tend to regulate the retail business?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. No, sir. Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. The gentleman may have misunderstood my question-to regulate the packers so that it will affect the retailers in a way that the consumers will secure benefit from it. It is an outrage that we have to pay 65 cents a pound for meat we buy every day out here.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I shall have something to say later on with respect to retailers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Is there something in this

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. This bill has nothing to do with the retailers, nothing whatever.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I will. Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. If it will not interrupt the gentleman too much, do I understand it is the purpose of this bill to regulate the price charged by the packer?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Oh, no.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I wanted to be clear about it. It is my understanding they did not regulate prices.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I was simply giving these figures because it was stated in our hearing that the price of the packers had come down and there was no need for any regulation along any line.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I agree with the proposition that prices should not and could not well be regulated, but I thought the gentleman's answer to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Johnson] might have been a little misleading.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Just for a question.

Mr. DUNBAR. For a few observations regarding the remarks made by the gentleman from Mississippi. I will state that you can go down to the Chesapeake Bay and buy oysters at 40 cents a bushel. You can go down on the docks and buy them for $1.50 a bushel. When you shuck those oysters you obtain a gallon of oysters, yet when you go to a dairy restaurant and purchase oysters they charge you 40 cents for a half a dozen.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. DUNBAR. Now, you are attempting to regulate the packers. Does not the gentleman think that the bill then would be applicable to regulate those who in the District of Columbia deal in oysters; and if so, how would the gentleman solve the problem?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Of course, this bill is not intended to deal with that subject, and there has been so much foreign matter already brought into this discussion that I do not care to discuss it-

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I trust the gentleman does not interpret my question as being foreign matter. It is a condition that exists in this District which flows directly from the packers of this country undertaking to regulate articles which come down through the retailer to the consumer. The gentleman does not understand my question to be a foreign question?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. It is foreign in this particular, that this bill has nothing to do with the retailer, and was never intended to have anything to do with him. If such legislation is contemplated, it should be entirely outside of this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. It is generally noised about the House this afternoon that the packers are in favor of the What about that? I have heard some gentlemen say they have discussed it with them, and they say it is a good thing; that they have got to have something to satisfy the people, and therefore let them have this. Does the gentleman know anything about that?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I know that this bill is not what the packers want. They do not want any legisla-

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Would they regard this as very harmful to their interests?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I can not say as to that. I do not think anybody wants legislation to be harmful to the legitimate interests of anybody.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. But to the illegitimate interests, then?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Yes. This bill will certainly take care of evil and illegitimate practices, in my judg-

Mr. HUDSPETH. I want to state to the gentleman that if I understand this bill, if it has any power at all, it puts in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture power in preventing combinations putting up prices of meat on the hoof. Is not

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. And the same thing as to selling the finished products. In either buying or selling, it applies.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The wholesale prices? Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Of course, it could not affect the retailer.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. No.

Mr. HUDSPETH. You have given the prices of cattle in 1916 and 1919. Does the gentleman contend that the price of mutton in April, 1921, was lower than it was in January of

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I would like to have 10 minutes more.

I yield five minutes more to the gentleman. Mr. HAUGEN.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I did not gather the figures for sheep. I will say to the gentleman that I believe the same figures for sheep would be even more startling than those for hogs and cattle.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I will state to the gentleman that I am sorry he did not, because we got a good deal less for our mutton in Texas in April of 1921 than in January of 1916.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. The figures show that while the prices of hogs on foot had fallen in 1921 to the prewar level, the packers were receiving for their products 52.9 more in April, 1921, than they were in 1916.

Now, with reference to the statement of the gentleman from

It has been argued by some that the grounds afforded the packers for present wholesale prices are warranted because of the decrease in the value of by-products. In other words, that in order to play even on the entire business more must be charged for the meat in order to make up for the loss on by-products, but an investigation of this contention reveals the fact that present prices of meat are unwarranted, even taking into account the low prices received for by-products. For example, hides were about 22 cents a pound in February, 1916, and 12 cents in 1921. Take a 60-pound hide from a 1,000-pound steer and the packer would get $6 less for it now. Spread this $6 over the dressed weight of 550 pounds and it would amount to about 12 cents a pound and would justify that much advance on the price of the beef, but not more.

The advance in rates to the Atlantic seaboard, which is longer than the average haul, is less than half a cent a pound between these periods. Add this one-half cent to the one and one-eighth cents and we have one and five-eighths cents. The labor cost, in spite of the reduction of last March, is still somewhat higher than in 1916. To be liberal, add three-eighths of a cent to the one and five-eighths cents for increased labor costs and we have two cents a pound above 1916 prices justified by these three items. The entire labor cost does not add more than a cent a pound to the cost of the meat. The packers have repeatedly said that of their cost of sales 85 per cent is accounted for by what they pay for the live stock.

It has also been contended before the committee that the prices paid by the consumers are due wholly to the fact that retailers have insisted on keeping their prices on the war-time basis, notwithstanding the fact that wholesalers have materially reduced their prices. While I hold no brief for the retailers or anybody else, it is only fair to say that retail prices have been constantly dropping since the war level was reached and are dropping every day at the present time.

As an illustration of this fact, I call to your attention a recent scale of prices by one of the large grocery concerns of this city, which was published in the Post under date of April 16, 1921. The comparative prices on 33 items show that the average price charged by this particular retail concern, which, as I judge, is a fair basis on which to interpret the "eduction of similar business concerns, is but a little more than half now what it was during the war level. The 33 items are as follows:

Item.	War- time peak.	One year ago.	To-day.

It will be noted that the value of these 33 items during war time was $14.08. Their value one year ago was $12.03, while their value at the present time is only $7.49. To put it in percentages, the prices charged to-day are 47 per cent less than those charged during war time and 38 per cent less than the prices charged a year ago. Reduced to the basis of the pur-chasing power of a dollar, 53 cents now buys what a dollar would buy during the war and 62 cents buys what a dollar bought one year ago. When these retail prices are compared with the reduction made by the wholesalers on their products it will show a larger proportionate reduction on the part of the retailers than has been put into effect by the wholesalers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I want to say that there is not a word of truth in the Post statement. Here is a pair of shoes that I bought two weeks ago from the Stetson Shoe Co., on F Street, for $13.50. In my home market, where thousands of head of cattle are sold every few months, or offered for sale, you can not get any price at all for hides to-day, but the Stetson Shoe Co. have not reduced their price 10 cents in the last five years. I give the place, name, and date in order that anyone interested can make an investigation. It is the Stetson Shoe Co., on F Street, in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. In the figures that I have given I have not said anything about shoes. The Post report the gentleman refers to may or may not be true, but the figures to which I call attention are true, for I have verified them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I will.

Mr. FOCHT. As to the statement made there, does that apply to the cuts of beef we buy in the market, and cuts of pork, and of mutten and of lamb, that you say are 40 per cent less now than during the war time?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. The figures I have put in this last statement are prices on 33 items applying mostly to groceries, but butter, milk, lard, shoulders, and so forth, are included. It does not apply to fresh meat.

Mr. FOCHT. I understood the complaint, especially from the Southwest, is due to the low price of live stock in the Chicago market. In going through the Chicago market I do not understand how they add 300 or 400 per cent to the cost of them, how this packing institution is such a beneficent organization, where they refine a steer into something so delectable for the table that they want to charge 60 cents a pound for it down at the market, where they pay only 3 or 4 cents for it in the State of Nebraska. May we have an explanation of that?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I will say to the gentle-nan-

Mr. FOCHT. I am talking of what I practically experience. Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. What the gentleman is talking about is the very thing we are attempting to get relief from through this legislation.

through this legislation.
Mr. FOCHT. Does the gentleman think he will accomplish it?
Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Nebraska. I think we will go a little way toward accomplishing it. Now, Mr. Chairman, further:
During the recent hearings held by the committee, Mr. Everett

C. Brown, chairman of the National Live Stock Exchange, Union Stock Yards, Chicago, asserted that the present prices paid by the consumers were due entirely to the refusal of the retailers to drop from war-time prices. On page 281 of the hearings, Mr. Brown said:

Governmental figures will show you gentlemen conclusively that wholesale meat prices have followed the downward trend of live-stock prices, so that to-day the retailer can and does buy his meats at wholesale at practically prewar prices. Have any of you gentlemen been able to buy your meats at retail at prices anywhere near the prewar basis?

In considering Mr. Brown's statement it might be well to notice first the fact that all of the large hotels of the country, as well as the entire dining-car service of the railroads, buy their meats as well as other produce at wholesale, and the prices charged at hotels and in dining cars can not by any means be charged up to the retailers, but the statement of Mr. Brown that wholesale meat prices have dropped to a prewar basis is not substantiated by the facts. The National Provisioner, which is the organ of the Institute of American Meat Packers, as before stated, in the number of April 26, 1919, gives the average price of cattle on foot as $15.85. The same paper for the corresponding week of April, 1921, gives the price of cattle on foot as $8.25, or $7.60 lower. That is to say, the packers paid for cattle on foot in 1919 92 per cent more than they did in 1921. I shall place in the RECORD the wholesale prices of beef and beef products as contained in the National Provisioner of April 26, 1919. Totaling these figures and comparing them with the 1921 figures, to which I have already called your attention, it is ascertained that the wholesale price of beef and beef products has dropped 33.6 per cent in April, 1921, as compared with April, 1919. That is to say, while the packers paid on foot in 1919 92 per cent more than they did in 1921, yet their wholesale prices in 1921 have only dropped 33.6 per cent as compared with the same week of 1919.

Now, as to hogs, the same number of the Provisioner gives the average price of hogs on April 26, 1919, as $20.45, while the price for the corresponding week in 1921 was $7.85, or a reduction of $12.60 a hundred. Carrying out the same comparison as in cattle, the price of hogs in 1919 was 160 per cent higher than in 1921, but the wholesale price of pork and pork products, as shown by the figures I shall place in the Record, taken also from the National Provisioner, shows that the average wholesale price of pork and pork products had only dropped 30.8 per cent in April, 1921, as compared with April, 1919. That is to say, that while the packers paid for hogs on foot 160 per cent more in 1919 than they did in 1921, the wholesale price of pork and pork products had dropped in April, 1921, to only 30.8 per cent less than the price charged in 1919.

The detailed figures from which the above percentages were obtained are taken from the National Provisioner and read as follows:

grocers the prices of the retailer have dropped 47 per cent below the war prices and 38 per cent below a year ago. In other words, the retail prices have dropped more in one year than the wholesale prices of the packers have dropped in two So that the contention of those who declare that the need for supervision of the packing industry which may possibly have existed a few years ago does not exist now can not be substantiated by the facts and figures.

Mr. Chairman, I would like, if I had time, to go into many other phases of this question, but the limited time does not permit me to do so. I would like, however, in view of some of the testimony that was placed in the record by the stockyards agents, to call your attention to some interesting information that appears on page 91 of the hearings, before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in the Senate, during the Sixty-fifth Congress, when Senate bill No. 5305 was under dis-There appears on this page a report from the State cussion. Railway Commission of Nebraska, a statement of the prices charged in the Omaha stockyards for hay and grain for the years 1914 and 1915 and 1916. These are not figures of the Federal Trade Commission, but are taken from State reports, and have never been questioned. The report shows:

It is not my belief, Mr. Chairman, that this legislation when it is placed on the statute books will completely eliminate all of the objectionable practices that have been discovered to exist in this industry, but I do believe it will be a step in the right direction and that the information that will be gained by the Secretary under the operation of the provisions will place such positive and accurate data in the hands of Congress that we may be able from time to time to make such additions and improvements as are found necessary.

My own conviction is that the cooperative effort of producers and consumers to get closer together in an effort to reduce the spread between them is the most favorable tendency of our time, so far as the question of marketing and distribution is concerned. I believe that the cooperatives should be given every possible encouragement. As stated previously, the present marketing system which has been built up at great cost and effort should not be discontinued nor discarded, but wherever waste and uneconomic practices are discovered they should be eliminated, and wherever improvement can be made by cooperative effort these improvements should be sanctioned and adopted by those interested in our marketing system.

For the information of the committee I desire to include in my remarks a brief letter that I recently wrote to the editor of the Omaha Bee, at Omaha, Nebr., bearing on the Tincher grain futures bill, known as H. R. 5676, which recently passed the House, together with a brief editorial from the Bee published on the same date, May 20, 1921, and a letter from Hon. Thomas Lynch, of Omaha, in answer to that correspondence. With your permission I shall read Mr. Lynch's letter and place the others in the Record, so that the entire correspondence in question may appear in logical sequence. [Applause.]

The matter referred to is as follows:

TINCHER BILL AND EXCHANGE—OPPOSITION COMES MOSTLY FROM OB-JECTION TO THE COOPERATIVES.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 16.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE BEE:

To the Editor of the Bee:

The recent press dispatches from Chicago and other grain exchanges to the effect that the exchanges will close down in the event that H. R. 5676, known as the Thecher bill, becomes law, will, in my judgment, warrant my calling to the attention of your readers a few facts in connection with the progress of this legislation.

Extended hearings were held on the subject of "grain futures" during the Sixty-sixth Congress, and another week's hearings held during the present Congress when all of the exchanges were heard. The general result was that the Tincher bill received the indorsement of all concerned. Mr. Wells, of Minneapolis; Mr. Griffin, of Chicago; Mr. Wright, of Omaha; Mr. Moffat, of Kansas City, and other exchange men said in substance. "The Tincher bill is all right. It is a good bill." After the committee had reported the bill out with a few slight come in from all over the grain belf. To say this was a great surprise to me, as a member of the committee, is putting it very mild.

The principal advantages of the Tincher bill are two: First. does not be seen the Secretary of Agriculture may ascertain in time by a system of reports whether there are practices on the exchanges which result in amanipulation of the market. The need and merit of these provisions are so apparent that no argument is needed to support them. The specific objections of the exchanges now are made to the following sections of the bill, which, for the information of Nebraska farmers and grain men, I am giving in till.

Subdivisions (b), (d), and (e) of section 5 and all of section 8:

"Sac, 5. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to designate boards of trade comply with the following conditions and requirements:

"Sc, 5. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to designate boards of trade comply with the following conditions and requirements:

"Sac, 5. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to designate boards of trade com Subdivision (e), which is being so vigorously protested, provides that the exchanges designated by the Secretary of Agriculture as marketing places must by their rules admit to membership any duly authorized executive officer of any lawfully formed and conducted cooperative associations of producers having adequate financial responsibility, provided that the officers of such associations shall comply with the rules and regulations of the exchange. This is really the point which draws the heaviest fire from the opponents of the bill. The president of one of the larger exchanges says in a letter recently addressed to me: "As amended the bill." * * apparently intends that we will be forced to admit cooperative elevators to membership in grain exchanges." The cooperative associations distribute their profits prorata to their membership, and rightly so. This practice constitutes the chief purpose for which the producers have been organized. The exchanges argue that the distribution of these profits constitutes a "rebate" and that the practice of rebates is contrary to the rules of the exchange.

the chief purpose for which the producers have been organized. The exchanges argue that the distribution of these profits constitute a "rebate" and that the practice of rebates is contrary to the rules of the exchange.

It is hardly necessary to state, let alone argue, that the distribution of the profits of an association of producers to its own members is in no sense whatever a rebate, as the term "rebate" is understood in the grain or any other business. In my judgment, the fight of the exchanges to keep the cooperative associations from holding membership thereon is an unjust and a losing fight and that the sooner the exchanges recognize this fact the better it will be for all concerned.

The cooperative associations, which have proven such a great benefit to the marketing system of a number of European countries, have come to America to stay. The cooperative program is growing by leaps and bounds. The hostile attitude toward the cooperatives on the part of those who champion the present system of marketing and distribution will not stand the acid test of economy and utility. The most direct and most economic method of distribution from producer to consumer will ultimately be adopted. The fair-minded men will recognize the good that is in the present system and welcome all of the beneficial suggestions and changes that will come through the experience of the cooperative associations.

My own opinion is that no grain exchange will close down if the Tincher bill is enacted into law. Such deciarations at this time are in the nature of pure "bluff": but should any or all of the exchanges rather close down than to submit their transactions to the light of publicity, then I suspect that the American farmer and local grain dealer would say, "Let them close." The world will go on just the same and others will perform the function of marketing in perhaps as good or a better manner than those to whom has been entrusted this important duty.

COOPERATION AND COMMERCE.

Two strangely clashing notes are sounded by two eminent gentlemen, Secretary Hoover and Congressman McLaughlin. Each is a thinker, a reasoner, versed in affairs and taken into public life from a sphere wherein his intellectual development had brought him note. Each is familiar with the philosophy as well as the processes of social development, and it may seem surprising that they are at opposite ends of one of the great questions of the day. Writing to the farmers of Nebraska, through the Bee, Congressman McLaughlin pleads for cooperation, which means close consolidation of interests that all may be well served. Speaking to the National Mannfacturers' Association, Secretary Hoover pleads for individual rather than cooperative effort.

Perhaps the truth may be found somewhere between the two. Too much cooperation may lead to oppressive monopoly, while too much individualism is likely to beget competition that is ruinous. The natural tendency of business is toward greater units, with the definite understanding that finally the point is reached where the addition of units becomes wasteful rather than efficient.

The cooperation against which Mr. Hoover argues is the kind made possible under the Webb law, whereby exporters are enabled to protect themselves against such combinations as the German group that purchased raw materials for all its members, the bid of the group being the bid of each of its members. This organization, by whatever name the bid of each of its members. This organization, by whatever name the tore and under whatever flag it operated, was familiar to American exporters for some years before the war and its operations were not admired. To offset it, the Webb law permits producers to sell just as the others buy, a control of price that seems to be warranted under the croumstances. Unrestricted competition is possible, but highly improbable in the foreign trade as matters stand, regardless of the pleamade by the Secretary of Commerce, who sees but one side of the picture, no matter how comprehensi

Hon. M. O. McLaughlin, M. C.,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I have read your letter in the morning Bee with a great deal of interest. Your stand in regard to the cooperatives is correct. The thing has already arrived in Great Britain and Ireland and nothing can stop it here.

Particularly I want to refer to the effort to institute cooperatives in the buying and selling of live stock at the open markets. I have been told that these cooperatives have been boycotted by the members of the exchange at the stockyards, Omaha, and that a fine is levied upon any member of the exchange who buys from or sells to a cooperative. The members of the exchange who buys from or sells to a cooperative. The members of the exchange are all likeable fellows, real outdoor western men, who make big money and spend it with an open hand; but their system is wrong. It involves having an unlimited number of commission men at the yards, members of the exchange, and it sometimes happens that many members do not get a single carload of stock on a certain day. On other days many of them will finish their work by 10 a. m., and even on the biggest market days half the number of commission men could attend to the business. On account of this slituation the exchange has forced commissions higher and higher. The producer pays. The exchange has made stringent rules allowing each member to go out and solicit business only for a certain number of days each to go out and solicit business only for a certain number of days each month, etc.

The cooperative does not need to solicit business, because each upcountry member is a solicitor. He wants his company to get more business so he can get more dividends. The exchange members realize this and are prepared to fight the cooperative. But, as you pointed out, they are on the wrong side and ought to get in at once. There should be at the South Omaha yards not more than half a dozen commission firms, each one cooperative. The one organized from the ranch country would not conflict at all with the one organized from eastern Nebraska. It would be to the interest of the former to sell feeders on as high a market as possible, and the latter would try to buy them on as low a market as possible.

I think you already appreciate that the present method is econom-market as possible.

I think you already appreciate that the present method is economically absurd, and I hope you will continue your endeavors to accomplish something for the producer and consumer, these two being the losers under the present system.

Yours, very truly,

THOMAS LYNCH.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, there are several bills pending in the House and Senate on the subject of the development of rural homes by a system of governmental cooperation in the reclamation of arid and semiarid lands. A few days ago I introduced in the House a bill, H. R. 6048, providing for the same purposes—providing a national scheme for the same purposes, to include the reclamation of swamp lands, overflowed lands, and cut-over lands, in addition to the arid and semiarid lands of the West.

I do not want to trespass upon the time of the committee this afternoon by submitting the remarks I have prepared in explanation of my bill, but I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that I may incorporate in the RECORD my explanation and analysis of that bill for the information of the Members of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the statement referred to:

OUTLINE OF THE COOPERATIVE RECLAMATION ACT, H. R. 6048.

The reclamation of waste land by means of irrigation or drainage has for many years been one of the settled policies of nearly all civilized governments. The reclamation of land by means of irrigation has been a settled policy of the United States for more than 20 years. It is now proposed to authorize the reclamation of lands by other means, thus making such policy applicable to all parts of the country.

Since the principal problem involved in the utilization of arid or semiarid, swamp, overflow, or logged-off land is a financial one, the financial plan which this bill contains is its most important feature. The financial problems incidental to land reclamation exist because of the rather long period of nonproduction which must elapse while the construction of reclamation works is in progress and while the settler is improving and preparing his land for crops. This will vary from 4 to 10 years, depending upon the magnitude of the works and the financial plan adopted. Since no legitimate profit is possible until the land has been developed to a condition of practically normal production, most reclamation projects that are privately financed prove disappointing, and because of the many disap-pointments that have occurred private capital has practically retired from this field.

To day the surplus lands of the country that possess any great agricultural value require reclamation by some means or other. While it is agreed that the reclamation of most of such land can only be successfully accomplished through the cooperation of the Government, it is believed that such work should be done in pursuance of a plan which, once inaugurated, will be self-continuing.

Such work can only be initiated through the use of funds appropriated by Congress. But inasmuch as valuable assets will be created through the wise expenditure of such appropriations, these assets should, in turn, be made the basis of further financing, thus obviating the need of any further ad-vances by Congress. Also, all sums thus appropriated should be repaid to the United States with interest. All of these results can readily be accomplished under the plan contained in this bill.

In working out this plan, the fullest advantage has been taken of existing land-credit devices provided by State and Federal legislation in order that the money used for the construction of reclamation works or for loans to veterans might be returned to the fund in the shortest possible time so as to become available for the reclamation of other land and the making of other loans, at the same time providing for the payment by the settler of the cost of such work and of such loans over a long period of years at a reasonable rate of interest.

The basis for the organization of a reclamation project is a drainage or irrigation district, as the case might be. This district has full taxing powers under the State law and the right to incur indebtedness. Such district shall be empowered to enter into a contract with the United States for the reclamation of lands within its limits, and shall vote its bonds for an amount equal to the cost of such reclamation, such cost also including interest on all advances during the period of construction. When a district has issued its bonds and deposited them with the Federal Farm Loan Board the Secretary of the Interior may proceed with the construction of the project.

The cost of constructing the first series of projects will be paid from the appropriation provided in the bill. Then when all the property of a district that is subject to assessment for the payment of its bonds is found by the Federal Farm Loan Board to have a value equal to twice the value of such bonds, such board shall sell such bonds to the investing public and the money received from such sale shall be placed in the cooperative reclamation fund, to be available for the reclamation of the lands of other projects. These will constitute a second series of projects, this process being continued series by series, without requiring any further appropriation by Congress.

without requiring any further appropriation by Congress.

The bill authorizes an appropriation of $500,000,000 to be expended over a period of 11 years, $30,000,000 during each of the first and second years, $40,000,000 the third year, and $50,000,000 each year for the next eight years.

The bill provides that the repayment of all advances made to a project from the appropriation shall begin 10 years after the completion of the works of such project under an amortization plan extending over a period not to exceed 40 years. The payment each year of 6 per cent of the total of such advances will liquidate this debt within this period with interest at 4 per cent.

The amount which will be available for this repayment will be derived from the sale of district bonds and from the payment annually into the fund of 1 per cent of the cost of each project. The amount that will be derived from these two sources will depend upon the time required for constructing the works of a project and for establishing a property value so the district bonds may be sold.

Assuming that the average time for constructing the works of a project is four years and that the accruing interest during such period, which shall be added to the amount actually expended, is 10 per cent of such amount, bonds would then be issued by the district amounting to 110 per cent of such actual expenditures. The sale at par value of ten-elevenths of such issue would return to the fund the amount that had actually been expended. This amount would immediately become available for the reclamation of other lands. The remaining oneeleventh of such bond issue would then be deposited in the fund, the annual installments for the repayment of the same being available for reinvestment, the accruing amounts finally to be applied on the repayment of the appropriation when such repayment begins. The 1 per cent of the cost of each project that will be paid into the fund each year will also be available for reinvestment and payment on account of the appro-The amount derived from these two sources will be sufficient to repay the appropriation with interest at 4 per cent, without diverting any part of the construction fund for such

Assuming that through the sale of district bonds the construction fund originally provided by appropriation can be turned over during an average period of six years, reclamation works costing about $3,000,000,000 can be constructed during the next 30 to 35 years.

The bill provides that the district bonds shall draw 5 per cent interest and be paid under an amortization plan during a period not exceeding 40 years. The payment each year of 1 per cent of the principal will retire the bonds within this period. Thus, while the entire cost of the project will be repaid into the fund by the district by the end of about the sixth year after the beginning of construction—being then available for the reclamation of other lands—the settler will repay such cost over a period of about 35 years through the payment of the bonds of his district, thus receiving all the benefits of long-term payments.

The annual payments of the settler on account of the reclamation of his land will be: Installment on the bonds of his district, including interest at 5 per cent and principal, 6 per cent; as additional funds for the repayment of the appropriation with interest, 1 per cent. These make a total payment of 7 per cent of the total amount of bonds issued, to begin one year after the works of the project are completed. No payments will have to be made during the period of construction.

Provision is made for the reclamation of public land in any district and for the sale of such lands to any qualified purchaser on easy terms of payment.

The Secretary of the Interior shall have control over the settlement of the land that is to be reclaimed. He shall establish the maximum area of the farm unit or holding in any project, and unless 80 per cent of all holdings in excess of the unit so established shall be reduced to such maximum area the Secretary shall not approve such project. The price and terms of payment of all excess holdings must be approved by him, and the owners of the same shall confer upon him an irrevocable power of attorney to sell such holdings to actual settlers according to the terms of a contract to be entered into with him by such owners before the project is approved.

For a period not less than six months former service men and women and the widows of men who have served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the war with Germany, or in any other war, or during the Mexican border trouble, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, if otherwise qualified, shall have a preference right of entry and purchase of all public lands and excess areas in a district.

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to improve any farm unit that may be available for entry or purchase by a veteran so it will be ready for actual cultivation, and he may also supervise the placing of other improvements upon such land provided such improvements are paid for by the State or the former owner of such land or by any other agency. The Secretary is also authorized to make short-term loans to any veteran, to an amount not to exceed $2,000, for improvements on his land or the purchase of live stock and equipment. This loan is to be repaid to the fund from the proceeds of a longterm loan which he shall negotiate through the Federal land bank as soon as the value of the property is sufficient for the purpose. The proceeds of this loan may also be used for the repayment of any loan made to a veteran by the State or by any other agency, or for the payment of all or any part of the purchase price of his land.

The bill provides a basis for the most practical cooperation with any State in placing veterans on reclaimed lands. By repaying the cost of reclamation through the payment of district bonds the annual installments for this purpose become a tax and will be paid as any other tax. Therefore, loans made by the State or from the fund can be secured by a first mortgage; and, since the existence of the district bonds will affect but little, if any, the loan value of the land, the maximum loan that is warranted by the value of land can always be made through the Federal land bank for the liquidation of such short-term obligations as the veteran may have to incur. These short-term loans and other obligations of the veteran will not likely have to run more than two to four years before their repayment in the manner provided, so only a relatively small amount of money will be required for a loan fund.

The Secretary of the Interior shall be authorized to complete projects already begun under the provisions of the existing reclamation act from the fund created by this act. But all reclamation projects, or units of projects, upon which actual construction work shall be commenced after the passage of this act, shall be organized in the manner described, and shall pay the cost of such works into the fund with interest.

It will not be claimed that the millions in our great cities and other congested centers who are to-day living in the lowest depths of poverty, and the other millions now in the swelling ranks of the unemployed, constitute the Nation's "first line of defense". On the contrary, these and the conditions account On the contrary, these and the conditions against which they are compelled to struggle, are felt to be the country's greatest menace. All forward-looking men and women are agreed that our national security depends upon the further development of our rural homes, not that the producing area of the country needs to be extended at this time, but that more men and women should be placed in possession of resources so they might more readily establish their economic independence. This can not be done by settling more of our population in the cities, but hey must be encouraged to return to the country, back to the land. Those who are most entitled to assistance in establishing their independence in this manner are included with the millions of young men and women who stepped forward to the defense of the country in the Great War, and who may, at any time, be called upon for further sacrifice. In what spirit will the next call be met? This is a serious question and one well worth considering right at this time.

Until the deep-seated causes of the present world-wide distress are removed, prosperity can not come back to us through any struggle that we might make for industrial supremacy. The odds are against us. Instead of spending sleepless nights over plans for controlling the markets of hundreds of millions of people too poor to buy, why not consider plans with a view to preventing our own people from sinking to the economic level of the people of Europe? The fact is, our overdeveloped industries have failed us at a most critical time. As a consequence of this, millions are now looking into a future that holds but little hope.

However, nature is more kind. She does not close the door in the face of her children, but her bounties are ever recurring. This is why those on the land are safe. But life in these perilous times for many, many millions in the great cities of this and other countries is most precarious. Armies and navies can not combat the forces which threaten the world to-day. Other means will have to be employed.

Only by increasing the purchasing power of our own people and the extension of our home markets can the economic balance in this country be restored. This can most readily be done through the further development of our own natural resources, but this must be in a way which will establish the economic independence of more people. More homes must be established, and these must be rural homes. Their existence will permanently strengthen the country's real "first line of which is the happiness, contentment, and loyalty of the great common people.

This is the broad purpose of the bill described. The appropriation each year for the next 11 years would just about pay for one first-class fighting ship. However, such appropriation would provide permanent homes for more than 100,000 people, and would afford permanent employment through new wants that would be created for as many more. This is the kind of constructive statesmanship which, through the operations of the reclamation act, have placed more than 250,000 people on once desert land, created a property value of more than $500,000,000, from which every year there is returned a gross revenue greatly exceeding the entire cost of the works that have been constructed by the Government.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in the observations that I shall make I not only want to express my opposition to this legislation but my opposition to all legislation of this character. It has been baneful in the past; it is baneful now; and will prove equally baneful

I am not here for the purpose of defending the packers or to excuse them for the impositions which they have practiced upon the people. There is a remedy whereby they may be reached directly. The law to reach them should be written on the statute books and enforced by the Department of Justice.

We have now about 80 departments or bureaus or divisions of government in Washington that are making laws for the people-laws that we have nothing to do with, and which are put in motion by bureau regulation and not through legislation by this Congress. There is an old maxim of law that "that nation is best off whose people are least harassed by vexatious We are going far afield from that. Our Government was framed to be democratic in form and representative in We are becoming less and less a democratic government in form, and we are developing more and more a bureaucratic form of government. Every day we are seeking here at each session to add to the powers of the bureaucrats in the Government of the United States. The report on this bill is bold and frank enough to say that it goes further than any previous legislation ever went along this line, and we are making, if you please, the Secretary of Agriculture the greatest autocrat in all this Government of ours.

Now, let us look for a moment at this measure. I have been sitting here all the way through this debate hoping that somebody would point out in this bill what relief is going to be brought to the people, and it has not been done up to this min-ute. Where is there in this bill anything that will secure you and me a pound of beef or pork or mutton or any other kind of meat cheaper than we now pay for it? It is not in this bill, but I there is in this bill provision to add to the burdens of the people, as is the case with all legislation of this character.

Has anybody ever paused to count the cost that the taxpayers will have to pay for this thing? That is one thing that we seem never to take account of in matters of this kind. We pick up these idealistic and altruistic schemes and put them on the statute books and look to the future to make provision for their enforcement, adding to the burdens of taxation. This will cost more than a million dollars before it can be put in working order. Instead of taking from the burdens of the people we are adding to them. And what is it going to do? It has been stated here on the floor that about 50 per centsome say 55, some 40, and some 58 per cent-of the animals that are slaughtered in this country are slaughtered by these five great packing concerns. This is meant for their regulation, but all of these others who are not offending likewise must come within the provisions for their regulation. The other 50 per cent, or 45 per cent, or whatever it may be, are going to be subjected to these constant annoyances that have become so burdensome that the business of this country is complaining, and has a right to complain, by reason of the constantly increasing vexations which are applied to various forms of business.

During this last campaign I had a concrete illustration of what the people are thinking about this thing, and I dare say that all of you have heard like complaints. A large business man in my district told me that he did not have his mail delivered by the mail carrier; that it was one of his favorite pastimes, through which he got some exercise, to go to the post office four or five times a day to get the mail for his concern, but that it had ceased to be a pleasure and a recreation, for every time he went there he did it with fear and trembling, lest he should find a long envelope from the Government of the United States asking for some kind of new-fangled report. They have pursued this thing until they have discouraged business to the point where business men are fearful to-day when they are called upon to invest in business enterprises. Now that the war is over we have got to look for some new pastime to amuse ourselves, and we are commencing again, nagging, nagging, nagging, at the business interests of this country. They got up this Federal business interests of this country. They got up this Federal Trade Commission, beautiful upon its face, as attractive as the virtues extolled in this bill, for the purpose of encouraging legitimate business and protecting it, if you please, against unjust competition. Was that purpose carried out? the same kind of provisions for regulation by the Trade Com-mission that this bill provides. They got up their regulations, and what is the result? The result is that they have done more to damn and discourage the business of this country than any other activity in the country, and if I had my way about it I would like to have the opportunity to-morrow to move to repeal the law, in the interest of the business of this country. A very prominent gentleman who was selected by President Wilson as one of the members of this commission told me that he was utterly amazed when he looked into the workings of this thing to find that instead of its being for the purpose of encouraging legitimate business and encouraging men to invest in business and assuring them of the protection of the Government in the conduct of good business it was just simply a nosing commission for the purpose of prying into everybody's business, finding fault with everybody's business, criticizing everybody's business, making it hard for anyone to do business, until they were destroying the business interests of this country to a very large degree.

You will remember that a number of years ago we passed a law providing that the railroads should not own parallel lines that were competing with each other, thinking that that was a detriment to the people. The war came along and proved that that was a fallacy, and that instead of being a bane to the people it would have been a blessing to the people had it been permitted. That old wizard of St. Paul, James J. Hill, who did more for the people of this country than any other one man in the way of promoting transportation, conceived that idea, and he saw its future usefulness go to pieces in an ill-timed decision. But when the Government took over these railroads they set that aside. They had to set it aside in order to do what? In order to subserve the best interests of the people and the best interests of our Government in time of war.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. And in passing the last railroad law we did away with many of those features and permitted consolidations in cases where there was competition under proper restrictions.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It was the same sort of a spirit, nagging at business, crying out against the railroads of this country. I am not here to defend them for the wrongs that they committed in the past, or are committing now, or may commit in the future, but we were killing the goose that laid the golden eggs when, through the legislation of this body and the legislation of the several States, we made it not only impossible for them to extend their lines but made it impossible for them to keep up the lines that were already in existence,

People thought they were lying when they said they could not carry passengers for 2 cents a mile, but they told us that if we would give an increase of 15 per cent on freight rates they would not only improve the rolling stock but make extensions and do the business of this country as it ought to be done. We did not give it to them, and it was not given to them by the commission, and so when the war clouds broke and that great emergency came we found that they were telling the truth in the dilapidated condition of the roads turned over to the Government. So it is with all of this character and class of legis-Why, the time is rapidly approaching when it will not be possible for us to set a hen without getting the consent of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.
Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not true that when we started out to regulate the railroads we started out with the idea of getting the rates down, but regulation has reversed the thing until they have got them up where we can not get them down, and it is a system by which they levy a tax on us largely brought about by too much regulation?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Absolutely; and we are paying the We are paying an awful price for it, and we do not know what the future is going to be in the railroad business of this country

Mr. TINCHER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOOD of Indiana. For a question.

Mr. TINCHER. Does the gentleman mean that the high rates were brought about by the Government control and activity?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That had a very large part in bringing it about, and this legislation will have a similar influence in the output of food.

Mr. TINCHER. Would the gentleman be in favor of repealing the interstate commerce law?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I would not be in favor of repealing the interstate commerce law, but I would be in favor of enacting a law that would govern its control and transactions. I would not leave it to a set of men who with every change of wind change the regulations. The Interstate Commerce Commission knew, or should have known, the conditions that the railroads were in before they were taken over by the Government, and knew, or should have known, the necessities that existed as a matter of fact, but they yielded to the clamor of the people and to this legislative body and the several legislative bodies of the States. They are only mortal and just as susceptible to influence as we are susceptible to influence here. A great mistake was made then and we are making a mistake here, and we will pay the penalty for giving to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to make law. That is what you are doing. You let them get the nose of the camel under the tent, and they will have the whole animal in before you know it and criticize anybody that dares to say a word. We are becoming bureaucratic, and this is the most striking illustration we have had of this fact up to date.

No; we had better get back to the old practice, and instead of hampering business and regulating it to death we should say to the business of the country, to the men who have the innate genius to do big business, do your best and the laws of the country will protect you as long as you live within the law. That is the kind of thing we want. If we had had the kind of regulation provided for in this bill years ago, what would the country be to-day? Would there be a single transcontinental railroad built? No; not one. Will there ever be another built under the present system? Who would venture a dollar in an enterprise of that character? How many of you would advise a friend to invest a dollar in that kind of an enterprise? you gentlemen destroy the great packing industries of the country? I want to say that the greatest encouragement, the greatest incentive that there is for men who raise cattle, hogs, and sheep, is to be found in these large concerns. Why, no one knows-I expect it is impossible for any of us here to calculate the amount of money that these men are turning over and over. There is not a man here that lives in a town of any considerable size that does any considerable amount of banking business but what knows that these packers are drawing on them in the shape of loans every day for money and more money with which to conduct their enormous business,

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The only conclusion that I can draw from the gentleman's remarks is that he is in favor of doing away with all regulations of public business in the country the regulation of combination and capital; that he would throw the doors wide open and let the people take their chances.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I am not in favor of that. I am in favor of regulating them by law, but not through bureaucratic rule.

Mr. KINCHELOE. This is law.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; it is only an excuse. You are putting into the hands of the authorities the authority to make law or regulations given the force of law.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman said he would be in favor of voting for a bill to repeal the Federal Trade Commission act.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I would.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Would the gentleman be in favor of repealing the law that created the Interstate Commerce Commission for the regulation of railroads?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I would not, because of the fact that the transportation business of this country is a public business.

Mr. TINCHER. So is eating.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If so, why do you not give the Secretary of Agriculture the right to control eating? There is nothing in business that a man does that does not in some way influence the public. It is like the pebble dropped into the sea that makes the ripple that constantly extends.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do not know how the gentleman voted on the Esch-Cummins bill—I voted against it—but does the gentleman not think that that law took all of the power away from the Interstate Commerce Commission that it had to regulate these utilities?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If I had had the writing of that bill, it would have been very differently written, and there would have been one provision in it which would have made it very difficult for a strike to occur which would tie up these great arteries of transportation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I have only five minutes and I want to make but one more observation. I want to show you what this bill does. You remember that we passed a law with a lot of regulations behind it a few years ago that the great indus-tries of this country could only do a certain amount of business, and that when they did a greater volume of business than that they became infractors of the law and were subject not only to the dissolution of their corporations but those who were guilty of the unlawful conduct were in danger of being incarcerated in the prisons of the country. What happened? When the war broke out the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War sent for the men at the head of our great steel corporations and asked them how much they could get out of their factories in a certain length of time. These gentlemen asked for a few days in which to get up the figures. They came back and reported the amount, and it was a great volume. The Government was glad to know that they could get out that much, but said that it needed more, and asked whether they could not expand and expand in order to satisfy the demands of the Government. One of these men said to the Secretaries, "I am surprised at you. You have suits pending now to prosecute us and dissolve our corporations, because we are getting out too much." You all know what happened to those suits. Never has there been one of them heard of from that day to this; an acknowledgment, if you please, by the Government that we had made a woeful mistake in passing that law.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. Did I understand the gentleman to say he is for regulating the workingmen by law?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No; I am not in favor of regulating the workingmen by law, and I am not in favor of the working-man doing more than his share in regulating this Government,

Mr. BURKE. What is the gentleman in favor of?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am in favor of every man doing his full duty to his God and his country.

Mr. BURKE. Do not the workingmen of the country do that? Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is their duty to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississ'ppi. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Iowa to yield him half a minute, in which I may ask him a question.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I want to call the gentleman's attention to a remark in the speech of the distinguished President in New York the day before yesterday. He said:

I speak for the least possible measure of Government interference with business.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I subscribe to that, exactly, and this Congress should subscribe to it and practice it by action. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I vield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Anderson].

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I listened with a good deal of interest to the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood], both of whom took for their text the idea that there should be less government in business. I have a good deal of sympathy with that view if these gentlemen have in mind the irresponsible, the arbitrary, and the sumptuary regulation that more or less necessarily characterized the government of the country during the period of the war. But if we follow the line of argument which these gentlemen pursued into action, it would mean that no matter how gross the abuses, no matter how complete the monopoly, no matter how great the industrial possibilities of oppression, the Government should take no action whatever to remedy them. The bill now under consideration does not propose any arbitrary, irresponsible, or sumptuary regulation of the packing industry or of the stockyards, or of those who transact business in them. In my judgment the bill now proposed contemplates a sound and conservative supervision of the packing industry and the stock-yards and those who deal upon them. There has not been very much discussion of the theory of this legislation or of its provisions. I would like to occupy the few minutes allotted to me in a discussion of the theory of the bill and its actual

It was asserted by the gentlemen who preceded me, to whom I have referred, that if there was to be a regulation of this industry it should be in direct prohibitions of law. We have been trying direct prohibitions of law for more than 100 years. They have proven absolutely inadequate for the regulation of industries as large and as industrially powerful as these with which we are now dealing.

Industry is progressive. The methods of industry and of manufacture and distribution change from day to day, and no positive iron-clad rule of law can be written upon the statute books which will keep pace with the progress of industry. we have not sought to write into this bill arbitrary and ironclad rules of law. We have rather chosen to lay down certain more or less definite rules, rules which are sufficiently flexible to enable the administrative authority to keep pace with the changes of methods in distribution and manufacture and in industry in the country. Do the gentlemen who oppose this legislation object to prohibiting unfair practices and devices in commerce? Do they desire that the business of the country, or any of it, shall continue to use unfair methods or devices in commerce? Do they object to prohibiting discriminations against localities or against persons of this potentially and actually powerful industry?

Do they object to prohibiting these industries from conspiring or agreeing with each other to monopolize the food industry I do not think that they object to that, No. although the position that they take would seem to indicate that If we are going to have any sort of supervision of this industry we must set up some agency which can acquire the necessary technical and practical information in regard to the operation of the industry and the manufacture and distribution of the products involved, so that that agency can deal with the offenses committed on the basis of the actual knowledge gained over a considerable period of time. I may say in passing that more revolutions have resulted from the control of the food supply of nations and the inability of people to get food at a reasonable price than have resulted or ever will result from either arbitrary or sound regulation of industry.

If we are compelled in every instance of the violation of this act to educate the court in the technical manufacturing processes and the technical distribution processes of the great packers of the country, or of the stockyards, we shall never get anywhere. We have got to set up some sort of agency which, through an accumulation of experience, and after hearings and investigation and inquiry, can acquire the technical knowledge as to the operation of the industry necessary to enable that agency to act in a practical and sound manner. And so we have sought to set up in this bill an agency which can, through a close contact with the industry and from inquiry and investigation and through hearing of complaints, acquire the information that will enable it to deal with the industry upon a sound and practical basis.

Now, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] referred to two cases which he said demonstrated to his mind the unconstitutionality of this bill, so far as it undertook to regulate transactions in the stockyards. I am frank to say that I do not think that the provisions of this bill dealing with the stockyards are entirely free from doubt. In the Hopkins case, to which he referred, in One hundred and seventy-first United States, it was held that an agreement between the members of a live-stock exchange prohibiting the members of that exchange from dealing with persons who were not members of it was not a violation of the Sherman Antitrust Act because the individual transactions of the members of the exchange did not constitute interstate commerce. That decision was followed also in the Anderson case, which is in the same volume.

We very promptly encountered that decision of the Supreme Court in drafting this bill. But subsequently to the Hopkins and the Anderson cases, the Supreme Court decided the so-called Swift case. In that case the Government sought to enjoin Swift & Co. and others of the packers from refraining from bidding against each other in the stockyards and other practices of a similar nature.

The decree which was entered was objected to on the ground that the transactions of the packers in the purchase of stock in the stockyards, like the transactions of the commission men in buying stock in the stockyards, were not interstate commerce, and therefore the court had no power to make a decree prohibiting the packers or requiring them to do or to refrain from doing anything in respect to such purchases. But the court said the business of transporting and purchasing cattle in stockyards, slaughtering them in the slaughterhouses, and distributing the product, constitutes a current of commerce, a complete chain of commerce, and the decree is not invalid simply because it deals with a single action or a single transaction in this chain of commerce which may not be considered alone interstate commerce.

In other words, the court said that in the decree the lower court may deal with the actions of the packers and with the current of commerce in cattle and in the products thereof as though it were a continuous current of commerce. It might prohibit certain transactions constituting a part of that current even though taken alone they did not constitute interstate commerce.

Now, we undertake to put into this bill a provision, which will be found as subsection (b) of the sixth paragraph, on page 2 of the bill, in which it is declared to be the intention of Congress to deal with this entire channel or current of commerce to which the Supreme Court referred in the Swift case. And we think, with that provision in the act, under the decision in the Swift case and subsequent decisions the court will hold that, dealing with the entire current of commerce, we have the right to deal with transactions on the stock exchange.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I think there might be considerable doubt whether a recital in a law with reference to what should be considered commerce would really make the act any more valid.

Mr. ANDERSON. I should like to say in that connection that, of course, I realize that this is a mere legislative declaration, which indicates the intent of Congress to deal with the whole current of commerce from start to finish.
Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. It would not have any binding effect upon the court.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Of course, the right comes from the constitutional clause with reference to commerce, and the construction of that would be for the court.

The Clayton Antitrust Act deals with monopolies, and this act also deals with monopolies and other matters dealt with in the Clayton Antitrust Act. Is it proposed by the present act to embrace practically everything that is made unlawful in the Clayton Act?

Mr. ANDERSON. I think the prohibitions of this act go further than the prohibitions in the Clayton Act. For instance, one of the sections of the Clayton Act prohibits discrimination in prices as between localities, and then contains a sort of nullification clause, to the effect that it shall not prevent anybody from choosing his own customers or making discriminations in prices where there is a difference in quality or a difference in transportation charges, and so forth, while this bill makes any undue or unreasonable discrimination as between localities or between persons unlawful.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I think the bill seems pretty clear so far as dealing with things that are made unlawful under the Clayton Act are concerned, but the other matters in there are so general that I just wondered whether the gentleman from Minnesota could tell some of the evils outside of the question of monopolies and other things dealt with in the Clayton Act that it is proposed to remedy in this act. The gentleman is making a very interesting argument.

Mr. ANDERSON. There is a dispute as to what the evils

The packers naturally claim that there are no evils; that all the practices in which they engage are legitimate practices.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. ANDERSON. I could talk on this matter anywhere from five minutes to five hours.

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes more. Mr. ANDERSON. For instance, it is asserted that in their attempt to get control of the cheese business and of the butter business of the country they will go into a locality and for a time will buy cream there at a high price. After they have driven out all competitors by that high price they will drop to a lower price. It has been asserted, for instance, that where a new packing plant was being started up as an independent concern they would establish concentration points all around that packing plant at strategic points on the railroads radiating from the packing plant, and then for a time pay relatively high prices for hogs and cattle at these concentration points, and thus deprive the new packing plant of the opportunity to purchase the hogs and the cattle which would naturally come to them in their own territory, and compel them to go long distances in order to get their supplies and keep their plant going. Then there are the so-called practices of "wiring on" and of "split shipments" and various other practices which the packers have engaged in, at least according to the Federal Trade Commission, which would be prohibited by this act.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Is it proposed to cover that by section 202(a)

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.
Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The reason I was asking that question was that it occurred to me that if it really was the intent of the committee to deal with the question of deceptive practices as to prices, that ought to be made definite. Otherwise the court would probably construe this as not dealing with the question of prices.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not think it was the intention of the committee to give the commission the power to fix prices. It was rather to deal with the practices which were used in connection with the prices that was sought to be reached under this provision.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Is it really the intention to prevent the packers from discriminating between the different territories and compel them to treat every locality in the same way?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes. Of course, the preference would have to be an undue or unreasonable preference. If the preference was a reasonable one in view of the general practices in the business, anyone engaged in it would not be prohibited by this act. In the last analysis, what is prohibited in the act would have to be determined by the court.

Now, I want to call attention to the fact that for the most part the bill does not deal with offenses essentially criminal in character. It deals with offenses against good business, against good morals in business. That is the reason that the particular procedure adopted in this bill was adopted.

The gentleman from South Carolina this morning proposed an amendment making the findings of the Secretary conclusive until set aside by a court of competent jurisdiction. Now, suppose the packers were engaged in a certain course of conduct, and they admit that they are engaged in that course of conduct, and the Secretary of Agriculture thinks it is an unfair practice, and he cites them on complaint to come in and show cause why they should not cease. They admit that they do it, but say it is not an unfair practice in commerce. The Secretary concludes that it is and orders them to desist. I do not think that upon that order a man ought to become immediately criminally liable. I think from such an order he ought to have the right to appeal to court. I think that proposition is a different proposition from an order as to what is a reasonable rate or charge for the use of a particular facility in the stockyards. The provisions of this legislation as to the packers must be more or less elastic in order that they may keep progress with the state and development of the industry, and because they are elastic and somewhat indefinite there ought to be an appeal before the order becomes final.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I agree with the gentleman in that

Mr. ANDERSON. I venture to say that in 99 orders out of 100 there will be no appeal. Now, the gentleman from Indiana talked about the great damage done by the Federal Trade Commission. If he will investigate the orders of that commission, he will find that there has been no appeal from more than one order out of fifty.

Mr. Chairman, there is another particular in which this bill departs more or less radically from the policy that has been adopted in some bills heretofore considered.

One of the troublesome questions that have arisen in connection with the whole proposition was, What was to be done with the tendency of the packers to gather up all the food industries of the country? The decree which has been referred to so many times undertook to deal with it on a direct prohibition so far as unrelated industries were concerned. I do not think that Congress has the power to say or to give any commission or any Secretary the power to say that anybody in this country shall not engage in any particular business.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. About how many businesses, related or unrelated, do the packers engage in?

Mr. ANDERSON. I can not say; but seven or eight hundred different articles which they are engaged in handling, possibly more-I mean that they were engaged in handling prior to the decree.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Outside of the meat products? Mr. ANDERSON. I would not undertake to be accurate about that, but they are very numerous, indeed. For instance, they deal in canned systers, canned mackerel, canned salmon, navy beans, apple butter, pineapples, strawberries, prunes, raisins, dates, grits, red pepper, and so on.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can the gentleman state what is the aggregate amount of business?

Mr. ANDERSON. The Big Five packers' total sales in 1918 approximated about $3,000,000,000. Swift & Co. did a business of $1,200,000,000; Armour, $800,000,000; and the other three made up the other billion dollars.

But to return to what I was discussing. We did not undertake to prohibit the packers from engaging in any related or unrelated lines, but we did undertake to say that if the packers engaged in these other lines or if the stockholders in the packing companies owned stock in other lines, then the products of the business so owned or controlled while in commerce should be subject to exactly the same regulations as we imposed upon the packers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. JACOWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Iowa if it is not about time to rise? This has been a mighty

Mr. HAUGEN. We have only one more speaker, for a few minutes. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to be the means of delaying the committee from rising, but the chairman has been kind enough to assign me these 10 minutes and I have been waiting three days to get them. I think in justice to him I ought to use them.

I want to congratulate this committee on the magnificent bill they have presented to the House. The truth of it is that the Agricultural Committee is one of the most effective and proficient committees in this House and most forceful on the floor. I never have known them to bring in any proposition that was off color, but if they did I would guarantee that by the force they exhibit at all times here they would put it through.

Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of this bill it has struck me as peculiar-and I do not intend to discuss the bill, but I rise for another purpose—that some one here has not stated why the packers are able to do this tremendous business, why they have been able to build it up, and who is their financial backer. The financial backer is the United States. They are trading upon the credit of the United States by discounting their notes through the commercial and continental banks of Chicago and then in turn their being sent to the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago for rediscount and thence down here to Washington, where Federal reserve notes are issued against them, in place of their checks, which might just as well be guaranteed by the Government, and they are able to do this enormous business in that way. I want to say in this connection that the Federal Reserve Board has developed not only into a board for the purpose of regulating the issuance of money, but for the purpose of regulating the price of food. They regulate the credit of the packers and they regulate the credit of the farmers, and until you get after that proposition and dig down beneath the foundation all this legislation, in my judgment, is in vain.

Why should they worry about this legislation as long as they can continue to discount and rediscount their notes through the packer banks of Chicago and the Federal reserve system? Why are the farmers raising sheep on the hoof at such a low price, as some one suggested, while we are paying such immense prices for mutton and lamb? It is not on account of any combination that we regulate in this bill, but it is because the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal reserve banks deliberately, with malice aforethought, I charge, deflated the farmers' credits. When the farmers had meetings in Kansas City and other places and said that they would hold some of their stock and grain for higher prices, what did the Federal reserve bank say? The message went out by grapevine route from this bank and from that bank to deflate the farmers' credits. How many of you from the farming districts know that the notes of the farmers have been refused extension and that the farmers have been compelled to sell their stock, their cattle, and their products for practically nothing upon the market in order that those of the favored classes, not the producer, but the man who handles the produce, might have the benefit of dealing with those commodities? That is why the gentleman from Mississippi is paying $12 for shoes, and why the other gentleman pays such a high price for his steak up here at the Arcade Market. It is simply due to the manipulation of credits by the Federal Reserve Board and nothing else on earth. There is being built up in this country a monopoliza-tion of credits, a shifting and monopolizing of credits, and unless that matter is investigated and corrected we will have no relief. There is a resolution now pending before the Committee on Rules of this House and I am satisfied that the Committee on Rules and that the leaders of this House are overwhelmingly in sympathy with it. I believe that some day that resolution will come up here and pass and that there will be an investigation of this proposition, and that then we will have chance to go into these star-chamber proceedings of the Federal Reserve Board and see what is happening there.

The international bankers, I tell you, and this comes with a good deal of force, deliberately started out to deflate the credits of the world. They said, "What credits will we first deflate?"
They concluded of course that they must first deflate the credits of the most prosperous country, namely, the United States. Then, having decided on that question, they next inquired whose credit in the United States would they deflate first. The answer was the farmer's, because they said he could stand it better, because he would have his farm left or his lease left, something to live upon, while the poor fellows up in New York who are speculating and holding wool and condensed milk and other articles would have no means of making a living after their credits are deflated.

I rose here for the purpose in this connection of calling the attention of the committee to the fact that one practice which this resolution asked investigation of, namely, the coercion adopted by the Federal Reserve Board in the case of the small banks of the country, has met with considerable success. While this investigation has been going on before the Rules Committee, the Supreme Court has heard a case brought before it by a number of country bankers in the State of Georgia against the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, and that court has decided in favor of the country banks. The point at issue briefly was on the par collection of checks. The Federal Reserve Board and the banks which are seeking to build up a monopolistic control of money in this country undertook to get the State banks into the system, and one of the methods they adopted was to force them to pay checks without the payment of any exchange.

Most of the small banks have to live upon their small exchange collections. Now they usually send a very gentlemanly man in the first instance to these small banks. The gentleman from Wyoming has a bank in his district that has had some ex-The gentleman from Nebraska, who represents the district in which Pierce, Nebr., is located, had some experience. They said to these banks that they would like to have them par their checks—that is, cash those checks without any ex-change whatever. "Well," they said, "we can not do that; we have to have exchange to live upon." So the result was that in many, many cases of the small banks they did not get them to par their checks, and they began a system of persecution to this effect, that in the case of Mr. Woods Cones's bank, which is a fine illustration, in the State of Nebraska, at Pierce, they collected and accumulated $35,000 worth of checks on his bank at the branch bank at Omaha, which is a branch of the Kansas City Federal Reserve Bank. When they had it all collected they put on a train two men with revolvers in suit cases and brought them out some 25 or 35 miles, and then by automobile out to Pierce. At 11 o'clock they appeared at Mr. Woods Cones's bank and presented the $35,000 worth of checks over the counter and demanded payment, not through the regular course of their business, but the accumulation of two weeks' checks. The purpose of that was very apparent. It was to embarrass him and discredit his bank, and finally to coerce him and force him to join the Federal reserve bank system. I claim that the State banks of Georgia, Louisiana, and all these small banks which went into a protective association for the purpose of stopping this sort of thing are entitled to the greatest credit from the people of this country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this decision of the Supreme Court has reference to this proposition, and I ask to include in the record this decision of the Supreme Court by Mr. Justice Holmes, who may be Chief Justice. It is as follows:

[Supreme Court of the United States. No. 679. October Term, 1920.
American Bank & Trust Co. et al., appellants, v. Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, Ga., et al. Appeal from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. May 16, 1921.]

[Supreme Court of the United States. No. 679. October Term, 1920. American Bank & Trust Co. et al., appellants, v. Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, Ga., et al. Appeal from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. May 16, 1921.]

Mr. Justice Holmes delivered the opinion of the court. This is a bill in equity brought by country banks incorporated by the State of Georgia against the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, incorporated under the laws of the United States, and its officers. It was brought in a State court, but removed to the district court of the United States on the petition of the defendants. A motion to remand was made by the plaintiffs, but was overruled. The allegations of the bill may be summed up in comparatively few words. The plaintiffs are not members of the Federal reserve system and many of them have too small a capital to permit their joining it, a capital that could not be increased to the required amount in the thinly populated sections of these small institutions is a charge for the services rendered by them in paying checks drawn upon them at a distance and forwarded, generally by other banks, through the mail. The charge covers the expense incurred by the paying bank and a small profit. The banks in the Federal reserve system are forbidden to make such charges to other banks in the system. (Federal reserve act of Dec. 23, 1913, ch. 6, sec. 13, 38 Stat., 263; amended Mar. 3, 1915, ch. 93, 38 Stat., 393; Sept. 7, 1916, ch. 461, 39 Stat., 752; and June 21, 1917, ch. 32, secs. 4, 5, 40 Stat., 243, 235.) It is alleged that in pursuance of a policy accepted by the Federal Reserve Board the defendant bank has determined to use its power to compel the plaintiffs and others in like situation to be come members of the defendant, or at least to open a nonmember clearing account with defendant, and thereby under the defendant's requirements to make it necessary for the plaintiffs to maintain a much larger reserve than in their present condition they need. This diminution to b

606. See, further, Smith v. Kansas City Title & Trust Co., Feb. 28, 1921.)

A more plausible objection is that by the Judicial Code, section 24, sixteenth, except as therein excepted national banking associations for the purposes of suits against them are to be deemed citizens of the States in which they are respectively located. But we agree with the court below that the reasons for localizir gordinary commercial banks do not apply to the Federal reserve banks created after the Judicial Code was enacted, and that the phrase "national banking associations" does not reach forward and include them. That phrase is used to describe the ordinary commercial banks, whereas the others are systematically called "Federal reserve banks." We see no sufficient ground for supposing that Congress meant to open the questions that the other construction would raise.

On the merits we are of opinion that the courts below went too far. The question at this stage is not what the plaintiffs may be able to prove, or what may be the reasonable interpretation of the defendants' acts, but whether the plaintiffs have shown a ground for relief if they can prove what they allege. We lay on one side as not necessary to our decision the question of the defendants' powers and, assuming that they act within them, consider only whether the use that according to the bill they intend to make of them will intringe the plaintiffs' rights. The defendants say that the holder of a check has a right to present it to the bank upon which it was drawn for payment over the counter, and that however many checks he may hold, he has the same right as to all of them and may present them all at once, whatever his motive or intent. They ask whether a mortgagee would be prevented from foreclosing because he acted from disinterested malevolence and not from a desire to get his money. But the word "right" is one of the most deceptive of pitfalls; it is so easy to slip from a qualified meaning in the premise to an unqualified one in the conclusion. Most right are qualified. A man has at least as absolute a right to give his own money as he has to demand money from a party that has made no promise to him; yet if he gives it to induce another to steal or murder, the purpose of the act makes it a crime.

A bank that receives deposits to be drawn upon by check, of course, authorizes its depositors to draw checks against their accounts and holders of such checks to present them for payment. When we think of the ordinary case, the right of the holder is so unimpeded that it seems to us absolute. But looked at from either slde, it can not be so. The interests of business also are recognized as rights, protected against injury to a greater or less extent, and in case of conflict between the claims of business on the one side and of third persons on the other lines have to be drawn that limit both. A man has a right to give advice, but advice given for the sole purpose of injuring another's business and effective on a large scale might create a cause of action. Banks as we know them could not exist if they could not rely upon averages and lend a large part of the money that they receive from their depositors on the assumption that not more than a certain fraction of it will be demanded on any one day. If without a word of falsehood but acting from what we have called disinterested malevolence, a man, by persuasion, should organize and carry into effect a run upon a bank and ruin it, we can not doubt that an action would lie. A similar result, even if less complete in its effect, is to be expected from the course that the defendants are alleged to intend, and to determine w

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Towner, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6320, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BIXLER was granted leave of absence for six days from the House of Representatives, on important business, beginning Tuesday, May 31, 1921.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for leave of absence until Thursday of next week, on account of important business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] There is no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the consideration of the packer bill it may be in order to take up under the rules of the House the bill (H. R. 6611) to establish in the Treasury Department a veterans' bureau, and to improve the facilities and service of such bureau, and further to amend and modify the war-risk insurance act, known as the Sweet bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that after the conclusion of the packer bill it shall be in order to take up the Sweet bill. Is there objection?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it the purpose of the gentleman to conclude this packer bill on next Tuesday?

Mr. MONDELL. I am not at all certain that we can conclude the consideration of the bill on Tuesday. If not, I think it may be possible to dispense with Calendar Wednesday, although I am not certain as to that now, and go on with the packers bill, and then, at the conclusion of the consideration of that bill, take up the Sweet bill.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I have no objection.
The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 48 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Tuesday, May 31, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 31, 1921.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following praver:

Our Father, we come to thank Thee for our country, in view of all the memories associated with yesterday. We bless Thee for the Union which prevails under a common flag, and as we think of those who loved not their lives, dear unto them, so much as they loved their country. Grant unto us such a conception of duty and responsibility that we may fulfill every responsibility and duty as in Thy fear. Make Thyself manifest in all lands and hasten the time when peoples shall understand the large opportunity of relationship. Through Jesus Christ, Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, May 26, 1921, when, on request of Mr. Curtis and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

JUDGMENTS OF COURT OF CLAIMS (S. DOC. NO. 26).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims amounting to $143,607.32, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY ACCOUNTING OFFICERS (S. DOC. NO. 27).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a schedule of claims amounting to $182,270.48, allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provision of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

INTERDEPARTMENTAL SOCIAL HYGIENE BOARD (S. DOC. NO. 28).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the chairman of the United States Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board submitting supplemental estimates of appropriations in the sum of $525,000, required by that board for the fiscal year 1922, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE (S. DOC. NO. 29).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Public Printer submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $16,383.63, required by the Government Printing Office for payment for holidays for the fiscal year 1921, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

POLICIES (F EUROPEAN POWERS.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article from the New York Herald of Sunday, May 29, by Frank H. Simonds, on the present policies of the European powers,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the New York Herald, Sunday, May 29, 1921.] "SILESIA SUPPLANTS BALKANS AS THE WORLD'S THORN—GREAT NATIONS HANDLING DISTURBING QUESTION WITH OLD DIPLOMACY, GREAT BRITAIN AND ITALY OPPOSING FRANCE FROM SELFISH MOTIVES, FRANK H. SIMONDS SAYS, WHILE THE GALLIC REPUBLIC SEEKS TO AGGRANDIZE POLAND TO TAKE RUSSIA'S PLACE AS ITS CHIEF ALLY. "[By Frank H. Simonds.]

"The upper Silesian question, which has set all Europe by the ears for the last few weeks, is interesting beyond all else because it is the first purely political dispute since the World War. That is to say, it is exactly like the kind of dispute which, growing out of Balkan issues, for example, steadily threatened the peace of the world up to that moment when the assassination of Sarajevo precipitated the supreme crisis.

"There is a Silesian question, a purely Polish-Germanic issue, just as there were endless Balkan disputes, disputes between Serbia and Turkey, Greece and Turkey, Bulgaria and Turkey, and, at a later date, between Austria and Serbia. But the Silesian, like the Serbian, aspect is minor. What Americans have now to appreciate is the fact that we are done with an old war and an old dispute, but we are entering into a new period, a new rivalry. Europe, after the tremendous upheaval which brought the United States to the Continent and involved the whole world in the German war, is settling back into the old ruts which have shaped history for a thousand years.

"We may dispute the upper Siles!an question, as such, for the moment and analyze the real issues involved in the crisis, which was marked by the sensational exchanges of public state-ments between Lloyd-George and Briand, statements which were at points almost minatory and were rightly accepted the world over as indicating the weakening of the Anglo-French entente, not because of German issues, not because of differences of opinion as to issues of the old war, but because of a totally different conception as to national interests existing in London and Paris.

"BRITISH POLICY A REPETITION OF HER CONTINENTAL ATTITUDE.

"To look at the British point of view first, it will be seen at once that Great Britain has resumed her traditional continental policy. From time to time the threats of Spain, of France under Louis XIV, and again under Napoleon have brought England to the Continent. She came last when Germany undertook to play the Napoleonic rôle. But always, when the immediate menace is over, Britain begins to consider the next dance, the next partner, and the new European situation.

"Germany was a danger, a menace commercially, industrially. finally politically. William II challenged Britain on the blue The result was that Britain in the decade which followed the Boer War steadily extended her understandings on the Continent with that group of nations which were necessarily hostile to Germany. British policy envisaged an association against Germany which would check and restrain the overleaping ambition of the new Germany.

In the end the British policy led straight to the World War, because Germany was bound not to be limited; to dominate, not to play the rôle of one of many great powers. But the war came, Germany was beaten, as Louis XIV had been, as Napoleon had been. And with German defeat Germany ceased to be a menace for the British. The German war fleet was gone, the German commercial fleet was mainly in British hands. So were the German colonies. That country which had been a dangerous rival became, instantly, no more than a prospective customer.

"More than this, the defeat of Germany had brought the ascendancy of France on the Continent. France became in British eyes the next possible rival. It was the business of British statesmen to restrain France, to preserve Germany as a counterbalance, exactly as Britain had preserved France from partition, after Waterloo, insisting that the France of 1789 should be restored to the Bourbons on their return from exile. In taking this course Britain fought Prussia a century ago as she is now fighting France.

"One must not confuse apparent moderation, reasonableness, even generosity to Germany by the British as an evidence of a higher moral standard than exists among other European nations. No; the British moderation is policy long before it is moral principle. Britain sees France now, as she saw Germany before the war, as a possible rival. Could France add the coal of the Ruhr to the iron of Alsace-Lorraine and of French Lorraine, France would become the greatest iron, steel, and coal nation in the world, and on such bases German expansion and powers built.

"BRITAIN RESTRAINED THE FRENCH BY USING AMERICA AND ITALY.

"At the Paris conference the main effort of British statesship was to restrain France, using both the United States and Italy as tools. Mr. Wilson's 14 points were convenient bases for action in restraint of French ambition—once Mr. Wilson had accommodatingly dropped that article in his faith which affected British naval strength, namely, the freedom of the seas. Thus we found the British opposing French acquisition of the Saar, of the left bank of the Rhine, and in the same way undertaking to block French expansion in Syria.

"A Germany which had no terrors for Britain might easily become a useful counterweight to France. Hence the insistence by the British upon concession after concession to the Germans.

Every French effort to advance into Germany to enforce the treaty of Versailles has met with instant British opposition. Unfortunately for the English, the treaty of Versailles established certain laws, certain rights for France. In the last analysis, when the Germans openly violated these rights, the British were compelled to support French purpose, but always with reluctance and after desperate resistance.

"British policy believes that a strong Germany is essential to the balance of power in Europe. British support of Germany, as a consequence, is not humanitarian; it does not rest upon any higher conception of international policy; it is exactly the same principle which has dominated British policy toward the Continent ever since Britain began to have a continental policy. Some of the most cynical and some of the most righteous actions in all British history have resulted from the application of this policy, but Americans should perceive it is policy, not morals, and British defense of German integrity to-day is no more than the pursuit of British subjectives, as always.

"WHY FRANCE WANTS GERMANY KEPT WEAK AND DIVIDED.

"Now, if one turns to the French situation, exactly the same conditions persist. The whole history of modern France is dominated by the desire and the necessity of France to keep Germany divided, weak, broken into small States. The reason is that whenever Germany has been in any measure united and France weak German or Austrian armies, counting Austria as the great German power she was before the Napoleonic era, have overflowed into France, as they did in 1870 and again in 1914.

"The advance of France to the Rhine under Richelieu was no more than the instinctive desire of France to place between herself and her hereditary enemy the single barrier which, from the days of Rome onward, had been a real obstacle to predatory German tribes. French history from the time of Henry IV onward has been a desperate battle to hold the northern frontier and the eastern gateways into France. When France has been strong she has pushed beyond the frontiers and conquered. When she has been weak she has recoiled and suffered devastating invasions.

"France made an alliance with Russia in the closing years of the last century to protect herself, to obtain a measure of independence in Europe, which had been lacking since Germany conquered her and reduced her to the level of a second-rate State. French safety rested henceforth upon the certainty that a fresh German attack-and many were threatened-would be accompanied by a Russian declaration of war, and when the war came, while German troops were victoriously pushing toward Paris, Russian invasion in East Prussia recalled the German corps with which the Marne might have been made a German victory.

"Germany defeated, France had two political objectives. The first was to reestablish her northern and eastern frontiers. sought to do this by military, if not political, occupation of the left bank of the Rhine from Holland to Switzerland. In addition, she claimed the Saar Basin, most of which had been French before 1814 and had come to France not as a result of conquest but by peaceful bargain with Austria, the ancient owner. Her second objective was an alliance with an eastern neighbor of Germany, which would insure a war on two fronts for Germany if she made a new attack upon France.

"FRENCH INTERESTS WOULD LIFT POLAND TO FIRST-CLASS POWER.

"But since Russia had fallen into anarchy and worse there was no present possibility of a restoration of the old Franco-Russian alliance. As a consequence France had to find a new ally, and she tabled upon Poland, historically bound to France by many ties, and now, as a result of her liberation, to become a considerable State. All French policy at Paris and since has centered upon making Poland as powerful as possible. fundamentally it is well for Americans to perceive that here is no question of sympathy for Poland-although there is much in France-but merely of French interest.

"But Poland was certain to become the battle ground of French and British policy, for the size and importance of Poland was sure to be a determining factor in French influence and power. To put the thing simply, Poland, could she have Danzig, the eastern marches which she has disputed with Lithuania and with Red Russia, would be a State of between 30,000,000 and 40,000,000, with an area greater than that of Britain or Italy and almost equal to that of Germany as reduced by the treaty of Versailles. If, in addition, Poland could obtain the coal fields of upper Silesia, she would be a great power once her unification were completed.

by every possible tie. Moreover, Polish armies officered and trained by French generals would in closest union with the French supply a military strength which would be the controlling factor on the Continent, holding Germany in restraint, dominating the east of Europe, and, in the nature of things, bound to Rumania, another important element in the new Europe, by an inevitable alliance against the common Russian

"Thus it has resulted that on every occasion when a Polish matter has been up before the Paris conference of the supreme council British policy has been flatly anti-Polish. It was Lloyd-George who prevented Polish ownership outright of Danzig and of upper Silesia, who reduced the Polish corridor. It was a British high commissioner of Danzig who refused to let French munitions pass to the hard-pressed Polish armies when the bolshevists approached Warsaw. It was Lloyd-George himself who proposed, while the Reds were still advancing, that Poland agree to a treaty which would have cut in half the area of the new State.

"By contrast it was Gen. Weygand and his French subordinates, reinforced by French munitions, and ably assisted on the civil side by Ambassador Jusserand, who rallied the Polish armies, delivered the counter stroke before Warsaw, which won back for Poland her lost territory. The treaty of Riga restored to Poland all the lands lost in the second partition, and at last gave her something which approximates a natural frontier toward Russia. To-day French sympathy is extended to Poland claiming Vilna, where her ethnic majority is overwhelming. It is British opposition which may defeat the Polish aspiration.

'One has, then, a clear notion of the real as contrasted with the imaginary issue at stake in upper Silesia. Poland actually carried in the plebiscite the area which she claims and most of what Korfanty has occupied. There is not the smallest question of fact. No interpretation of the language of the treaty can fail to establish Polish claims. But the British and Italians for purposes British and Italian oppose, the French for similarly selfish interests support, the Polish claims, and the Poles despairing of justice, have taken the matter into their own hands.

One word now as to the Italian attitude. Italy is opposing France for many reasons, the first of which is historic jealousy and rivalry. The French and Italians are Latins, as we and the British are Anglo-Saxons, and the legend that 'blood is thicker than water' is about as accurate in one case as in the other. Before the war Italy was an ally of Germany and Italian foreign policy was chiefly anti-French, largely because of French success in acquiring the territories in North Africa, notably Tunis, toward which Italian aspirations were directed.

"But in the conference of Paris Italy had real grievances against France. Clemenceau treated the Italians very shabbily, and French representatives, bowing to President Wilson, turned their back not alone upon Italian claims but upon Italian rights established by treaty. It was the prompt proclamation of Italian neutrality which had allowed France to use her Alpine Corps on the German front and denude her Italian marches. Wisdom and self-interest both dictated that France should support Italy against Wilson, but France gave only perfunctory aid, and as a consequence Italy felt and feels that she was deserted at Paris and has come out of the war in which her armies made great sacrifices and suffered grave losses, a loserthe one loser among the Allies.

"HOSTILITY HAS FOR ITS OBJECT RESTRICTION OF FRANCE.

"The consequence has been the steady hostility of Italy to France. Now Italian hostility to Poland is, like British, primarily the result of a purpose to restrict France. The Polish occupation of upper Silesia is in principle exactly the same sort of venture as that of D'Annunzio at Fiume. As to the sacredness of the principle of self-determination, which the British and Italians allege the Poles have violated, what does that mean to Italy, who insisted upon annexing 300,000 German-speaking Tyrolese in the Valley of the Adige, where there was not even an Italian minority, merely to give Italy her natural frontier of the crests of the Alps? What does it mean to Italy, who has similarly annexed 400,000 Slovenes behind Trieste, simply to obtain a defensible frontier for the great Adriatic port?

"Italy, like Britain, is interested in keeping France within limits. Her policy is tinged with hatred and resentment, based upon treatment which can hardly be justified. In the British case there is no resentment, no bitterness, nothing but cold policy, but the end is the same in both cases. The question of upper Silesia finds both the British and the Italians united because it is fundamentally a French and not a Polish question. The policy of Britain in preserving Germany finds Italian support, because Italy, like Britain, has no desire to see France "And this new great power would, in the nature of things, be an ally and even a subordinate of France, bound to the Republic dominate the Continent through her Polish and other alliances.

"Poland, then, has something of the value Serbia had in the days of the Balkan wars. It was because Serbia was the ward of Russia primarily that Austria and Germany sought to destroy the small State and thus weaken Russian prestige and influence in the Balkans. And because of the system of alliances in Europe all the other great powers were dragged in and the general war resulted. But just as in 1914 Austrian to Serbia had its main origin in Russian support of the Serbian State, so in 1921 Anglo-Italian hostility to Poland has its chief explanation in French association with Poland.

ENGLAND SETS BOUND ON A POSSIBLE RIVAL IN FRANCE.

"British policy seeks to keep Germany measurably strong and united as a restraint upon France, historically the great British rival in the world and in British eyes not impossibly a Italy seeks the same objective for similar reasons, to which are added feelings of a personal character. France seeks to keep Germany weak, not so much through the desire to dominate the Continent as because Germany has been for a century at least a deadly menace to French existence. But to keep Germany strong it is necessary to limit Poland on all sides, not only to prevent her from annexing German territory but from expanding eastward into the regions which are historically Polish. This is the whole upper Silesian dispute in a nutshell.

"Simple as is the issue, however, it is not simple when it comes to the American public through the medium of foreign dispatches. We have learned to think of Garibaldi's great exploit, when he set out with his thousand for Sicily and overthrew the kingdom of Naples as a deed of daring patriotism, But there is small difference between the Garibaldi episode and that of Korfanty in upper Silesia. Korfanty is made to appear as a criminal, the Poles as the disturbers of the peace of the world, just as Austrian newspapers unquestionably described Garibaldi in the last century, because most of our European from London, and British policy is gravely news comes weakened by the Korfanty exploit.

"It was precisely such affairs that made us ridiculous at Paris and after Paris. We were constantly accepting the surface political indications as complete. We were never in the current of the real facts. To take an example, when I first went to Paris I discovered that the whole American press delegation was filled with reports of French chauvinism, French imperialism, etc. Surprised, I made some investigations and discovered that a bitter battle behind the scenes was being fought between the French and British foreign offices over Syria. Since the French insisted upon their rights as established by the Sykes-Picot treaty, the British were invoking the President's 14 points and propagandizing on all sides against the French, using every opportunity to impress the Americans with French militarism and greed for territory.

"What Britain wanted was an Arab kingdom occupying all of the Arabian territories of Turkey, and naturally under British protection and under the rule of an Arab prince, who appeared in Paris under the tutelage of a brilliant young British officer to plead the cause of self-determination.

'The British wanted self-determination in Syria, because they did not want the French there. They did not want it in India, in Ireland, or in Egypt, because they were there. To-day they do not want self-determination in upper Silesia because it means an accession to French strength. But they have invoked and they will again invoke this principle, so dear to Mr. Lansing's heart, whenever it falls in with British policy. France did not support Italy in the D'Annunzio policy because she was not sympathetic with the Italians in this instance and saw her advantage in following President Wilson. But she is sympathetic with the Korfanty exploit, because it contributes to serving a French purpose.

"At Paris Mr. Wilson's principles, his 14 points, served as an admirable basis for dragging him in one direction and then in another. Whenever any European power wanted something or wanted to prevent some other power from getting something appeal was made to some one of the 14 points and American support was enlisted. We supported the Bulgarian claim to a 'window on the Ægean' at the expense of Greek aspirations, and the Italians supported us against the French and British, who were playing the Greek game. But one day the Greeks offered the Italians a piece of territory in Anatolia, and Italian interest in Bulgarian access to the Ægean vanished into history.

"And it is well for Americans to realize now that the upper Silesian dispute is no more than the first evidence of a European return to old policies. The battle between old rivals and new is to be fought in the familiar way. Europe is striving toward a new balance of power. France, at the moment the dominant power on the Continent, is seeking, by building up a series of alliances with Poland, Rumania, Jugo-Slavia, and Committee on Finance.

Czechoslovakia, to consolidate her position and insure herself against any German recovery. But in thus seeking security she unquestionably marches toward a position of military and political supremacy in Europe.

"To prevent such French expansion of power Britain and Italy are seeking daily and separately to restrict French influence, to protect Germany, diminish Poland, even to restore Russia as a counterbalance to Poland. You may as an American prefer the French to the British game or the British to the French. It is not inconceivable that Americans may believe their own commercial interests are best served by a restored and fortified Germany. But what it is essential to perceive is that a game is being played, that two groups of nations with equally selfish purposes, selfish as contrasted with idealistic, but perhaps more accurately nationalistic purposes, are seeking to have the best of the play, and in the operation are making the usual appeal to all sorts of appropriate and inappropriate moral principles.

"NOT REALLY A MORAL ISSUE, EACH POWER HAVING MOTIVES.

"In reality the upper Silesian question is hardly a moral issue at all. Great Britain would like to prevent the Poles from acquiring this region, exactly as she turned back parts of European Turkey to the Osmanli butchers in the Beaconsfield era, because she desired to keep Russia away from Constantinople. France would like to have the Poles acquire this region, Polish ethnically, because a stronger Poland would benefit France. Italy is playing the rôle she played in the Sardinian period during the Crimean War for her own legitimate interests.

"But naturally the British, the Italians, and the French would like to have American support and are making the very best possible appeal to so-called American idealism along the road. And at Paris there were few crimes which were not momentarily enhanced by the approval of American idealism, which did not understand but never hesitated to act. As for the German, his case is in good hands, and the Pole, now, as always, finds himself the victim of a world which is prepared to keep the peace of Europe no matter what sacrifices it entails upon the Pole, the Serb, the Bulgarian, or any other small people. A similar policy found its ultimate expression in the congress of Berlin, but it also found its logical outcome in the World War, begun as a consequence of the Bosnian episode.

Secretary of State Hughes's refusal to permit this country to be drawn into the discussion, even on the appeal of the Poles, was wise and to be expected, but it did not prevent Lloyd-George from asserting that American public opinion, as expressed by the newspapers, stood with the French and the Italians, and it did call forth certain British suggestions that it would have been better if we had acted, of course, on the British side.

"But the whole upper Silesian controversy must serve to indicate how essential it is for us, now we have gone back to Europe, to 'watch our step.' At Paris we were made nothing more nor less than tools of British policy, because the British were wise enough to study not only Mr. Wilson's 14 points but Mr. Wilson himself, and make every appeal for American support on a carefully calculated arrangement of their case to meet both the 14 points and Mr. Wilson's own personal views.

There was nothing unfair in the game, no marked cards, but only one nation was represented by supreme players, and that nation took all the tricks and won all the prizes. We are back in the game and anyone who was at Paris can see familiar signs.

"Our vote will still be decisive. What remains to be settled is who will cast it?'

LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF IDAHO, SIXTEENTH SESSION, IN THE SENATE.

Senate concurrent resolution 7.

Be it resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring): Whereas it is proposed to make such improvements in the St. Lawrence as to make the Great Lakes accessible to ocean-going commerce, and as this improvement will, in effect, bring the State of Idaho hundreds of miles nearer the world's markets;

And as there are within the State great resources that lie wholly undeveloped while the production of all things is diminished or retarded by distance from markets;

And because our producers and the consuming public have alike suffered enormous losses in the last year by transportation shortage and failure:

and failure;
And because by reason of these conditions the transportation situation constitutes an emergency;
And as a number of States have joined in the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Tidewater Association, having as its object the early undertaking and completion of this improvement: Now, therefore, be it completion of this imprevement: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the State of Idaho is properly associated in the abovenamed organization with its neighboring Commonwealth in pressing to advance this undertaking and that the action of the governor in so declaring is hereby approved and confirmed, and the participation of this State by the governor and those who represent him in the council of these States is approved; be it further

Resolved, That the Representatives of this State in the Congress of the United States be requested to facilitate and expedite in every possible way the prosecution of this undertaking for the economic freedom of a landlocked continent.

PRICE OF CRUDE OIL.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, I present the report of the special committee appointed by the Legislature of Oklahoma to investigate and inquire into the cause of the recent decline in the price of crude oil. The report is in telegraphic form, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Manufactures and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TULSA, OKLA., May 30, 1921.

Hon. J. W. Harreld,

Member of Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Hon. J. W. Harreld,

Member of Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We, the committee appointed under the authority of house resolution No. 12 of the Eighth Legislature of the State of Oklahoma for the purpose of Investigating and inquiring into the cause of the recent decline in the price of crude oil in the Mid-Centinent field, beg to submit to the Congress of the United States the following facts: It is our unanimous opinion that the present price of crude oil in Oklahoma is now below the average lifting cost of oil in this State, and one of the chief causes of the decline in oil below the cost of production has been the enermous imports of crude oil from Mexico, which is coming into the United States duty free. In our opinion one of our main hopes of stabilizing the price of crude oil and its products imported into this country. One of the principal sources of revenue in Oklahoma is the tax we levy upon the gross production of crude oil. A fair price for the same is therefore of interest to every man, woman, and child in the State. Oklahoma can not hope to reap the great benefits it deserves through its tax on crude oil in the State as long as crude oil products in the State must be sold in competition with tax-free products from abroad. The testimony before our committee developed that the only opposition to a tariff on Mexican crude were the representatives of corporations, such as the Standard Oil Co. of Indiana, Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, through its subsidiary, the Carter Oil Co.; the Standard Oil Co. of New York, through its subsidiary, the Magnolia Petroleum Co.; the Prairie Oil & Gas Co.; the pipe-line subsidiaries of the Standard Oil companies, the Texas Co. and the Gulf Co., all of which companies were heavily interested in Mexican oil production. The testimony taken before our committee development in all the counties of Oklahoma is at a complete standstill; that business of every kind throughout the oil fields is practically paralyzed. This was ascribed directly by practically all independent operat

Resolved, That the chairman of the committee is instructed to send a copy of this resolution to all Members of Congress from the State of Oklahoma and to the members of the Ways and Means Committee,

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 851) authorizing the Secretary of War to make settlement with the lessees who erected buildings on a five-year lease on the zone at Camp Funston, Kans., and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 85) thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1254) providing for the appointment !

of an additional district judge in and for the eastern district of Michigan, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 86) thereon.

Mr. KEYES, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 52) authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to employees of the United States Department of Agriculture who died in the war with Germany, reported it without amendment.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1074) to prescribe the method of capital punishment in the District of Columbia, asked that that committee be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. UNDERWOOD:
A bill (S. 1911) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 1912) for the relief of John B. O'Sullivan; and A bill (S. 1913) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of George Lockley; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WATSON of Georgia:

A bill (S. 1914) to amend an act approved April 4, 1917, being an act to authorize an issue of bonds.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. May I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that my colleague [Mr. McLean], the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, is necessarily absent this morning. Of course I am not familiar with the subject myself, but my colleague is probably familiar with it. I am unable to tell from the reading of the title whether the matter would fall within the jurisdiction of his committee or not. Would the Senator object to having the bill lie on the table for the present without reference until my colleague can express his views upon it?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table for the present.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 1915) to provide for the purchase of farm products in the United States, to sell the same in foreign countries, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from Nebraska whether the bill which he has just introduced calls for the extension of credit by the United States Government?

Mr. NORRIS. No; it does not directly. It does call for an appropriation, however, from the United States Treasury.

Mr. KING. Does it utilize any of the fiscal agencies or instrumentalities of the Government? If so, it occurred to me it perhaps ought to go to the Committee on Banking and Cur-

Mr. NORRIS. No; it specifically provides that the Government of the United States shall in no case be liable.

Mr. KING. Very well.

By Mr. LENROOT:

A bill (S. 1916) for the enrollment and allotment of members of the Lac du Flambeau Band of Lake Superior Chippewas, in the State of Wisconsin, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SHORTRIDGE:

A bill (S. 1917) granting an increase of pension to Harry Kraft:

A bill (S. 1918) granting a pension to Harlon P. Reeves;

A bill (S. 1919) granting an increase of pension to Louis N. Mallet:

A bill (S. 1920) granting an increase of pension to James Perrin, jr.;

A bill (S. 1921) granting an increase of pension to Edmond De Jarnac; and

A bill (S. 1922) granting an increase of pension to Nannette W. Sheffield; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 1923) for the relief of Christian Snedker, father of Martin Bernhard Christian, deceased, Harry M. Wentz, and others; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 1924) granting a pension to Edward P. Le Compte; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEWBERRY:

bill (S. 1925) providing for the erection of a monument to the memory of Joseph W. Guyton, the first member of the United States Army to be killed on German soil; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 1926) to extend the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, as amended, to lands purchased for Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 1927) granting an increase of pension to Lizzle Noland (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1928) granting a pension to Elizabeth M. Englehardt (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 1929) granting a pension to William Shurman

Sharp (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1930) granting a pension to Janama Oldham (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 1931) granting a pension to Robert Samuel Harris (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 1932) granting a pension to Sarah E. Spears (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 1933) providing for the appointment of an additional circuit judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit; to the Committee on the Judi-

AMENDMENTS TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 33, line 14, strike out the word "Navy" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Treasury,"

So as to read:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay to Mrs. T. E. S. Cates, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $63 for rent of quarters furnished to Lieuts. James E. Maher and L. E. Myers of the United States Navy while on submarine

Mr. SHORTRIDGE (for Mr. Weller) submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $287,620 for improvement, including rebuilding of wharves, etc., at the Baltimore (Md.) Quarantine Station, intended to be proposed by him to the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

BERNARD M. BARUCH.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD certain letters.

An organization of grain growers in the United States has been formed into a corporation, of which the papers gave notice a few days ago. Mr. Barney Baruch is to act as a certain financial adviser for this organization. Mr. Clifford Thorne, who is connected with it, wrote me some time ago about Mr. Baruch and his connection with it. I wrote him, raising certain questions concerning him, and Mr. Baruch has replied to that letter, and I should like to have that letter and the others placed in the RECORD.

I think it is due to Mr. Baruch, as certain persons have attacked him; I did myself in my letter, and this letter of his is in answer thereto.

I ask unanimous consent that this correspondence may be placed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

KANSAS CITY, Mo., March 24, 1921.

Hon. WM. S. KENYON, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have noticed some attacks recently on Mr. Bernard M. Baruch by Members of Congress. Did these gentlemen submit facts in support of their claim? Recently in Washington. I have neither bought nor sold, directly or we have called Mr. Baruch before the farmers' marketing com- indirectly, in any way a single share of stock, nor any grain or mittee for suggestions and advice in regard to the formulation of a system for the cooperative marketing of grain on a large scale.

Mr. Baruch demonstrated a very magnificent spirit of friend-liness and helpfulness. I honestly believe that his sole purpose is to render a service. Some time in the near future I desire to discuss this subject with you. If I am not mistaken, he is going to have an opportunity, if he wishes, to help the agricultural interests of America devise some method, some system, by which they will improve their present credit facilities; it may be by the establishment of some finance corporation which the farmer himself will own and control.

I think Mr. Baruch is a big man, and he is going to have an opportunity to render a great service. I am not writing this to any other Member of Congress, but I did want some one there on the ground to know what Mr. Baruch is now doing and our attitude toward him.

Cordially, yours,

C. THORNE.

Washington, D. C., April 14, 1921.

Hon, CLIFFORD THORNE,

Lytton Building, Chicago, Ill.

DEAR THORNE: Yours of March 24 at hand. I have been away and that accounts for your not hearing from me.

I have been in a good deal of a quizzical state of mind about Mr. Baruch. I know he has done a good deal of good work. I can not quite understand how, with his large interests in copper, he could consent to have anything to do with fixing the price of copper during the war. I could think more of him if he had not done that, and yet I confess to a feeling that there is a good deal of patriotism about Baruch.

I do not just like the item of $150,000 for expenses to Paris, which was paid by the Government. Some of these things naturally put a question mark in my mind when it comes to the placing of halos on Baruch's brow.

With best wishes to you, I am, Very sincerely,

CHICAGO, April 19, 1921.

Senator WILLIAM S. KENYON,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Replying to yours of the 14th instant:

Incidentally in a recent conversation Mr. Baruch stated that he never received one penny of the item of $150,000, the occasion for the appropriation being as follows:

Mr. Baruch did not like the experts assigned to assist him in connection with the peace conference and requested an appropriation to get such men as he needed. Further, I understand that only $22,000 of the appropriation was actually used, and every cent of this went to salaries and expenses of employees and experts.

I wonder if you have had occasion to be advised of these facts.

I sincerely hope they are accurate. Cordially, yours,

C. THORNE.

NEW YORK, May 23, 1921.

My Dear Senator Kenyon: Before me as I write this lies your letter of April 14, 1921, addressed to Clifford Thorne, counsel for the American Farm Bureau Federation, and forwarded to me with your consent. I thank you for the frankness that characterized your statements and for your courage in permitting them to be shown me. The letter is a candid résumé of the rumors and scandals circulated by a whispering campaign, aided by infamous charges made in an irresponsible manner. I am indebted to you for the opportunity of meeting squarely this malicious gossip.

Anyone who has filled a public office is open to criticism; indeed, it is wise and proper that it should be so. Criticism and watchfulness do not do the honest man harm, and they serve to keep the weak and wicked up to the mark. But the criticism should be constructive. If a man is guilty, no matter how rich he is, he should be brought to the bar of justice. The richer the man the greater the crime.

Doubtless if I had not entered the service of the Government my fortune would have continued to increase. It is now less than two-thirds of what it was when I went to Washington at the beginning of the war. But I would have given it all had it been necessary for the privilege of having served.

It may interest you to know that never since my going to Washington, in the early part of 1917, have I engaged in a single gainful pursuit. Moreover, I disposed of every interest I pos-cotton, nor any product whatsoever, though I believe I would have profited heavily had I permitted myself to operate.

I saw clearly what the future was going to bring forth. In March, 1920, I publicly predicted that we had reached the zenith of scarcity and therefore of high prices. You know what followed. In December of the same year I publicly stated that we had reached the bottom of our troubles. Between the time of those two events it would have been possible for me to have made millions of dollars had I cared to speculate. But again I repeat that I have neither bought nor sold, nor entered into any gainful pursuit of any description.

As far as the two points referred to in your letter are concerned, there is not a scintilla of fact upon which any criticism could be based in reference either to the copper matter or the item of the allowance of $150,000.

Regarding the first, I have had no interest whatsoever in copper since the beginning of the war with Germany. without reservation of any sort. Furthermore, the fixing of the price of copper and my relations to this matter have been very much misunderstood and purposely lied about, which can be seen by a perusal of my report to the President and Congress entitled "American Industry in the War." It is true that I arranged the purchase of copper by the Government for all the then known needs at 163 cents a pound, which was less than half the then existing market price. Thereafter, when we entered the war, the price of copper was fixed as follows: First, by the War Industries Board of the Council of National Defense, of which I was only one member of seven. To that body the Federal Trade Commission made a report as to the cost of producing copper, after which the War Industries Board recommended to the President what should be done, and he fixed the

I became chairman of the War Industries Board when it was created as a separate organization by order of the President March 4, 1918, but, as chairman of the board, did not have the right to fix prices, and was explicitly restricted from so doing. The price of copper and every other article was fixed by a committee consisting of appointees of the President. This committee was composed of Robert S. Brookings, chairman; W. B. Colver, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission; Hugh Frayne, labor representative; H. A. Garfield, Fuel Administrator; Commander John M. Hancock, Navy representative; Lieut. Col. Robert H. Montgomery, Army representative; Henry C. Stuart, ex-governor of Virginia; and Dr. F. W. Taussig, chairman of the United States Tariff Commission. As chairman of the War Industries Board I was ex officio member of the com-I doubt if the records of the committee will show that after I became chairman of the board I sat in at a determination of any price that was fixed, although I could have done so. At the time my duties were so great and pressing, and as the final determination of prices was in other hands, I felt that my efforts could be spent more advantageously in other directions.

There have been many misstatements of facts concerning price fixing. For instance, it has been stated in the Record that at no time was there a representative of the Army or Navy present when prices were fixed. This is totally incorrect because in all cases there was a representative of the Army or Navy present and participating.

I can not state too strongly that I was not interested in any of the sales of copper or the companies making the sales. Nor was I interested in any of the reselling of copper held by the Government. At that time I was in Paris. Nor was I interested in any of the companies which bought copper or anything else from the Government.

These misstatements of fact have been heartless, cruel lies. I have demanded that I be brought before the bar of Congress or a court of justice and tried. No one can complain against just criticism. But is it not a crime for a Member of Congress to accuse a man of wrongdoing and then fail to bring him before a bar of justice? I refer specifically to the charges made by the honorable Mr. WILLIAM E. MASON, of Illinois.

As far as the question of the $150,000 is concerned, that was the sum of money that was allotted to the work of the economic section of the peace conference, which work was directly under my charge. I had the right to use that entire sum, but only drew and spent less than $25,000. In connection with this I am very proud to say that it happens that the economic sections of the treaty are the only parts of the treaty to which I have heard no objections made and concerning which I have heard no criticism. On the contrary, it appears that these sections are generally approved and opinion is strong in declaring they must be retained for the benefit and protection of American industry and business.

All I drew against the $150,000 allotment was $25,000, which was converted into francs and deposited at interest in the Paris branch of the Equitable Trust Co., of New York. Through the addition of interest and refundments this amount was increased by $380.34. The expenditures from this account from February 14, 1919, to June 30, 1919, totaled $24,128.64, itemized as follows:

Transportation and traveling expenses	$3, 247, 80
Salaries, 10 people	6, 771, 83
Living allowances, civilians (17 people)	11, 634, 21
Living allowances, officers	2, 176, 36
Stamps	28. 69
Automobile expenses	24, 00
Office expenses	245, 75

24, 128, 64

(The names of the experts and other members of the organization, all of whom did fine work, can be supplied if you wish them.)

The balance of this working fund, $1,251.70, reduced by $161.13 loss in exchange in converting this balance from francs into dollars, $1,090.57, was deposited on August 27, 1919, with the Department of State, together with the final accounting for this allotment.

After this account had been closed for filing with the Department of State it was discovered that certain charges for the transportation to and from Europe and necessary travel there of some of the members of the organization on Government transports and the travel expenses of a returning member had not been presented to the disbursing agent. The last time I looked into this matter these charges, totaling $833.71, were to be charged against this account by the Department of State. After the payment of these charges, therefore, the total unexpended balance of the allotment will be $125,256.86. In other words, of $150,000 allotted to the credit of my organization there was spent less than 16 per cent of the total—an unusual practice with public money, I think you will agree.

And of the money that was expended I did not receive one cent on account of living expenses, traveling expenses, fees, or any other purpose from this or any other fund. No part of it whatsoever was used for the payment of my personal or official Furthermore, the United States Government has expenses. never paid for so much as a glass of water or a piece of bread for me. Neither during my stay in Washington, nor on my trip abroad, nor during my stay in Paris and return to this country did I accept one cent of Government funds for my personal use of any sort. I paid for my passage to and from Europe. In addition, I never used a Government automobile in Washington, nor did anyone connected with my board or the work of my board. While in Paris I had my own automobile, which waited at the door of my office to carry me back and forth to the various meetings which it was necessary for me to This was my own automobile, paid for out of my own personal funds. This is all a matter of record, and I have in my possession the official check book and the vouchers for every bit of the less than $25,000 that was spent of this fund of $150,000. From this you will see how my position has been falsified by malice and ignorance.

Further, in closing this subject I wish to say that even during my stay in Washington I paid out of my pocket for the office rent, and telephone calls and the clerk hire when my office was in the Munsey Building. On my removal to the Council of National Defense Building I continued to pay the salary of the man and woman who acted as my secretaries there. It is only fair to say that there were many other men, both in Washington and in Paris, who can say the same thing as I, that they have never received one cent from the Government for their services except the check for one dollar, which they kept as a matter of pride and record.

It seems to me that in the interests of decency and fair play that if there is a single lingering doubt in the mind of any individual, be he a private citizen or a Member of Congress, that a public investigation should be made by Congress, so that these rumors once and for all can be silenced. To a congressional investigation I shall be glad to bring every book and paper to show the disposition of every dollar that I received and spent from the time I went to Washington until now. I shall be glad to submit to the severest and most minute cross-examination and have all my acts scrutinized from the most critical standpoint. Furthermore, I shall be glad in this investigation to have all my private papers gone into, even to the extent of bringing before the investigating committee the evidence of my past and present financial condition.

I appeal to you as a fair-minded man for your help in gaining an opportunity to still the tongues of my traducers. If they are right, I should be shot; if they are liars, as I have publicly accused them of being, then they deserve a worse fate for aspersing the name of one who merely tried to do his duty with a heart full of devotion to the ideals of his country.

Very truly, yours,

BERNARD M. BARUCH.

HOD. WILLIAM S. KENYON,

The United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes). Morning business is closed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1837) to amend section 32 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I assume that the bill will not precipitate debate. If it does, I take it the Senator from Kansas will withdraw it.

Mr. CURTIS. I shall withdraw it if it leads to debate.
Mr. PENROSE. As I understood the Senator from Kansas, the bill has been recommended by the Treasury Department?

Mr. CURTIS. By the Secretary of the Treasury and the Farm Loan Board, and it is an emergency measure.

Mr. PENROSE. And for all practical purposes it was unanimously reported from the committee?

Mr. CURTIS. It was unanimously reported by all who were there. There was not a full committee present. There was a quorum of the committee present. I have been advised this morning that one member of the committee, who was not at the meeting, would oppose the measure, but he did not say so to me.

Mr. SMOOT. The chairman of the committee is out of the city, as is also the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass]. I ask that the bill may go over until one or the other of those members of the committee may be present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Before it goes over I should like to ask a question. This is the bill which I understand was introduced authorizing the advance by the Government of $50,000,000 for loans to farm-loan banks to relieve the distressed situation in agricultural districts?

Mr. CURTIS. It is; that is, $50,000,000 is authorized; but, of course, all of that amount may not be used. All that is desired is to have authority to use a sufficient amount to relieve the situation. The banks can not with their limited capital accumulate a sufficient number of farm mortgages to serve as a basis for a bond issue. Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think they will need the $50,000,000 and I believe they ought to have it. I think this is a perfectly legitimate way to relieve a very distressed situation. We have legitimate way to relieve a very distressed situation.

been involved in a good many roundabout ways that have not produced any results for the relief of the agricultural districts of the country, but this is a practical way. There is no question about it. This will not cost the Government of the United States a dollar in the end. It is merely lending its credit on paper that millions of American citizens have been willing to lend their dollars on when they had the dollars to loan.

Although, due to the distressed conditions of the hour, these farm loan bonds can not to-day be sold, we can not expect that this condition is going to continue forever. When the tide comes back there will be no trouble in the Government disposing of the bonds. They bear a greater rate of interest than the Government pays for the money which it borrows; and no one can question that, in this hour, when farm products are almost universally selling for less than the cost of production and farm mortgages are falling due, if the party in power is going to do anything to relieve the farmer, this is the opportune time and this is one way of doing it. If the relief is going to come, I think it should come without delay. So far as I am concerned, I should be glad to see the bill passed this morning.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] will not ask that this measure go over. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean] reported the bill, having been present at the meeting of the committee which ordered it reported. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury is on file fully explaining the necessity of the passage of the proposed legislation. As the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] has stated, there is an emergency existing. The the money now, and they should be helped at once.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that the bill does not call for any appropriation, but simply calls for a deposit of Federal funds which are not otherwise appropriated and which will be amply secured by farm loan

Mr. CURTIS. That is true.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to state what the bill proposes to accomplish.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah object to the present consideration of the bill? Mr. SMOOT. I should first like to make a brief statement concerning the measure, if the Chair will permit me.

Section 32 of the existing law provides for a capital stock of $6,000,000, which is supposed to constitute a revolving fund. This bill provides that that fund shall be increased to $50,000. That is the object of the bill. So I am going again to ask the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curis] to let the bill go over until the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass] is present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Utah to object to the consideration of the bill.

JOINT COMMISSION OF AGRICULTURAL INQUIRY.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4803, being the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4803, which is known as the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Before that motion is put, will the Senator from Washington yield to me to ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes?

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will allow me, I prefer that my motion shall first be put. Then the Senator from Tennessee may obtain the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. That will be entirely satisfactory to me. Mr. LENROOT. Before the question is put on the motion of the Senator from Washington, will be permit me to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a Senate concurrent resolution? If it leads to any debate at all, I shall withdraw the request.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the nature of the resolution to which the Senator from Wisconsin refers?

Mr. LENROOT. It is a concurrent resolution providing for an agricultural inquiry, and it has been reported unanimously from the committees to which it was referred.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin for that purpose.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate concurrent resolution 4. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Washington withdraws his motion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I withdraw the motion temporarily,

Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Washington is withdrawn. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate concurrent resolution 4, which the Secretary will state.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the resolution be read, subject to objection, Mr. President. The reading clerk read the resolution (S. Con. Res. 4), which had been introduced by Mr. Lenroot on May 12, 1921, as follows:

as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring),
That a joint commission is hereby created, to be known as the "Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry," which shall consist of five Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate and five Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker.

Said commission shall investigate and report to the Congress within 90 days after the passage of this resolution upon the following subjects:

1. The causes of the present condition of agriculture.

2. The cause of the difference between the prices of agricultural products paid to the producer and the ultimate cost to the consumer.

3. The comparative condition of industries other than agricultural products to such products.

5. The banking and financial resources and credits of the country, especially as affecting agricultural credits.

6. The marketing and transportation facilities of the country.
The commission shall include in its report recommendations for legislation which in its opinion will tend to remedy existing conditions, and shall specifically report upon the limitations of the powers of Congress in enacting relief legislation.

The commission shall elect its chairman, and vacancies occurring in the membership of the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments.

The commission is authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of Congress, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, and to employ such personal services and incur such expenses as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution; such expenditures shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate and the House of Representatives in equal proportions upon vouchers authorized by the committee and signed by the chairman thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not know that I intend to object to the consideration of the resolution, but it is rather I should like to ask the Senator who has introduced the resolution what investigation is contemplated by it other than that which is already being conducted by various departments of the Government? It seems to me that we are never through with investigations. The resolution carries an appropriation indirectly without limit and without any suggestion as to how much the proposed investigation is going to cost. A roving commission is to be created that could spend $100,000 under the resolution, if necessary, in order to conduct an investigation that, I assume, is already being carried on by the Government, and after being completed its results are hidden away in the archives and seldom, if ever, examined.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am very glad to reply to the Senator from Pennsylvania that the commission, if created, it is contemplated will utilize all of the investigations which have been heretofore made by the various departments of the Government. The trouble with the situation now is, as the Senator from Pennsylvania has indicated, that the different departments of the Government make investigations and put their reports in pigeonholes, and that is the last that Congress or the public ever know of them.

This resolution is unanimously indorsed, I think, by every farmers' organization in the country; and it is indorsed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which reported it. It is thought that through such a commission information may be procured and reported to Congress, together with recommendations that will accomplish two things: First, to fix clearly the limitations of the power of Congress with reference to what may be done; and, second, to recommend such legislation as Congress is really empowered to enact that will tend to relieve present conditions.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I can appreciate that the adoption of a resolution of this kind may result in great good. In the present distressed condition of the country, bordering on panic conditions, it is very natural for every man who suffers to try to find out the cause from which he suffers and to secure Men may be easily misled along economic lines as to what is happening to them; and I think a wise, careful, thorough investigation of this question by the Congress, ascertaining the real facts that are involved in the present deplorable condition of the country and presenting sound conclusions as to what has brought about the distressed situation and what may remedy it, would be of great value to the people of the United States. Of course, however, a mere investigation is not what we want, nor would it be effective. The investigation must be of such a character that when it is completed and a report is filed it will have the confidence of the country and the confidence of those who are suffering because of the present financial condition. Therefore I take it for granted that, to be effective, it must be more than a bipartisan conclusion. I rose for the purpose of inquiring of the Senator from Wisconsin as to the appointment of the proposed commission. As I understood the concurrent resolution as it was read-I have not had the opportunity of reading it before it was read from the desk-it proposes to appoint a joint commission of 10, composed of 5 Senators and 5 Representatives, the members of the commission on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Vice President and those on the part of the House to be appointed by the Speaker of the House. Now, I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin what proportion of that commission is it suggested that the minority will have?

Mr. PENROSE. That is stated in the resolution.
Mr. LENROOT. The Committee on Agriculture have recommended an amendment, which is pending, which provides that of the Senate members three of them shall be members of the majority party and two of them members of the minority party. A like amendment is suggested covering the House members of the commission. Thus there will be six Republicans and four Democrats on the commission.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The resolution itself, then, answers my question. I had not seen a printed copy of the concurrent resolution, and the amendment referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin really was not read at the desk.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator from Wisconsin to imply that investigations conducted at great expense and of voluminous character by the Department of Agriculture, the Department of the Interior, and other departments have no available value?

Mr. LENROOT. They have no value, practically, as they stand. If, however, the proposed commission is created, the information gathered by the agencies referred to by the Senator will be secured by the commission and it will be made of

Mr. PENROSE. Then, Mr. President, I only want to say in closing that I am impressed with the novelty of the situation that Congress must pass a resolution, involving perhaps limitless expense, to mobilize departmental reports and render them available and of value.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania object to the consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. PENROSE. I do not.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice, Mr. President, that there is a provision in the concurrent resolution to the effect that the commission to be created to investigate the questions submitted to them shall report to Congress within 90 days after the passage of the resolution. If we are going to enter upon this investigation, I think we ought to do so with the idea at least of securing the facts called for by the resolution, and in order to do that three months constitute altogether too short a period.

I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the fact that the conditions which are to be investigated, and concerning which a report is to be made, are so broad and far-reaching that, it seems to me, it would take a committee of the size proposed, if they traveled all the time from one end of the country to the other, except while they were holding hearings, many months to fulfill the task imposed upon them and to ascertain the facts in the case. I know the Senator from Wisconsin would not like to submit a report here based upon the testimony of merely a few witnesses called to testify before the proposed commission.

Mr. LENROOT. I will be very frank with the Senator and say that I agree with him that probably the investigation can not be completed within three months; but the necessities of the case are so great that I feel, with the limitation at present in the resolution, the commission, if created, will get to work much more rapidly and proceed more expeditiously than if a longer limitation were provided at this time. Later on, if necessary, we can increase the time limit.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question about the investigations conducted by Government departments and by committees that are already considering certain features of the situation contemplated to be investigated by the concurrent resolution, and the Senator from Wisconsin replied that the commission, when appointed, might use the testimony and facts gathered and so correlate them as to find just what is the effect one upon the other.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes, sir. I really think that it would be in the interest of expedition if the 90-day limitation remained in the concurrent resolution for the present.

Mr. SMOOT. I made the statement I did because I know that it is a physical impossibility for any committee that was ever created or could be created within 90 days to collect the data and information called for by the resolution. However, as the Senator from Wisconsin has said, the time may be extended if Congress desires to extend it.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will allow me, I happen to be a member of two committees which are now investigating two features of the subject covered by this concurrent resolution, namely, the agricultural situation and the transportation situation, and I think that in the testimony that is being given before those two committees can be found matter that could be digested and the relation of the two brought to the attention of this body to the benefit of all concerned. I think I see already that our distressed condition in the agricultural regions is largely—or in a measure, at least-brought about or affected by our present transportation situation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is the request of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Len-ROOT] for unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution. Is there objection?

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendments of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 4, after the word "Senators," to insert "three of whom shall be members of the majority party and two of whom shall be members of the minority party"; on the same page, line 7, after the word "Representatives," to insert "three of whom shall be members of the majority party and two of whom shall be members of the minority party"; on page 2, line 21, after the word "commission," to insert "or any subcommittee of its members"; and, on the same page, line 22, after the word "Congress," to insert "in the District of Columbia or elsewhere," so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint commission is hereby created, to be known as the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, which shall consist of five Senators, three of whom shall be members of the majority party and two of whom shall be members of the minority party, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and five Representatives, three of whom shall be members of the majority party and two of whom shall be members of the minority party, to be appointed by the Speaker.

Said commission shall investigate and report to the Congress within 90 days after the passage of this resolution upon the following subjects:

90 days after the passage of this resolution upon the following subjects:

1. The causes of the present condition of agriculture.

2. The cause of the difference between the prices of agricultural products paid to the producer and the ultimate cost to the consumer.

3. The comparative condition of industries other than agriculture.

4. The relation of prices of commodities other than agriculture.

5. The banking and financial resources and credits of the country, especially as affecting agricultural credits.

6. The marketing and transportation facilities of the country. The commission shall include in its report recommendations for legislation which in its opinion will tend to remedy existing conditions and shall specifically report upon the limitations of the powers of Congress in enacting relief legislation.

The commission shall elect its chairman, and vacancies occurring in the membership of the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments.

The commission or any subcommittee of its members is authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of Congress in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witneses, and to employ such personal services and incur such expenses as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this resolution; such expenditure shall be paid from the contingent funds of the Senate and the House of Representatives in equal proportions, upon vouchers authorized by the committee and signed by the chairman thereof.

The amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON subsequently said: Mr. President, I was absent from the Chamber when Senate concurrent resolution No. 4 was passed. I had intended to offer some amendments to the resolution, and supposed that it would not come up until the calendar was reached. I have not the amendments ready to-day, and I would like to have the vote by which the resolution was passed reconsidered.

I will ask the Senator to confer with me

Mr. LENROOT. I will asl later in regard to the matter.

Mr. KENYON. I enter the motion, at least, to reconsider and then we can discuss the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER ( Cur. 3 in the chair). The motion to reconsider will be entered.

ADDITIONAL CLERK FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COMMITTEE.

Mr. BALL. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate resolution 68.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let the resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The reading clerk read Senate resolution 68, submitted by Mr. Ball on the 6th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an additional clerk at the rate of $1,600 per annum, to be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, during the first session of the Sixty-seventh Con-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware informs me that this is an emergency matter, and that there is great need for its immediate consideration. Under those circumstances I shall not object, but upon the disposition of the resolution I shall renew my motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, before granting consent for the consideration of the resolution I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware a few questions about the matter.

Is this clerk in addition to the forces that the District Committee had at the last session of Congress?

Mr. BALL. It is one additional clerk over our regular force. The District of Columbia Committee had no additional clerk at the last session.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the necessity for an additional clerk now?

Mr. BALL. There are a number of very important matters which it is necessary for the District Committee to consider, requiring hearings every day. One is the trolley system here, leading up, we hope, to a merger of the systems. Another is the rent act, on which we are holding hearings now every day.

Further than that, there is the school proposition, which has been taken up by a subcommittee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand, for the hearings there is a stenographer employed by the committee.

Mr. BALL. That is true; but in preparing for the hearings two clerks are required in the committee room all the time to take care of the people who are constantly appearing there. The committee has become a very active committee. For the last four years the room has not been open to the public. committee room now is open to the people of the District of Columbia, and it requires an additional force to take care of those desiring information.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Who was the chairman of the committee in the last Congress?

Mr. BALL. Mr. Sherman. Mr. UNDERWOOD. I always found that Senator to be very active and attentive to his business. I had not heard any complaint that the business of the people of the District of Columbia was not attended to.

Mr. President, practically every day now we have a proposal to increase the clerical force of some committee. I do not propose to object. If the chairman of the committee says that he has to have additional clerks, of course the business of the Senate has to be carried on; but I do not understand why suddenly we should have to increase the clerical forces of all the committees of the Senate, when for two years in the past, under a Republican control of the Senate, we did not need them, and for four years before that, under a Democratic control of the Senate, we did not need them. Now, suddenly, not due to party change—not speaking of the matter from a party standpoint, because in the last two years the Republican Party was in control of the Senate—we find that a large number of the committees of the Senate insist on additional clerical force. I think these questions ought to be looked into.

I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware whether or not this expense comes out of the contingent fund of the Senate?

Mr. BALL. It comes out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and it is only for the first session.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Has the resolution been reported on by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. BALL. It has.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I have nothing more to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, H. R. 4803.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I merely wish to ask, in view of the fact that there was no session of the Senate yesterday, whether the calendar is to be called this morning?

The PRESIDENT was towners. The Chair understands that

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the order prescribed by the rules for yesterday does not pass over until to-day. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 4803, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMENTS ON ADDRESS BY AMBASSADOR HARVEY.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, of all the criticisms uttered, written, or published concerning Ambassador Harvey's recent speech before the Pilgrim Society, in London, the most effective denunciation and criticism, though indirect, is that of the President of the United States in his speech at the memorial services at Hoboken, N. J., on May 23; in his speech at Old Pokick Church, Virginia, on May 29; and in his speech at Arlington, Va., on Memorial Day. In order that the Senate may see how complete the President's denial of the statements of Ambassador Harvey is, I am going to read the two to the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent that the same may be printed in the RECORD in parallel columns, with the underscored words in each italicized.

AMBASSADOR HARVEY V. PRESIDENT HARDING.

A DEADLY PARALLEL.

We deceive ourselves occa-sionally, of course. * * * Even to this day, at rare intervals an ebullient sophomore seeks applause and wins a smile by shouting that "We won the war!" Far more prevalent until recently was the impression * * * that we went into the war to rescue humanity from all kinds of menacing perils. Not a few remain convinced that we sent our young soldiers across the sea to save this Kingdom and France and Italy. This is not the fact. We sent them solely to save the United States of America. At that, we were not too proud to fight, whatever that may mean. We were afraid not to fight. That is the real truth of the matter.

[From President Harding's speech at old Pohick Church, Vir-ginia.]

We unsheathed the sword in be half of suffering humanity and were brought into a supreme and sublime effort to save the civilization of the world.

Across the seas we sent our hosts of liberty's sons commissioned to "redress the eternal scales."

[President Harding's message read in London May 30 at the un-veiling of three busts of George Washington presented to Great Britain by American citizens.]

Britain by American citizens.]
In the greatest and most unselfish effort that men ever put forth to protect human honor and treasured institutions they (the British and American peoples) stood shoulder to shoulder. They learned how great a responsibility they shared in the world, how greatly they might discharge it when serving in complete accord and in alliance with other peoples likewise devoted to human rights, liberties, and welfare.

If these memorials shall somewhat contribute to the perpetua-these memorians shall some-what contribute to the perpetua-tion of such accord in such causes, they will have done for humanity the precise service whose hope is the motive of the gift.

Mr. President, the statements above quoted from the speech of Mr. Harvey, and especially those in italics, are untrue. constitute a libel upon the Government of the United States. They constitute a desecration of the memory of every one of the nearly 100,000 young men who gave up their lives on the battle fields of France. They are an insult to every one of the nearly 5,000,000 soldiers who enlisted in that great conflict. They constitute a wanton libel upon every patriotic man and woman in this country. They are the words of a craven and a sycophant. The statement that "We were afraid not to fight" is as false as Satan himself, and the statement that "We sent them—our soldiers—solely to save the United States of America" is so false that I do not believe there is an intelligent man, woman, or child in all the world that can not bear evidence of its falsity.

Mr. President, these several statements of the President of the United States above quoted, in speeches almost immediately following the speech of Mr. Harvey, come with peculiar force and power at this time. Whatever is said by the President of the United States is always of the greatest importance, but when a falsehood against the Nation has been uttered, when a desecration against our soldier dead has been made, when a wanton libel against every patriotic American has been published, the words of our President pointing out the falsehood, making clear the desecration, and repudiating and rebuking the libel come with the greatest force and power. I want to commend the President of the United States for uttering these rebukes to Mr. Harvey. He deserves the greatest credit for promptly repudiating the ignoble sentiments of the man who happens, by a great misfortune, to be the ambassador to Great Britain. The words of the President prove that he is an honest and a sincere and a patriotic American.

Mr. President, I hope President Harding will go further and take the step necessary to right the wrong that Mr. Harvey has perpetrated upon the American people. I hope he will recall him from his post. Mr. Harvey, after the publication of these false statements about his own country and about his country's soldiers, ought not to be permitted to represent our people at the court of the British Nation. It is a shame to America to be represented abroad by a man who thus expresses the contempt he has for his own Nation and its soldiers. Everybody knows that if we had been the craven and cowardly materialists as we were pictured by Mr. Harvey, we should never have sent our soldiers 3,000 miles across the seas to fight the battles of civilization and humanity.

Mr. President, we are told that this man, in addition to his duties as ambassador to England, is to be put on allied councils and commissions. Surely, after the sentiments expressed by him at the Pilgrim's dinner, our Government will not add to the honors ands powers of this man whose statements were, in effect at least, rebuked and denied by the President of the United States. He is not a fit representative of either our Government or its people. I protest against his being retained, and I again express the earnest and patriotic hope that our President will recall him immediately. Protests against Mr. Harvey are coming in from patriotic men and women through-out the Nation. I sincerely hope the President will heed these protests.

I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD, in connection with my remarks, the War Mothers' resolutions that were adopted in Philadelphia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WAR MOTHERS CALL FOR REPUBLIATION OF COL. HARVEY'S WORDS—PROTEST TO HARDING SAYS SPEECH INSULTS ALL AMERICANS—URGE WIDE ACTION.

"A resolution calling upon President Harding to repudiate the recent speech of Col. George Harvey, in which the American ambassador to Great Britain gave his interpretation of the reasons that prompted America to enter the World War, was adopted yesterday at the convention of Pennsylvania State Chapter, National American War Mothers, at 1616 Arch Street.

"Ambassador Harvey's remarks were declared to be not only an insult to the soldiers who lost their lives in the World War but an insult to 'everything the women of America hold dear.'

The introduction of the resolution at the afternoon session of the convention by Mrs. J. M. Gallagher, first vice president of the body, precipitated a stormy 10-minute debate. When quiet was restored it was found that while some of the delegates objected to the wording of the resolution all favored the idea prompting its introduction.

"The resolution as adopted follows:

"'Whereas the Senate of the United States of America, on April 2, 1917, declared that we were in a state of war;

"'Whereas we believed that it was through no fear of loss, no greed for gain, but for a great idea, for the saving of the nations and the freedom of the world that we submitted to the sacrifice of our sons and countrymen:

"'Therefore we, the Pennsylvania State Chapter of the National American War Mothers, assembled in convention in Philadelphia, declare we have read with the utmost abhorrence the words reported to have been spoken by George Harvey, ambassador to England. Those words are an insult to everything the women of America hold dear.

'They defame every man and woman who made sacrifices during the war in the hope of hastening the coming of peace and all it implies.

"'Our beloved sons—soldiers, sailors, and marines—fought, suffered, and died believing they were crusaders in a great cause. The words of Mr. Harvey lead us to believe that they fought in vain.

Our dead soldiers can not repudiate this insult; it remains for the mothers whose sons made the sacrifice to do so.

"Therefore we, the mothers of sons who were in the Army and the Navy, ask the President of the United States to repudiate this insult to the country and to remove the stain which the words of Mr. Harvey have placed upon the honored dead of the World War, who died for the ideals of the United States of America.'

"After adoption of the resolution the State body decided not only to send copies of the protest to other State chapters, but to urge them to make similar protests. Copies also are to be sent to President Harding and Secretary of State Hughes. One of the delegates signified her intention of sending a copy, marked personal, to Mr. Harvey.

"Protests were also heard by the organization against the refusal of a cemetery to permit the burial of a soldier, slain in France, on Memorial Day. This refusal, it was said, is based on a rule of the Philadelphia Cemetery Association prohibiting funerals on Sundays and holidays.

"Speakers at the convention expressed opposition to America participating in any conference of powers which does not include all of the allied nations.

"'We went into this war for peace, but we can't expect to get it by letting the leaders of three nations get together and make decisions for all, Mrs. Gallagher said.

"The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted in Mrs. R. Rowan being elected State war mother; Mrs. Gallagher, Mrs. Kirk W. Magill, and Mrs. George Howell were reelected first vice president, second vice president, and financial secretary, respectively, and Mrs. Alice Park, recording and corresponding secretary.

"At the close of the meeting the delegates were the guests of the Overseas Women's Service Legion, in the assembly room of the Emergency Aid. Later they were the guests of Mrs. Rowan Memorial services will be held to-day on city hall plaza, Mayor Moore will make an address and a huge wreath will be presented in honor of the dead heroes."

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Curtis in the chair) The Senator from Wisconsin proposes an amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The Assistant Secretary. On page 51, line 17, strike out $53,000,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$38,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, this bill, as amended by the Senate, increases the 1916 naval program by the addition of two airplane carriers, at a cost of $26,000,000 each; or a total Fifteen million dollars is appropriated in the bill toward the construction of those carriers. It is true that the authorization for 12 destroyers, a part of the 1916 program, is revoked; but there is a net increase in this bill over the 1916 program of at least $30,000,000.

The amendment I propose reduces the $53,000,000 appropriated on account of construction to $38,000,000. In other words, the $15,000,000 appropriated by the committee amendment for airplane carriers will be taken out of the $90,000,000 appropriated for construction, if my amendment be adopted.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield. Mr. POMERENE. I was attracted by the statement made by the Senator to the effect that the bill increase 1 the 1916 program by $30,000,000, and I was not quite clear as to what the Senator meant by that.

Mr. LENROOT. Two airplane carriers at $26,000,000 each makes an increase of $52,000,000 over the 1916 program. But there is revoked the authority for 12 destroyers, which I think cost something less than $2,000,000 apiece; so that there is a net increase over the 1916 program of about $30,000,000.

If this amendment be adopted, it will take the $15,000,000 out of the $90,000,000 appropriated for construction. If the amendment is not adopted, $105,000,000 will be appropriated the next fiscal year for the construction program. Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator proposes to make the reduction in the item, "On account of hulls and outfits of vessels and machinery of vessels heretofore authorized to be available until expended"?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes. I did that on the theory that that money would be expended upon the vessels not nearing completion, while the item of $33,000,000 for armor and armament presumably would be expended on vessels which are nearing completion under present appropriations.

Mr. President, what is the 1916 program? As as I have said many times, I have not suggested its abandonment, although I do feel convinced that the 1916 program should be revised. The 1916 program, as adopted by Congress, carried out the report of the General Board of the Navy Department as to policy, and that policy was declared in the report to be this:

The Navy of the United States shall ultimately be equal to the most powerful navy maintained by any other nation of the world. It should be gradually increased to this point by such a rate of development year and year as may be permitted by the facilities of the country, but the limit above defined should be attained not later than 1925.

Therefore it was contemplated that when this program was completed, even without the addition of this $52,000,000, we should be the first naval power in the world. That is the policy Congress has adopted.

What is the English policy, Mr. President, with reference to this question? I read from a memorandum on naval policy by the present first lord of the Admiralty of England, Lord Lee, of Fareham. On March 12 last he said:

Estimates can only be based upon policy, and the naval policy of the Government, as announced by my predecessor in the House of Commons on March 17, 1920, is to maintain a "one-power standard"—i. e., that our navy should not be inferior in strength to that of any other power.

If we, then, are to adopt as a policy that we are to be the first naval power in the world and Great Britain has adopted a like policy, where will the race for supremacy in armaments I do not know whether members of the committee at present believe that the United States should go on and become the first naval power in the world, but I am certain that the country will not stand for the appropriations which would be necessary in this race for supremacy in armaments.

What does Admiral Sims say upon this question? In his testimony before the Naval Affairs Committee on February 4 last he said:

last he said:

It is not a question in my mind of a second-class Navy or a first-class Navy. If we have no ideas, as I understand we have not, and we never have had, of extending our territory, and have no policy of aggrandizement at all, then we do not need as large a Navy as our enemies that are 3,000 miles away. If you will refer to any competent writer—for instance, from Admiral Mahan up and down—you will see what I mean. I have a book of Mahan's * * * and you will see in there a discussion of the matter of the relative importance of the distance that your enemies are away from you. I do not hesitate to say that a British Navy twice as great as ours could not successfully carry out any aggression against our coast, particularly in view of the modern weapons that we have now. Without going into a discussion in detail, my opinion is this: That if the enemy nation is 3,000 miles away they have not any ships at all that can come over here and go back again without being coaled. She has got to have a base on this side. She has no destroyers at all that can come across the ocean at anything like fleet speed, and they must have bases for them. There is no base on this side, and there never will be one on this side adequate to take care of a fleet of that kind and keep it in repair. They could not maintain a fleet on this side and keep it in repair. Now, it is up to us to decide, if we want to be on the defensive and have no idea of going across the ocean with our fleet to attack anybody else, as to what size the fleet should be. That is not the sort of thing to get into a quarrel about, but it is something that must be gone carefully into by competent military people.

Mr. President, is the United States going ahead to become the

Mr. President, is the United States going ahead to become the first naval power in the world, when no one I know of contemplates any possibility of war with the first naval power in the world? As I have said before on this floor, we ought to continue to be the second naval power in the world. safety depends upon that. But beyond that point, Mr. President, it is a waste of the taxpayers' money to either build or maintain a navy greater than that.

More than that, Mr. President, we do not seem, to judge from the debates which have taken place in the consideration of this bill, to have learned anything, either from the Great World War or the developments which have taken place since that war. shall not repeat this morning what I said the other day about the development of the airplane and chemical warfare and the submarine, but it does seem to me that it does not require a naval expert or a military expert to know that the warfare of the future has already been completely revolutionized, and it is a serious question whether the battleships it is proposed to build under this program will not be absolutely obsolete before they are completed.

What is the opinion of some naval experts other than our own upon this subject? I read from a statement made by Admiral Sir Percy Scott, of England, who is said to be the greatest naval brain that Great Britain has. Writing in the London Times of March 15 last, he said:

I have asked the question, "What is the use of a battleship?" and have received one direct reply. A midshipman has told me, "She is no damned use at all." I sincerely hope to morrow that some member of the house will elicit from the Government where we shall stow away our battleships in the event of our going to war. Shall we construct a safe harbor for them in Iceland?

Admiral Scott had repeated this in half a dozen letters in one of those famous discussions of public affairs conducted by the London Times, extending from November to February. In an early letter he put the English case against the battleship:

You must admit that in the war we were nearly forced to submission by starvation.

You must admit that the German battleship played no part in reducing us to a state of starvation.

You must admit that if our battleship superlority had been double what it was they could not have protected us from starvation.

You must admit that the dominant arm of the war was the submarine.

And, again, he said:

The building of battleships will be supported by all the battleship builders of the world, because it is the bread whereby they live. Look what a paying concern it is; would not any of your readers like to get a nice, fat contract for, say, only 5 battleships at 35,000,000 of golden sovereigns? In these circumstances we must expect the construction of battleships to be backed by many people, possessing strong political interest, commercial interest, and the support of capital. We must also expect the necessity of battleships to be supported by all the navies of the world; for naval men do not commit suicide, and battleships are vital to their profession and vital to their comfort. To be captain of a battleship is the ambition of every naval officer. Who else in the world travels about with the same comfort as the captain of a battleship? He has a large drawing-room, a dning room in which he can seat 25 or 30 guests, a commodious bedroom with bathroom attached, and spare bedrooms.

All these points will naturally be taken into consideration, or, at any rate, they will flit through the mind of every naval officer before he decides to vote for "not building battleships." These points will also have to be taken into consideration by the taxpayer when he is asked to put his hand in his pocket to pay for the superbattleships, their nurses, and other accessories.

The situation in England is not so different than it seems to

The situation in England is not so different than it seems to be in the United States. I have the greatest respect for our naval officers and their patriotism. I do not question that they are giving us their best judgment, but naval officers are human, just like the rest of us. There is not very much glory for a naval officer if the warfare of the future is to be carried on through gases and chemical means, the airplane, and the submarine.

As I said the other day, the progress that is being made in chemical warfare, the progress that is being made in aerial development, the progress that is being made in the submarine, it seems to me, ought to convince every Senator, whether he ever was aboard a naval vessel or not, that, as to some of the vessels at least, under this program we should go slowly, because it is altogether likely that from every standpoint they will have to be redesigned for protection against chemical warfare, protection against airplanes, and protection against the submarine.

What did Admiral Fiske say upon this subject? I shall support the provision in the bill with reference to the construction of two airplane carriers. I think they are absolutely essential. Admiral Fiske, in his testimony before the House committee, was asked as to the relative importance of the airplane carrier and the battleship, and this was his reply:

Well I am sure-

He said-

I can put it this way: If there was to be a fight on the ocean between an airplane carrier on the one side and two battleships on the other side, and I had to be on one side or the other, I would go on the airplane carrier rather than be on the two battleships.

Yet it is proposed to carry out the 1916 program with all these battleships. The committee recognize the value of airplane carriers, but they do not propose to diminish by one single ship the battleship program of 1916.

Now, Mr. President, I see the force of the argument that pending a conference for disarmament we should not suspend our naval program, we should not abandon it, but it will have just as much influence upon the other naval powers with whom we shall go into conference if we spend $50,000,000 during the next year upon our construction program as if we spend $90,000,000. No one can question that. To the one power we possibly should fear we can make it clear that we propose to remain the second naval power in the world, and there is no other power that can compete with us as long as that is made plain. We do not need to throw away the money of the taxpayers at this time in order to meet that point. No one, no member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, no Senator that I know of, has ventured to suggest that we are in the slightest danger of engaging in a war with any great power within the next year, two years, or five years. That being so, why not save this $15,000,000 at least in the construction program for the people by taking the $15,000,000 appropriation for airplane carriers out of the $90,000.000 appropriation for construction?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, of all the witnesses who appeared before the Committee on Naval Affairs not one entered any dissent to proceeding as rapidly as possible with the construction of battle cruisers in the 1916 program.

Mr. KING. Mr. President-

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one minute. I have scarcely gotten to the beginning of what I was going to say. I will yield to the Senator in just a moment.

That program provided for six battle cruisers. Those battle cruisers are the least advanced of any of the capital ships upon which construction is being carried on.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield that I may ask why

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is so because of the policy of the department in entering into contracts for the battleships before they entered into contracts for the battle cruisers. Whether that policy was correct or whether it was wise, I am not discussing.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask whether at the time of the adoption of the program the necessity for battle cruisers was not made so clear that it was the judgment then, not only of naval experts but of both Houses of Congress, that battle cruisers were absolutely necessary with battleships?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is very far from being the case that both Houses of Congress and naval experts, without division of opinion, entertained that idea. On the contrary, there was a very great division of opinion as to the comparative merits of battle cruisers and battleships, and that division of opinion-

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no.
Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will allow me Mr. LENROOT. The Senator misunderstands me.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will allow me to complete my sentence, then I will yield to him. That division of opinion continues down to the present time to such an extent that the critics of this program, including those whom the Senator has mentioned, particularly Admiral Fiske-and I may mention Admiral Fullam, who appeared before the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs and severely criticized the policy of the Naval General Board—absolutely failed to criticize the lack of cruisers, and particularly battle cruisers, in the American Navy. Judging by their silence, they do not regard this as a weakness. I believe the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs upon all the testimony they took do regard it as a weakness, in spite of the fact that the very critics the Senator from Wisconsin cites have failed in any way whatever to point out the absence of cruisers or delay in the construction of battle cruisers or to emphasize that as a weakness in the program.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will yield further

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator may have misunderstood me. I did not say, nor do I wish to be understood as saying, that anyone believes that battle cruisers could take the place of battleships. I took a very active part in that 1916 program in the House, and I remember very distinctly that it was, it seemed to me, the unanimous opinion that with the battleships we must have battle cruisers.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was.

Mr. LENROOT. That is the point I made.
Mr. POINDEXTER. It was the opinion that we must have battle cruisers; but as to the comparative value, as to which should be constructed first, as to which was the more important, there was a very profound and most decided difference of opinion, and that difference of opinion continues down to the present time.

Out of all that difference of opinion, perhaps, has grown the fact that the contracts for battleships were let first, and the construction work upon them is very far advanced, on all of them with the exception of one which is not very far advanced, and that the battle cruisers have only just now been laid

I was going to say in connection with that observation, as relating to the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, that the appropriation which was provided for in the House and which was not changed in the report of the Senate committee, but which the Senator from Wisconsin proposes to cut down $15,000,000, only provided a sufficient amount of money to proceed at a reduced rate of prog-ress upon the construction of this program; but the General Board of the Navy and the Bureau of Construction intend, if this appropriation is made, to use the larger proportion of it to proceed with construction at a more rapid rate with the battle cruisers than with the battleships, and also with the scout cruisers or light cruisers.

I wish to state the information that I have from Admiral Taylor, and I have no reason whatever to doubt it; I rely upon it, and if it is mistaken in any way I should be glad if the mistake is pointed out. It is that the entire appropriation provided for in the House bill of $90,000,000 will allow the department to proceed at the proportionate rates of 60 per cent of the normal rate of progress upon the construction of the battle cruisers, of 50 per cent upon the construction of the scout cruisers, and of only 25 per cent upon the construction of the battleships. If the appropriation is retained as it is, instead of being increased, to say nothing of cutting it down, it will be absolutely necessary to demobilize a great deal of the construction force which is now engaged in work upon these ships and a great many men will have to be discharged. The Navy Department is anticipating a bitter struggle with the con-tractors and with the men who are engaged in work upon these vessels at the present time when the necessity for discharging men and for reducing the rate of progress upon these ships is created by the limitation of the $90,000,000 that is carried in the bill.

I understand that the Senator from Wisconsin does not propose at all by his amendment absolutely to abandon this program; he does not propose to scrap the work that has already been done upon the ships. Consequently, the only result of his amendment proposing to reduce the $90,000,000 by $15,000,000 would be still further to slow down and disorganize the forces which are engaged upon that work, with the necessity later on either of sacrificing through the reduced rate of construction the increased value of the ships which will accrue as time goes on or else of being put to an enormous expense to reorganize and to repair the great damage which will be done by cutting down to a still greater extent the appropriations made for carrying on the work.

Mr. President, I do not propose at this time again to go into a general argument of the various questions which have been suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, for instance, as to the comparative military value—if I may use that expression—of battleships and airplane carriers. The Senate Naval Affairs Committee in its report and the House in its bill recognize the value of both. The Senate committee added to the pending bill an appropriation for airplane carriers. The Senator from Wisconsin agrees with the Senate committee as to the value of airplane carriers, but he does not agree with the committee in its opinion of the value of battleships. The Senator from Wisconsin draws a picture of an imaginary action at sea between one airplane carrier and two battleships and quotes some naval officer as saying that if he were engaged in the battle he would prefer to be upon the airplane carrier rather than upon one of the battleships.

Mr. President, the only purpose of an airplane carrier is to carry airplanes; the only purpose of an airplane carrier is to enable the nation which possesses it in an engagement to put into the action battle and bombing and observation planes. Why should a critic of this program, why should the Senator from Wisconsin, in his amendment to the bill, use as an argument an imaginary battle in which one side is equipped with airplanes while the other is not equipped with airplanes? Why the supposition that the United States under this program, or any of its opponents, in case unfortunately it should be engaged in war with any of them, is going exclusively to provide only one of these arms for making naval war? The reasonable and the natural supposition would be that both sides are going to have airplanes, and that, instead of the imaginary action between airplane carriers and battleships, there would be an action between airplane carriers and battleships and torpedo boat destroyers and submarines upon the one side and the same arms of the service upon the other side. That is the theory of the Navy General Board, and apparently it is upon that theory that the difference between the Navy General Board and Sir Percy Scott and between the Admiralty of Great Britain and Sir Percy Scott and between the naval authorities of Japan and Sir Percy Scott is based. They do not assume that a nation is going to confine itself to one class of ships or to one means of making naval warfare, but assume that it is going to provide itself with the various branches of the service, all of which are necessary to make up a complete and well-

The Senator from Wisconsin quotes with some emphasis the opinion of Sir Percy Scott. Sir Percy Scott is a very distinguished officer: he is a retired officer of the British Navy: but it seems to me when we are discussing naval authorities that it is sufficient comment to make upon the opinion of Sir Percy Scott that his own country has not adopted his advice. I know that there is a great deal of propaganda in the United States from British sources, including Sir Percy Scott, including British newspaper writers who occupy very important positions upon American newspapers, to the effect that we ought not to be a rival of Great Britain either in naval power or in a merchant marine. I have been a great admirer of Admiral Sims; he is a brilliant and competent naval officer; but I do not agree with Admiral Sims nor with Admiral Fullam nor with the Members of this body who contend that the naval policy of the United States ought to be based upon a plan that when we may be engaged in some conflict with a foreign power we should abandon the seas, take our stand upon the land, carry on merely a defensive warfare, and allow our commerce and our outlying possessions to be sacrificed. It seems to me that there is some ground for the charges that are made against some of these naval critics of favoritism and undue preference for some other nation than their own when they make an argument to the effect that foreign nations are justified in maintaining a power sufficient to protect their rights upon the seas but that the United States should abandon its citizens and its commerce and merely prepare to defend its coast line. I do not agree with that; I do not believe that that policy will be supported by the American people. I believe that they are in favor, not of building up a navy the first in the world, but in favor of the United States maintaining a position which will enable it to do whatever is necessary to stand upon an equal footing with every other power upon the great pathways of commerce around the world and to protect its island possessions.

Mr. President, if I agreed with the policy which is proposed and which was specifically stated by some of the retired naval officers in their testimony before the Committee on Naval Affairs, that in case of difficulty with some foreign nation we should abandon our commerce and leave the seas to our enemies, I would not be advocating a navy so great as that which is proposed in the House bill, for I believe it would be absolutely unnecessary.

I would not advocate an appropriation of the taxpayers' money as great as that which is being assented to by the Senator from Wisconsin, because a much smaller amount would enable the United States to accomplish that end, if it cared to take that backward step and to abandon the position of selfrespect and of the protection of the rights of its citizens which it has maintained since the days of its feebleness, when it first became an independent Nation. If it cared to act merely as a land power upon the defensive along the coast line, that object could be attained with a very much smaller amount of money. I would agree with the critics of this bill if that were to be the limit of the ambition and of the intention of this great people; but that is not the policy nor the theory upon which this bill was reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs. It was reported upon the theory that the United States, being a world power, should have a sufficient force at sea to enable it to command the respect of other nations and to defend its nationals and its nationals' rights wherever they might exist, to protect the great volumes of commerce which are carried on by our people with the other nations of the world, and to insure that the American flag, wherever it may float upon the seas or upon the outlying possessions of the United States, shall be respected by all the world.

Mr. President, there is one other remark that I wish to make by way of a passing comment. The argument has been made by the Senator from Wisconsin, if I did not misinterpret what he says, that the force back of the policy of battleships is the desire of naval officers to display themselves in gold lace and to enjoy the pomp and glory of war. Mr. President, I resent that as a libel upon the Navy and upon the honorable, faithful, self-sacrificing and patriotic men, officers and enlisted men, who compose its personnel. I doubt whether there is an individual amongst the officers of the American Navy who would deliberately sacrifice the interests of his country by advocating the expenditure of the public money for the building of a ship which he did not believe to be efficient, merely in order that he might have an opportunity to gratify his pride in display and love of glory. I am sure the Senator from Wis-consin speaks inadvisedly. I do not think that he would intend to convey any such impression; I do not think that the American people would be convinced that that is the purpose of the Navy General Board and other officers of the Navy who have laid down as one of the principles of modern naval warfare the retention of the battleship as one branch of the naval service.

Mr. President, what ground is there for saying that battleships are obsolete? It is merely conjecture; it is merely theory. There is no practical experience to show that they are obsolete. A good deal has been said about what submarines can do. The world has just recently been engaged in the greatest war, haps, of all time. What did battleships do and what did submarines do in that war? Battleships, as it can be demonstrated, I believe, saved civilization and won the war for the In the greatest naval battle of modern times, the Battle of Jutland, battleships played the chief part. It was due to the British battleships, under the policy of Great Britain of building and maintaining a fleet of battleships, that it was able to defend the imperial interests of Great Britain and of the British Empire: it was because of that policy that the Germans were driven back at the Battle of Jutland and were bottled up in their ports and the command of the seas was retained in the hands of the Allies. That is the only experience we have had. The submarines lost and the battleships won. That does not indicate any deduction on the part of those who are responsible for the naval policy of the United States, and, I may say, of all other great naval powers, that they would minimize the value of submarines. On the contrary, they believe that as an auxiliary arm submarines are not only valuable but that they are absolutely essential.

So, Mr. President, I trust that this reduced amount, $90,000,-000, which is not increased in the report of the Senate committee, but remains the same as in the bill which was sent to the Senate from the House, will not be reduced by the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, and that the amendment will be defeated

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Washington, in the first place I made no such reflection upon our naval officers as the Senator from Washington seemed to assume. I did read some quotations from Sir Percy Scott, and I did say that there was not much pomp or glory in chemical warfare or in warfare conducted from submarines or airplanes; and that is true. With all due deference to our naval officers, and conceding to them, as I do, the highest degree of patriotism, I think that the events that have occurred recently do indicate that they are not open-minded with reference to either chemical warfare or airplane warfare. I do not know why, and I have not been able to understand why the officers of the Navy are so averse to bombing tests from airplanes. If they are merely getting information for the good of the country, why should we not have every kind of test, and let Congress judge of the merits of those tests?

With reference to chemical warfare, I do not know why it is that in some quarters every discovery seems to be discounted, and a disinclination seems to exist to accord to it any value. I do not know why it is, in view of some of these developments that we all know are taking place, that there should be this disinclination to go slowly upon this naval program, not with a view to its abandonment, but with a view, when it is completed, to taking advantage of all of the developments, of all the progress that has been made in every kind of warfare. It is not for me to answer those questions, and yet they naturally occur to anybody.

But, Mr. President, the Senator from Washington has said that we need these battleships, this entire program, because we must protect our commerce upon the sea. It seems to me that it was demonstrated in the last war that we must have a battle fleet superior to the battle fleet of any other nation that we can by any possibility expect that we may come in conflict with; but, having that, just what will happen? Just what happened in the World War. Our battleships will be bottled up in our own ports. The battleships of our enemy will be bottled up in their own ports. It was not the battleships of Great Britain that protected English commerce upon the sea in the last war, except as they kept the German battle fleet in German ports. What happened? With the English battleships safe in their own ports, English commerce was being destroyed at the rate of 600,000 tons a month; and if it had not been that we came into the war, England, in spite of her navy, would in all probability have been compelled to surrender; and it was not our battleships that saved the day. It was not our battleships that protected the commerce upon the sea after we got into the war. It was our destroyers and our patrol ships and our little ships that did the work.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, what does the Senator claim won the battle of Jutland?

Mr. LENROOT. Why, I have just said that we must have a battle fleet that will keep in her own ports the battle fleet of any other nation with which we are engaged in war, but beyond that point our battle fleet would be absolutely valueless as far as protecting our commerce upon the sea is concerned.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I agree with the Senator entirely.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If we have enough battleships to keep the enemy's battleships bottled up, that is all we need. Mr. LENROOT. No; England had that, and yet her commerce was being destroyed and she was brought to her knees through the submarine. Did her battleships protect England from the submarine?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; the submarines were destroyed, and the Allies won the war notwithstanding the submarines, and won it by battleships.

Let me ask the Senator one other question. have been the effect upon the war if, instead of the German battleships being driven back and bottled up, the British battleships had been driven back and bottled up in their ports?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, I have repeatedly said-I said when I began, 10 minutes ago-that there was one necessity, and that we must have such a battle fleet as would keep our enemy's battle fleet bottled up in her own ports; but beyond that point no battleship will protect a single ton of commerce.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They would not need to if they had the enemy bottled up.

Mr. LENROOT. They would not need to? With the commerce of England being destroyed, as I said, at the rate of 600,000 tons a month, at the time that we got into the war, as the Senator knows, it seemed that you could take a pencil and paper and almost within a few days determine when England would be compelled to surrender, not through battleships. Her battleships, so far as protecting her commerce was concerned, other than keeping the German fleet within her own ports, were as valueless as "a painted ship upon a painted ocean." It was the other protection, the destroyers, the little ships, the patrol ships, that could cope with the submarines. The battleships did not dare even to try.

So, Mr. President, there is nothing in the statement of the Senator from Washington that we have got to have a huge fleet to protect our commerce upon the sea, when it seems so clear that I do not see how there can be any difference of opinion that for the purpose of protecting our commerce we need only such a battle fleet as will keep the opposing battle fleet within her own ports.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I hope that in pursuance of the resolution of the Senate the naval powers of the world will agree upon a sensible program of limitation of armaments; but we have not yet reached that agreement. In so far and so long as they are continuing to prepare, each nation within the conditions of its situation and its interests, to defend their rights with naval power, how does the Senator from Wisconsin-who, with all the study he has given to this matter, has given to it a comparatively small amount of time compared to the men who have devoted their whole lives to the study of itreconcile his opposition to battleships, and his opinion that battleships are obsolescent, with the fact that the great naval powers of the world are continuing to build them, including Japan and Great Britain?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I have never asked the Senate to accept my opinion that battleships are obsolescent. The Senator has heard me say repeatedly that while I believe some of these ships would be obsolescent by the time they were completed, I did not ask the Senate or any Senator to accept my view upon that question. The Senator knows very well—it has been repeated many times throughout the debate-that, so far as I am concerned, I have just two propositions. One is that I am not at all in sympathy with what is evidently the view of the Senator from Washington, that we must become the first naval power in the world. I want to ask the Senator if that is his view and if that is one of the reasons for his advocacy of this policy?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know why the Senator says that is my view. I never have said that it was.

Mr. LENROOT. That is the report of the board upon which the 1916 program is based.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not responsible for the report of the board. I do not think that is the report of the board. venture to say that that is not the report of the board, and that that is not the report of the Senate committee. That is not my view, and there has never been anything in the RECORD or out of it to base any such conclusion on.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well. Then, I take it, that being conceded, that the Senator from Washington does not propose that we shall enter into a race of armament with England. Very well

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator has somewhat changed his statement. He now says "enter into a race of armament with England." I hope we shall not enter into a race with any-I hope we shall not enter into a race with anybody. I do not propose to enter into a race with anybody. I propose, in so far as I have any part in it, that we shall carry out our program that was laid down in 1916; and I do propose, not that we shall be the first naval power in the world but that the United States shall be the equal of any other power in the world, and that we shall never deliberately take a second place to any other nation.

Mr. LENROOT. Now we have the Senator's view, then-not that we shall be superior to England in naval strength but that we must be exactly equal with it. I want to say very frankly that I have not any such view; and if England should go on with its policy, adopted last March, that it shall be the first power, and the Congress shall adopt the Senator's view that we must at all times be equal in power with England, what is it except a race for armament?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not suppose they can be exactly equal. The Senator thinks we ought not to be equal. I should like to ask him how much inferior he thinks we ought to be; how much weaker ought we to be than Great Britain?

Mr. LENROOT. I have stated many times, and I will repeat, that I am not concerned with what the naval power of England is. I am concerned with the strength of other powers.

ought to be the second naval power in the world.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not remember what the Senator's attitude was on the question to which I am about to refer, and what I say has no reference to the record of the Senator from Wisconsin: but I remember that some of those who are now opposed to a strong Navy were of the opinion that we ought not to resent the murder of our citizens upon the high seas in the sinking of the Lusitania. Some of those who are now opposed to a strong Navy were of the opinion that when Germany marked out the high seas of the world in checkerboard fashion and told us where we could go and where we could not go we ought to tamely submit. Senators who are in favor of that sort of a policy of surrender and of submission very consistently argue that we do not need a strong Navy, if that is to be the policy of the United States. But if we are to maintain a policy of peace with all the world, but a peace based upon justice and upon the protection of the rights and the lives of American citizens, then we do need a strong Navy, and when we have a strong Navy the United States will be secure and will not be compelled to maintain a strong Army. A great many people argue, it seems to me rather superficially, that if we reduce the Army we ought to reduce the Navy. I think that by reason of the fact that we maintain a strong Navy, and by reason of that fact alone, we will be able to reduce the Army to a minimum strength.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Senator stated, when he began his remarks, that he did not attribute to me some of the views to which he referred.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was not familiar with the Senator's attitude on that subject.

Mr. LENROOT. I have never held that view, and the Senator must have heard me say, because I have said it at least a dozen times at different points in this debate, that I am in favor of the United States clearly maintaining itself as the second naval power in the world. That is my position.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Who is to be the first?

Mr. LENROOT. I frankly say that Great Britain is the first, and I see no reason why the United States should attempt to outstrip Great Britain.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator thinks we ought to take our hats off and bow every time we meet Great Britain?

Mr. LENROOT. I am very glad that in the debate we are gradually getting the Senator's real views. If the Senator is advocating this program, as from his remarks he evidently is, because he wants to rival Great Britain and have a Navy that will either equal hers or exceed it, it is time the Senate and the country knew it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We have not concealed that at all. That was put in the form of a written report of the Naval Affairs Committee upon the resolution offered by the distinguished Senator from Idaho at the last session of Congress. I do not want any rivalry with Great Britain. I am sure we are not going to have any difficuty with Great Britain, but if we can use what is apparently a paradoxical word in that connection, it will militate in favor of peace if we are able to maintain our rights.

Mr. LENROOT. Let me ask the Senator a question. He voted for the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] requesting the President to call a conference for the purpose of reaching some agreement looking to naval disarmament, did he not?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is correct.

Mr. LENROOT. Do I understand the position of the Senator from Washington to be that he will not be willing for this Nation to enter into any agreement for a limitation of armament unless in that agreement it is stipulated that the United States shall be the first naval power of the world?

Mr. POINDEXTER. On the contrary, I do not want the United States to be the first, but I want it to be equal to any other. I will not myself agree to enter into any agreement for a limitation of armament except upon the basis that we shall be assured, and that there shall be adequate guaranty and security given, that the United States will be substantially and practically-of course, the exact measure is impossibleequal to any other power in the world upon the sea.

Mr. LENROOT. So, then, the Senator is not willing for the United States to enter into any agreement for the limitation of armaments unless the United States shall be permitted to change its position with reference to the naval powers of the world and become c'ther first or equal to any other?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Since the Senator from Wisconsin has asked me a question, let me ask him if he is willing to enter into an agreement by which the United States shall bind itself permanently to occupy an inferior and secondary place in the

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Washington can not scare me by any such statement as that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was not trying to scare the Senator;

I was seeking information.

Mr. LENROOT. The United States, Mr. President, has been in that inferior position from the foundation of our Government, so far as our Navy was concerned. Under that inferiority the United States has become the greatest Nation in the world. Under that inferiority the United States has become the greatest potential military and naval power in the world. It was not necessary to have a fleet of battleships superior to that of Great Britain in order for the United States to gain that position.

Mr. POINDEXTER. How could we be the greatest power in the world if we were inferior?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator heard me say "potential" naval power. He heard that.

We have very little prospect, indeed, Mr. President, of our entering into an agreement for disarmament, if the United States, as a condition of entering into such an agreement, is going to insist upon becoming the first naval power of the world. I do not want the United States to occupy any such position. I am not at all certain but that Great Britain might not be very willing to do so, and I want to say right here, Mr. President, we might as well frankly state this one fact, that if the English-speaking peoples of the world shall at any time in the future engage in war with each other, civilization will be gone, and it will make very little difference what happens after-

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I want to inquire of the Senator why he thinks Great Britain would not enter into an agreement for a reduction of armaments which would place her upon an equality with the United States?

Mr. LENROOT. Because there can be no such thing as equality in the matter of naval armament, and the Senator must

Mr. WALSH of Montana. We were not talking about exact equality, but substantial equality was what the Senator from Washington referred to. Why does the Senator think Great Britain would not assent to such an agreement? The only reason can be that if she should happen to engage in war with the United States she would not have the superiority. That is the only reason, is it not?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the fact is, as the Senator suggests, that there is not going to be any war with Great Britainand that is what we all think-why should she object to it?

Mr. LENROOT. Great Britain has territory upon which the sun never sets

Mr. POINDEXTER. The United States has territory upon which the sun never sets.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator must concede that for the protection of its possessions Great Britain needs a larger navy than the United States needs.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If that is the case, why did that British naval authority, whose opinion the Senator read from just a moment ago, declare that the naval policy of Great Britain was a one-power plan; that is, to have a navy not superior to any other power, but equal to any other power? That is all we are contending for.

Mr. LENROOT. There could be no such thing, as the Senator very well knows, as equality in naval armament, and if any such agreement is ever made, there will be constant friction between the two countries as to whether the agreement is being kept. That must be very plain.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let me ask the Senator another question; if he thinks that we ought to be, not equal to any other power, but the second naval power in the world, where is he going to find the power to take the third place? If we refuse to take the third place, how can he expect some other nation to take the third place?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator knows quite as well as I do what present conditions are. He knows quite as well as I do the reason why we should be the second power, and he knows quite as well as I do who the third power would be.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know what the Senator thinks I know. He probably credits more knowledge to me than I actually have. But I think he is referring to Japan, and Japan has been mentioned several times. I do not think we are going to have any trouble with Japan; but a good many people keep talking about it, and I assume that the Senator thinks that Japan ought to occupy the third place. But the Senator has not gotten the consent of Japan yet. Japan is planning now, and working feverishly, upon a program which Japan claims is going to make her the equal of any other power of the world upon the sea, if not the superior of any power.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Washington has just said that he did not fear that we were going to have war with Japan. I think none of us are fearing we are going to have war with Great Britain. The query I wanted to put to the Senator was this: He favors this big naval bill, when he is not fearing war with either Great Britain or Japan?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. If he were fearing war with Great Britain or Japan, how big a Navy would he want?

Mr. POINDEXTER. If I wanted to bring about a war with Japan or Great Britain, I would advocate a little, weak Navy. The quickest way to bring it on would be to reduce our Navy to a point where it would be small and weak as compared with others. Just as soon as Japan and Great Britain realize that the United States is helpless, they are going to begin the assertion of their rights in an offensive way here and there, not that that is the policy of these nations, but that inevitably follows where a strong power is dealing with a weak one. ourselves on many occasions, and with a high-spirited peoplesuch as the American people, thank God, still are-we will not put up with that kind of treatment; that will lead to war; and the only way you can preserve peace, until you bring about an agreement between these powers for a limitation of armaments, is for the United States to be in a position where it can command respect and enforce justice in its dealings with other

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, Great Britain and Japan both know that we are not a weak Nation, and there was just one time in the history of the United States when we took advantage of the fact that we were a big Nation against a little nation, and we paid $25,000,000 for that lesson.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We should not have paid it. The Senator is referring to the Colombian treaty. I think that was one of the greatest mistakes the United States ever made. I argued that matter the other day. I do not think we did right in paying that $25,000,000. I would rather have seen it paid to our own people.

Mr. POMERENE. We showed we were big enough to do the right thing when we had wronged another nation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think we had wronged any other nation. But I will not argue that with the Senator now.

Mr. POMERENE. We are getting off the subject.

Mr. LENROOT. That is referring to water that has already passed under the bridge. But the Senator from Washington was asked by the Senator from Ohio, not how large a Navy he would want if he wanted war, but how large a Navy he would be in favor of if he feared war with another nation, and that question the Senator from Washington has not answered. I would like to hear his answer.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just what is provided for in this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well; let us see what the position of the Senator is. The Senator is in favor of the same kind of a Navy, without any possibility of the need of that Navy in warfare, as we would have if he were satisfied that next year we were to be engaged in war with a first-class power.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I did not say that. Mr. LENROOT. What did the Senator say?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator heard what I said. I did not say anything about next year. If we knew that war was coming on next year, I think both the Senator and myself would advocate a somewhat accelerated speed in naval construction. But there is nothing as definite as that. I hope we will not have any war at all. But whether we do or not makes no difference so far as the naval program is concerned, in my I think that the present naval program as provided opinion. for in this bill is just about right.

Mr. LENROOT. I gather, then, that the Senator's position is that in time of profound peace, without a shadow of war anywhere upon the horizon, we should have the same sized Navy as we would have if we were engaged in a serious controversy with a first-class power?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator is again putting into my mouth things I did not say. I did not say anything about being engaged in a serious controversy with a first-class power.

Mr. LENROOT. I will amend that in this way, that he would be in favor of the same kind of a Navy in a time of profound peace that he would be in favor of if he feared war with a first-class power. That is using the Senator's own words.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let me ask the Senator a question. The Senator is advocating a considerable Navy himself, is he not?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What does he advocate it for? What are you going to have a Navy for if it is not in fear of war? Why have any battleships at all?

Mr. LENROOT. I have not said I had no fear of war. I said I was not in fear of war in the next year, or two years, or five years. But there is the possibility of war after that time unless we come to an agreement upon the limitation of armaments, and for that reason I want the United States to maintain itself as the second naval power. I do not foresee that possibility with Great Britain, and not foreseeing it, I am not in favor of maintaining a Navy equal or superior to hers.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What would the Senator do? Let me put another problem. Suppose Great Britain and Japan had navies of substantially the same size, and that is what Japan is aiming for. Suppose she accomplishes her purpose. The Senator from Wisconsin wishes the United States to occupy the second place. How would he arrange that with two other powers having navies of equal size?

Mr. LENROOT. There has been and there could be no misunderstanding of my position, and the Senator from Washington must have understood it. When I say second place he knows very well what I mean.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understood the Senator did not mean third place, but if there are two other powers

Mr. LENROOT. He knows very well that when I said second place I meant that the United States should be the first naval power other than Great Britain.

Mr. POINDEXTER. How could it be that if Japan and Great Britain are equal, as Japan plans to be?

Mr. LENROOT. Then we would become first. The Senator knows very well what I had in mind. I do not like to repeat these things. We are saying too much as it is about the possibility of war with some third power.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the reason we maintain policenot because we hope to see trouble. On the contrary, we hope that there will not be trouble, but it is all based upon the fact that the devil is still going to and fro on the earth and walking up and down therein. The devil has not yet been abolished, and that is the reason why there is always a possibility of war.

Mr. LENROOT. Apparently it has become necessary for me to say just what I mean in still a little plainer language than I have used. Japan should understand that, no matter what navy she may build, the United States proposes to maintain a navy superior to that of Japan.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then, if Great Britain is equal to Japan, our Navy would be superior to that of Great Britain.

Mr. LENROOT. Exactly. If the Senator gets any comfort out of that, let him take it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I get a great deal of comfort out of it, because we are agreed on it. I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator does not agree. Japan's navy might to-morrow be sunk to the bottom of the sea, and yet the Senator from Washington would go on with this $500,000,000 program and he would not deduct a dollar. That is the situation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Ladd in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the Senator think it would be very well to reply to the Senator from Washington by telling him-that it is absolutely impossible financially for Japan to build a navy and sustain a navy equal to that of Great Britain, so that his question is a mere question in the air?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, yes; but those arguments do not appeal to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. WILLIAMS.

She has not the potential power nor the financial power to do it. Mr. LENROOT. I am not going to occupy any further time. If we do delay the 1916 program, if we do go slow upon it, we are still going to be very far superior to the navy of Japan. Secondly, with the progress that is being made in the development of chemical warfare, airplane and submarine warfare, I wish to venture this prophecy now-and I hope the Senator from Washington will remember it-that if we go on with this program, by the time some of those battleships are completed the keels of which are now being laid, the very year that they are completed we will be told by the Senator from Washington because I hope he will still be here—that they are obsolete and that we shall have to build something else.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I think some of the questions which have been asked in this debate would be amusing if the interrogators really meant them and if those to whom they were propounded really considered them worth answering. I think the positions taken by the two Senators who have just addressed us in rapid fire, while questioning one another, are self-stultifying.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Both of them?

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand them. Reduced to its last analysis, the Senator from Washington desires a navy equal to any other navy in the world, and if I understand the Senator from Wisconsin, he desires a navy double in power to that of any other navy in the world-

Mr. LENROOT rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Although, of course, he has not said that. Wait a minute! The Senator has not said it, but he said what necessarily leads to it. The Senator from Wisconsin said he wanted a navy big enough to see that any other navy that might attack us was "bottled up." All the naval experts are of the opinion that in order to secure the bottling up of an enemy's navy, you must have twice as much naval force as the enemy has.

That just suits me to a dot if we can put it through. If we insist upon a navy big enough to "bottle up" our enemy's navy, and each other country insists, as it will, upon a navy big enough to "bottle up" its possible enemy's navy, then we will come to this, that each nation in the world after a while will have a navy equal in strength to that necessary to "bottle the navy of any other one power, and then we will come to the situation that each navy will be twice as strong as any other one navy in the world, because without having a navy twice as strong one nation can not hope safely and securely to "bottle up" the other fellow's navy. Then everybody will be navally "bottled up," and "plain along folks" can sail the high seas in peace and trade with one another-" consummation devoutly to be wished.

So, really, if the Senator from Wisconsin had considered that thought he would have come to the conclusion I have reached, that he is really advocating a navy twice as strong as that which is advocated by the Senator from Washington, who is obsessed with the idea of a big navy while the Senator from Wisconsin does not want it at all-that is, he does not want the biggest navy in the world.

The question was asked a moment ago by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] why it was that we supposed "Great Britain would not agree in a conference to have a navy no larger than ours or anybody else's." Everybody acquainted with the geography, the industrial conditions, and the history of Great Britain, and who wants to be fair, could answer that question. The first reason is that Great Britain depends upon an open pathway across the sea to feed her people. She has made it a fundamental doctrine for generations that she must have a navy sufficient to keep the seas open, and the fact that Great Britain in that position had the largest navy in the world is exactly what has led to the practical "freedom of the seas" at all times when Great Britain herself was not engaged in war and to the approximate freedom of the seas when Great Britain was engaged in war.

The first answer therefore to the Senator's question is that Great Britain can not consent to be put in a situation where we are not in that situation. We do not need a navy big enough to protect transports to feed our people. raises enough to feed her own people and to clothe them too, by the way. That is not all. Rudyard Kipling in his celebrated phrase answered the question in another way. She has a "far-flung battle line," and if the United States had only 70 per cent of the naval strength of Great Britain she would be superior to Great Britain on the high seas at any point of conflict, because Great Britain must keep a great part of her navy in the Indian Ocean; she must keep a great part of it in the Pacific Ocean. We must ourselves keep a part of our Navy in the Pacific Ocean. Great Britain must keep a part of her navy in the North Sea. Of late years she has kept it pretty well concentrated there while she was in alliance with France.

Now, let us be reasonable. The Senator from Washington asks what would the United States do if it had not the second strongest navy in the world, and answers that we would stand "helpless." The Senator did say something like that. He said that without a sufficient naval force to be equal to any other naval power we would be "helpless." Let us take our history

We have never had a Navy "equal to that of any other power." no matter who, and there has never been a war in which we were engaged where we were helpless. If another power had times the naval strength of ourselves, we would not be place of and supersede dreadnaughts and battleships or not; but that great importance consists chiefly in defending harbors. With a sufficient number of harbor-defense ships, of which submarines are the chief, we could keep the biggest navy in the world in fear and trepidation until we could build ourselves up on land to meet any possible land force that could be brought over. That would be because the enemy would have to transport its troops to our shores. We could not have transported 2,000,000 men to France, or attempted it, if Germany had had her naval force on the high seas. We would have been asses if we had at-tempted it. We would have been murderers, murdering our own soldiers and troops. We were relying upon our own Navy and that of Great Britain and that of France to protect the transports that were carrying the men abroad. We would not have attempted then, and we did not attempt then, nor did Great Britain attempt then, to land a single regiment in the Baltic or anywhere else within German territory. Why? Because the German small craft were protecting their harbors. Only Churchill, who was a civilian and not a naval man, spoke once about "digging" the Germans out of their harbors "like rats." No naval man ever mentioned it, because naval men knew more about naval warfare than to imagine it was possible.

Why do we want the biggest Navy in the world or the equal of any navy in the world unless we want to bully somebody? Why does the ordinary fellow go around in an ordinary pioneer community with both hip pockets and his boots full of things to shoot with except to bully somebody-and generally, by the way, such a man is a coward; nine times out of ten he is an arrant coward, the fact that the Germans led this raid of a nation in arms I attribute to the fact that they are not the brayest people in the world.

When they are taken at a disadvantage and know that they are going to get whipped they quit. They have not the spirit of the South African Boer or of the southerner in them, who, after they knew they were going to be whipped, kept on fighting until starved anyway in order to be able to say to his women folks, "I kept it up as long as I could," or, if to say it to nobody else, to say it to God, at any rate, and to himself.

I remember in that connection once meeting an old Confederate veteran, to whom I said, "I can understand how you boys kept on fighting after Gettysburg and after Vicksburg, but I do not understand how you kept it up after the retreat from do not understand how you kept it up after the retreat from Nashville. You knew you were whipped, did you not?" "Oh, God, John," he replied, "everybody knew we were whipped." I asked, "Why did you keep it up?" He answered, "We were afraid to stop." I said, "Afraid of what?" He replied, "Afraid of the women at home, John. They would have been ashamed of us." There is something in that. The Germans had not that feeling. I know them tolerably well; I also know our own people tolerably well our own people tolerably well.

Mr. President, we have never been "helpless" hitherto and we never have had a Navy "equal to that of any other power under the sun." Until the World War broke out we never had a Navy that was even second or third beyond dispute in strength amongst the navies of the world. Twenty years before that war broke out we had never had a Navy, except during the War between the States, that was fourth in strength or fifth in strength in comparison with the naval strength of the other nations of the world. Do Senators suppose that the statesmen of Great Britain and Japan and Germany and France and Italy are fools? Do they imagine that those statesmen do not know that there are 105,000,000 of the richest people on the surface of the globe here, with the most highly developed industries, and that unless we could be whipped in six or eight weeks or in six or eight months at the farthest we could not be whipped

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the theory China went on.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; that is not the theory that China went on. China went upon the theory of not fighting even when she was insulted or injured. She went upon the theory of never invoking the physical and moral power of her 400,000 000 population; she went upon the theory of never inculcating any patriotism or devotion for the flag of the country. That is not the theory we have gone on in all our history.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But China in natural resources is one of the richest countries in the world, and she has the greatest population of any country in the world.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My friend from Washington is very much

Mr. POINDEXTER. Her people are intelligent, industrious, able, and brave, but she pursued the policy which the Senator from Mississippi is advocating and she is the prey of other nations, being partitioned, being oppressed, being insulted because she is not able to defend herself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Washingmarines are of great importance, whether they will take the ton could not have made a greater mistake in his statement if he had just come out of the high school. China is not one of the "richest countries in the world"; China is not "one of the countries in the world with the greatest resources" in the connection in which we are speaking.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why, Mr. President, there is not— Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait a moment. China is not one of the richest countries in the world in the sense in which I am speaking, because the potential resources of a country for war purposes constitute the surplus over and above that which is absolutely necessary to feed and clothe its population. China has hardly ever seen 20 years without a famine or an epidemic. China in peace times has no appreciable surplus over and above what is sufficient to clothe and feed her population. We have 'potential resources for war purposes," because year by year we not only can feed and clothe our people but we can pile up wealth to be taxed in case of war time-to be taken outright if necessary-for the national defense.

The chief difference between China and the United States is that, while we have always practiced the idea of never being in land forces or naval forces "the equal" in absolute, immediate preparation of any of the chief or leading nations— while we "tamely submitted" to Germany keeping the largest army in the world and Great Britain the greatest fleet in the world, we meanwhile raised and educated that which is, after all, the chief resource of a people-men and women prepared to die for the Nation. Where China failed was that she did not inculcate that lesson; that is all. It was not in the fact that China did not have the biggest navy; it was not in the fact that she did not have the biggest army. You might go over there and gather an army of a million Chinamen to-morrow, and most of them would be thinking a lot more about their immediate local mandarin in their immediate Province than they would be thinking or inspired about the Chinese Empire.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I said here the other day, it is a difference in spirit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall yield in one moment.

The man who thinks that this world is governed by material considerations is blind to the voice of God and of history. It never was governed in that way. Please God, it never will be governed in that way. The world is governed by the spirit, courage, fortitude, ideals, aspirations—all that which makes a man more than a mere self-feeding automaton. Now I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. May I suggest to the Senator from Mississippl in the case of China that some centuries ago China built a wall behind which to hide, and she thus advertised her cowardice to the marauding nations of the earth, inviting attack?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course; but it is not only in "inviting attack"; that is not all, I will say to the Senator from Georgia; that is not even the chief thing. The chief thing is provoking attack. By warlike preparations we arouse the forces, enmities, jealousies, and fears of other peoples. They say, "Here are 105,000,000 people in the United States armed cap-a-pie. What are they armed in that way for? There is something they want to get out of us." Another nation may say, "They have some-thing against us." Meanwhile, we here are saying that somebody has something against the United States.

I used to be a lawyer. I was rather successful now and then in getting men off who were accused of murder. In all my practice I never defended but one man who killed another who did not kill him because he was afraid of him. Nine murders out of ten are due to the crass cowardice of the fellow who is afraid to take a chance. That has not been American history.

We have taken our chance; let us take it hereafter.

There is something in this world besides cuirasses and swords, and to go on a little bit further, if the Senator from Georgia will give me his attention for a moment, a greater danger than advertising one's self as helpless is to arouse the fears and antagonisms of other people. There is, however, a yet greater danger, and that is to arm one's self with the power to do wrong without much deliberation.

> Oh, it is excellent To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous To use it like a giant.

And yet every man having a giant's strength is tempted so to use it and generally winds up by so using it.

The Germans were not the most warlike nation in the world; they were not the most quarrelsome nation in the world; but, after they concluded they had enough soldiers to run over Belgium and France in six weeks and then meet Russia upon the other border and establish world dominion, they were like Bob Acres, who, when told that there would not be much of a duel anyhow, then challenged his opponent and showed every appearance of being anxious to "go at it." Toward the close of the war the Germans were again like Bob Acres, of whom Brinsley Sheridan said, "His courage oozed out of the pores of his skin." That is what is called "Dutch courage." It either takes an alcoholic stimulus or a psychological conviction that he is certain to lick the other fellow. We are the same; we need not compliment ourselves that we are any higher or any better. Given the strength and there comes with it the temptation to use it; given the power of the giant and there is apt to come the brutality of the giant.

Take the great question in America to-day, the race issue, with which my friend from Georgia and I are both acquainted; he and I both know that one of the chief difficulties in dealing with it is the temptation of the white man to abuse his strength. The temptation comes to me and to him; he can not resist it and I can not, but there are a lot of people who can not. So it is upon the international arena.

But I want to settle one question here. One of the Senators-I have forgotten whom-wanted the United States "to have no I do not remember which Senator said that. What is meant by having "no superior"? Has the United States any superior now? Has she had any superior for 40 years? Do you measure superiority in manhood and womanhood, culture, intelligence, and industry? If so, I think you will answer the question in the negative. If you measure it in naval forces and army forces, then the United States has been about a fifth rate power nearly all the time, and even when the World War broke out it was being debated in the Houses of Congress as to whether or not she was second or third rate at sea. Everybody knew she was about eighth rate on land. I do not want to see anybody "superior to the United States," and no nation ever will be superior if we live up to our traditions and our ideals; but they will be superior mighty quick if we surrender to mere materialism. Somebody will be our superior then. If we get out and want to be the "cock of the walk," and the bully of the world, even with all of our strength and all of our will, some sort of an alliance will be formed to bring us to our knees, because there will be on the other side the God of history, who somehow or other fashions and molds the results of historical processes for the advancement, progress, freedom, and elevation of the world. Whenever you stand athwart His pathway you get hurt. So it has happened with every fool bully, nationally speaking, that ever tried that game.

It looked for a little time as if Rome were invincible, but there were too many barbarians abroad and there were too many slaves in Italy, enemies at home—not like southern slaves who were friends at home. Rome at once advertised her helplessness when she employed barbarians in her armies, and she at the same time tempted herself to brutality by long and unhampered career as world power; and, in the third place, she advertised her weakness, as men and women, not as soldiers, by hiring or buying other men to do her work. So Rome went by the board.

Charlemagne thought for a little time that he had world dominion in his grasp; but Saxons and Jutes and Angles and Burgundians and various other peoples were a little too many

Charles V thought for a little while that he owned one America and had claim to the other and dominated all Europe and had a very considerable influence in Africa, the north coast of which he had conquered. It was not 75 years afterwards before Spain had "lost her great estate," and it was not 200 years afterwards before Spain had sunk to be a third rate power. Because she had sent all of her best courage, her best blood, her highest spirit of adventure, her most chivalrous souls to the Philippines and Mexico and Peru and everywhere else in the world and left men of inferior mold at home to breed future Spaniards. That is why.

Then Louis XIV of France came along, and he, of course, as he thought, "had things sewed up"; but the little Netherlands, with the aid of British money and British troops, taught him his lesson.

Then the great Napoleon came—the greatest of military leaders except Hannibal, and with no other rival except Julius Cæsar-a child of the revolution, finding ready to his hands the army of the revolution, marching to the music of liberty, fraternity, and equality. He could not do it. There still stood the British nation and the British fleet, then as now limiting world ambition but also leading the world's civilization, bottling him up whenever he once had to fall back upon France.

Then came Germany, built upon the precepts of Frederick the so-called Great—nothing in the world but materialism. there was a God, He was nothing but a natural force," and if there was any humanity, it was nothing but a two-legged animal that needed feeding and needed clothing, but was mainly good for the purpose of putting in the dragoons and training and disciplining and being taught to obey; and out of that grew up this little, contemptible fellow, Kaiser Wilhelm der Zweite, who had nothing military about him at all, really, except the way in which he twisted up his mustache, and he thought that he had the world at his feet. We all know he made "a mistake," and you can not put it at yours, either. And that is not all. If you are at all the right sort of a man, you do not want to do it.

I have forgotten who it was that said it—I think it was Zangwill-but somewhere somebody said to the individual man:

Weak in race and time and station, Go find thy strength in limitation.

In limitation! The real man always finds his strength in limitation, self-limitation. The real nation always does itthe real, great nation. No nation not great can submit to self-limitation. The nation that is little and provincial and foolish is always talking about its own "sovereignty," meaning by it "unlimited arbitrariness of conduct," and the freedom and power to indulge in it.

If you want to find the strength of civilization, the strength of progress, and the strength that will be developed from the liberty of the common mass, "go find it in limitation" of your own individual ambition and of your nation's ambition, and in voluntary limitation of your strength; because you may wager that if your strength is superior to that of somebody else, and you know it and he knows it, the relations between you generally will not be fair. You will be tempted to take advantage of it, and he will be afraid to assert himself fully, unless he is

What does the Senator from Washington want with "a Navy equal to that of any other nation in the world"? Does not the Senator know that if we had a Navy equal to 75 per cent in strength of that of Great Britain we would be stronger on the Atlantic than she could possibly be there unless she released her "far-flung battle line" and let everything go to the bowwows and the dogs and committed suicide, felo-de-se, for the British Empire?

I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenroot] to this extent: The very maximum, at any rate, to which I would go would be to have the second strongest navy. I admit the right of Great Britain to have a navy strong enough to keep the sea channels and thoroughfares open in order that her people may not be starved to death in war. But for that fact-the power to keep the open sea free to commerce-she might be starved to death in a war between two other powers, in which she was not even a party, much more in a war in which she herself was engaged and was inferior on the high seas. Now, let us be fair. The right sort of a man is generally not only fair but, if he has any doubt about it, he is generous. He solves the doubt against himself. Where is your pretense that we have a necessity, the same necessity for keeping the lanes over the sea open that Great Britain has? Not one of you can say we have. Moreover, has the British fleet been a tyrant to you or to me or to the world? As far as that is concerned, although it looks a little bit in militation to the position which I am occupying upon this naval matter, there never was a fleet yet that was dangerous to the liberties of the country which it served, or which ever was able to conquer and hold a foreign territory.

It can go there and bombard, and it can sometimes land a few troops; but not only, as I said the other day, there never will "be seen a man in foreign uniform watering his horse in the Mississippi River," but there never will be seen one as far west as Pittsburgh unless we first embrace anarchy at home. If Germany had had a navy equal to that of Great Britain and could have landed upon our shores every man that she landed in France, it would have been an awful misfortune to us, a calamity greater than any that ever occurred to our people, but they never would have gotten on a prepared front with protected flanks as far west as Pittsburgh. They would have been "swallowed up" like a man and his horse when they attempt to cross a stream with quicksand in its bottom.

We ought, of course, to have a navy or a naval defense big enough and strong enough to keep anybody from landing troops on our coasts. I am merely saying what I said a moment ago as an argument in extremis; but I can not see for the life of me why we should condemn the farmer, the blacksmith, the hod carrier, the preacher, the teacher—especially the poor teachers, who are worse bedeviled by taxes and a lack of income and the high cost of living than anybody else-and the briefless lawyers and patientless doctors and retail and wholesale merchants and manufacturers and the men in the mines to an endless pinch of increased and increasing taxation, necessitated by a condition where 90 per cent of your revenues are being consumed in past wars or present wars, and a very great part of the 90 per cent in the preparation for future warsfuture wars which the Senator from Washington says he neither fears nor expects.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harrison	Lodge	Simmons
Borah	Heflin	McKellar	Smith
Brandegee	Johnson	McNary	Smoot
Bursum	Jones, Wash,	Nelson	Swanson
Cameron	Kellogg	Newberry	Trammell
Capper	Kendrick	Nicholson	Underwood
Curtis	Kenyon	Norris	Walsh, Mont.
Dial	Keyes	Oddie	Warren
Dillingham Fletcher Hale	King La Follette Leproof	Phipps Poindexter Sheppard	Watson, Ga. Williams

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the roll of absent Senators.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. Moses, Mr. Pomerene, Mr. Spencer, Mr. Sutherland, and Mr. Wolcott answered to their names when called.

Mr. Stanfield, Mr. Shortridge, Mr. Watson of Indiana, Mr. GOODING, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. McCumber, Mr. Norbeck, Mr. Town-SEND, Mr. STERLING, Mr. LADD, and Mr. FERNALD entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenroot], which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 51, line 17, strike out "$53,000,000" and insert "$38,000,000," so as to read:

Increase of the Navy, construction and machinery: On account of hulls and outfits of vessels and machinery of vessels heretofore authorized, to be available until expended, $38,000,000.

Mr. LENROOT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Gerry]. I am advised that, if present, he would vote as I intend to vote on this question. I vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCor-MICK]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] and vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Frelinghuysen]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "nay.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce the absence on official business of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Gerry], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

Mr. MOSES (after having voted in the negative). I voted, not noting the absence of my general pair, the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Broussard]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. Weller] and let my vote stand.

Mr. FERNALD. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Jones]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. Wadsworth] and vote " nay.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). observe that the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass] has not voted. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to my colleague [Mr. Page] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. McKELLAR. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following pairs: The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON];

The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY];

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. France] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKinley] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY];
The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; The Senator from Indiana [Mr. New] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]; The Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]; and The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. Mr. ASHURST. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Caraway] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY].

The result was announced-yeas 20, nays 35, as follows:

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

Shields

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Assistant Secretary. On page 51, line 26, after the word "constructed," insert "nor on battle cruisers Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, or 6 or upon battleships Nos. 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, or 54," so that if amended it will read:

Total increase of the Navy heretofore authorized, $90,000,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation can be expended except on vessels now being constructed, nor on battle cruisers Nos. 1, 2, 4, 5, or 6 or upon battleships Nos. 49, 59, 51, 52, 53, or 54.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Utah [Mr. King].

Mr. KING addressed the Senate. After having spoken for more than two hours,

Mr. HARRISON, Mr. President-

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi. Mr. HARRISON. The distinguished Senator from Utah has been on his feet now for several hours, making a very eloquent and a very persuasive speech, and I am sure he is a little tired. If he will yield to me to offer a resolution, I shall be glad, though I do not wish to take him off his feet.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] has been so considerate and has acted so honorably and fairly in the handling of the bill, that I shall be guided by his desire. I would be glad, however, if he would consent to a recess at this time. I shall conclude in the morning in half an hour or perhaps in 20 minutes.

Mr. CURTIS. May I suggest that it is the desire to have a short executive session?

May I say that I must follow the wishes of my friend from Washington. I appeal to him, however, to consent to an executive session, and I shall conclude in the morning at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Washington permit me a moment? It is very important to have a short executive me a moment? It is very important to have a short executive session for the purpose of considering the confirmation of the appointment of a Federal judge in western Tennessee. The tion was made at the last session and motion was made to confirm it, but objection was made and it went over. I shall be very glad if the Senator will consent.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say to the Senator that the objection has been withdrawn and there is no opposition at this time to the confirmation of the nomination. The judge ought to be confirmed. As the Senator from Minnesota has said, it has been 10 months since we have had a judge in the western district of Tennessee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In view of the desire of the Senator from Minnesota to bring that matter up, and with the very alluring suggestion of the Senator from Utah that he will finish his speech in 20 minutes or half an hour to-morrow, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator withhold that motion a moment until I can offer a resolution? It will only take two or three minutes. It will not come up for consideration at this time. I am not going to press it. I desire to say just a few words and will not occupy over two or three minutes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I withhold the motion for that purpose.

DISMISSALS FROM THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. HARRISON. Out of order a desire to offer the following resolution.

Let it be read. Mr. CURTIS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolu-

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 82), as follows:

Whereas there are large numbers of Federal employees being dismissed from the Federal service: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Civil Service of the Senate investigate immediately the dismissal of these employees and report to the Senate on or before July 1, 1921, its findings and recommendations the Senate on or before July 1, 1921, its findings and recommendations on the following questions:

First. Whether in making dismissals the various departments of the Government have compiled with the letter and spirit of the civil service act of January 16, 1883, and amendments thereto, respecting apportionments among the States, Territories, and the District of Columbia.

Second. The number of appointments and dismissals since March 4, 1921, from each State, Territory, and the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Civil Service. Before that action is taken I wish to say to the Senate that I do not know what has been the policy of the various bureaus in dismissing these employees, whether they have taken into consideration the apportionment and the quotas of the different States. talked to the head of one bureau where recently they have dismissed some 300 to 500 employees, and he said that in dismissing them they have taken into consideration, of course, the efficiency of the various employees and whether or not they had dependent relatives or other in the Government service who were kin In answer to the question if they had considered to them. whether a State had more than its quota and other States did not have their quota, he said they had not considered that feature at all.

Since in the civil-service act in making appointments the apportionment among the States is to be considered it would seem to me that in the dismissal of those employees apportionment among the States still should be considered.

Take Ohio as an illustration. I do not say this because some think that everyone from Ohio has been appointed to office here in Washington since the 4th of March, because I am sure that is not true. I do not say it because many have been appointed from Marion, because I am sure that those who have been appointed in most cases were very worthy. But if Ohio has more than its quota and Tennessee has not its quota in the civil service, it is not just right to dismiss employees from Tennessee and not so many from Ohio where those from Tennessee are as efficient as those from Ohio.

It would seem to me, therefore, that the question of apportionment should be considered in the matter of dismissal of employees the same as in the matter of employment. It is solely with a view of ascertaining what the heads of the various bureaus have done touching that matter and what their policy will be in the future that I have offered the resolution. I hope that the Committee on Civil Service, of which I am not a member, will investigate the matter and just as soon as possible report to Congress. I hope that the heads of the bureaus will not dismiss the efficient and worthy employees from States that now have not their quota in the Government service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I report back from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments the bill (H. R. 6300) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 87) thereon. I give notice that I shall call up the bill at an early date for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in reference to the amendment which was adopted as in Committee of the Whole the other day regarding the readmission to the Naval Academy of 110 midshipmen, the Senator from Washington stated that he would ask for a vote on that amendment in the Senate. I hope he will not do so; but, in order to be certain of securing a vote on the amendment, I wish to give notice of my intention to move to suspend the rules so as to have a vote on it in any event. hope, however, the Senator will not require that the rule be suspended. I merely give the notice.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 1, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate May 31, 1921.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGES.

J. W. Ross, for Western district of Tennessee. Charles Kerr, for Canal Zone.

COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

John J. Tigert, of Kentucky.

MINTS AND ASSAY OFFICES.

Robert J. Grant, superintendent of mint, Denver, Colo. Isaac H. Smith, superintendent of assay office, New York. Harry H. Stewart, assayer in charge of assay office, Deadwood, S. Dak.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 31, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, offered the following prayer:

Holy, holy, holy, Lord God of Hosts, Heaven and earth are full of Thy glory. Glory be to Thy name, O Lord most high. Thou art our everlasting Father, and Thy messages of love are continually breaking from the hills of life; O bind us in an eternal union of common love. Lay Thy hand upon us and we shall live, and all of the good purposes of our hearts shall be cherished and nourished, and the evil shall flee away. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 27, 1921, was read and approved.

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS AT ARLINGTON.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the address delivered by the President yesterday at Arlington.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the address delivered by the President yesterday at Arlington. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I apprehend that number of addresses were delivered yesterday by Members of his House. I have no objection to the request. The SPEAKER. Is there objection? this House.

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I presume a number of addresses were delivered by Members of the House yesterday, Memorial Day, in different parts of the country, and those addresses usually have some historic value. My experience has been that nearly always there have been requests; some requests, at least, to print those.

Mr. MONDELL. I think ordinarily no objection is made when a request is submitted by a gentleman, or on his behalf, to insert an address that he has made. I imagine the matter can be better cared for as gentlemen make their requests, or as requests may be made for them.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It occurred to me that perhaps it might be better to ask for general leave.

Mr. MONDELL. I think it is better to take care of the cases as they arise, rather than give general leave.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas appeared before the House and the oath of office was administered to him by the Speaker.

PACKER LEGISLATION

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6320. The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Towner] will resume the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6320, with Mr. Towner in the

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6320, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) When used in this act—
(1) The term "person" includes individuals, partnerships, corporations, and associations;
(2) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture;
(3) The term "meat food products" means all products and byproducts of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry—if edible;
(4) The term "live stock "means cattle, sheep, swine, horses, mules, or goats—whether live or dead;
(5) The term "live-stock products" means all products and byproducts (other than meats and meat food products) of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry derived in whole or in part from live stock; and
(6) The term "commerce" means commerce between any State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, and any place outside thereof; or between points within the same State, Territory, or possession, or the District of Columbia, but through any place outside thereof; or within any Territory or possession or the District of Columbia.
